The Berkeley Bible Seminary reported nearly $4,000 new funds and three new instructors added to her teaching force—A. M. Elston to the department of public speaking, W. P. Bentley as lecturer on missions, and R. P. Shepherd, pastor of the Berkeley church, to the department of religious pedagogics. President McAneney, with his high ideals for the seminary and his popularity with the coast brethren, is doing a great work for the seminary on the outside which is ably seconded by Dean Van Kirk and his colaborers on the inside. All this means ultimately a well endowed and thoroughly equipped Bible college equal to any in our brotherhood.

Plans were formulated for putting the "Pacific Christian" on a more substantial basis and increasing its circulation.

A committee on a Pacific coast congress was appointed. D. A. Russell was re-elected state secretary.

Dr. H. O. Breden, of Des Moines, visited the convention and contributed an excellent sermon to its program.

Miss Bertha Mason, national organizer for the C. W. B. M., was present and addressed the convention and conducted very helpful conferences with the sisters.

The chief attraction of the convention was Prof. H. L. Willett, who preached the first Sunday morning sermon, gave a series of lectures on "The Beginning of Christianity," and conducted three informal discussions on "Modern Methods of Bible Study," "Evangelism" and "Christian Union." Large and appreciative audiences greeted him on all these occasions. Everybody was charmed, pleased and edified by his Christian culture, loyalty to Christ and aptness as a religious teacher. Many expressed themselves as hoping that he would return next year.

A sweet Christian spirit prevailed throughout the convention which was not disturbed by an informal discussion of church federation.

This state meeting may be fittingly characterized by the words enthusiasm, enlargement and unity.

Conference at Hiram.

There has just terminated at Hiram College a conference of ministers having for its object the deepening and quickening of spiritual life. Away from the rush and turmoil of the world the brethren came with one mind and heart to the verdant quietude of the college hill with its beautiful campus, to commune with one another and with God, to drink deeper draughts at the springs of spiritual power, to seek to enter into the great things which God has prepared for those who love him.

Although the attendance was small the services were fraught with much blessing. Much time was spent in meditation and prayer. Strong, searching personal messages came to all hearts from the Word, and there were helpful discussions of the great problems of the religious life.

Surely a great spiritual hunger is manifesting itself among our people—a hunger in which there is divine purpose, and for which there is divine satisfaction. Our ministers feel the call to a larger consecration and to deeper experiences of divine things, that they

The New State of Oklahoma

Bigger than Missouri: as big as Ohio and Indiana combined, with a soil teeming with all the crops that any State raises, OKLAHOMA—the new State—is destined to occupy first rank in a few short years. Here at the present time over a million people are duplicating the life which is going on in Illinois and Indiana. Their houses; their towns and their schools are newer but in nothing else do their surroundings differ from those in other States. Their cities and towns are growing and expanding with the impetus of a fertile soil, and a pushing, wide-awake citizenship. Her settlers, mainly from the older States, see the virtue of encouraging enterprises of every kind and the needfulness of getting more and better facilities; of getting more hands to develop the country.

In brief, conditions to-day are simply these: OKLAHOMA is in need of nothing save people. More men are needed in the cities and towns; more farmers for the vast areas of unimproved land not now yielding crops of which it is capable. There are openings of all sorts, for farmers and artisans, for mills and manufacturing plants, for small stores of all kinds.

Your Opportunity Now

The opportune time is now while the land is cheap. The country is fast settling up. If you purchase land now you will soon see grow up around you a community of prosperous energetic men who like yourself have seen the brighter possibilities of OKLAHOMA and have taken advantage of them.

If you are in any way interested in OKLAHOMA, I'd like to send you a copy of my free paper "The Coming Country."

On the First and Third Tuesdays of each month you can make a trip to OKLAHOMA exceptionally cheap. Round trip tickets good thirty—30—days will be sold by all lines in connection with the M. K. & T. Ry. at very low rates. From Chicago to Oklahoma City the rate is $24.55; from St. Paul, $26.25; from St. Louis, $18.30; from Kansas City, $12.25. The tickets permit of stop-overs in both directions via M. K. & T. Ry. If your nearest railroad agent cannot give you the rates, write me for particulars.

may more effectually lead their congregations in "the blessed life and the blessed service."

The conference sermons were preached by Bros. J. H. Goldner, of Cleveland and J. E. Lynn, of Warren. Bro. E. M. Todd, of North Tonawanda, led us to the mount of vision in his discourses on the Theology of the Apostle John. Helpful devotional services were conducted by Bros. J. E. Pounds, J. E. Lynn, President Rowlison and others. Sub-conferences were led as follows: On Evangelism, by Bros. W. J. Wright and C. A Freer; on Christian Education, by President Rowlison; On Missions, by Professor Paul and Dr. Osgood, just returned from China. Bro. I. J. Cahill, of Dayton, spoke on "The Perfect Life," and Bro. J. L. Hill, of Cincinnati, preached the closing sermon.

The results of the conference were so satisfactory that a committee was appointed to arrange for its perpetuation as an "annual retreat." Why should we not have our own Northfield or Keswick? "The Spiritualization of our Plea" must begin with the spiritualization of our own lives. Arrangements are already going forward toward the conference at Hiram next year. It is part of the plan of the committee to secure some man of great spiritual power to be present several days. The committee will meet during the Buffalo convention.

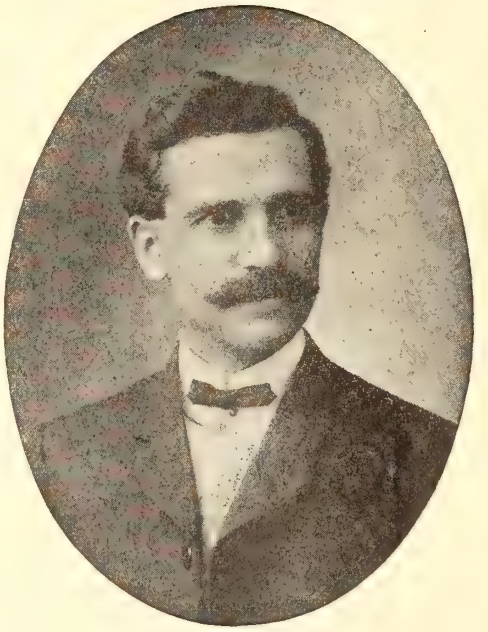
Mexico. Mo.

August 19 was delightfully spent with Pastors Kokendoffer and Harding. The chief purpose of the visit was to preach to the Mexico Chautauqua. This was a great pleasure, both on account of the large and appreciative audience, the courtesies of the able manager and his wife, Charles E. Stokes, of Kansas City, and the fellowship of our editorial friend, W. B. Palmore, of the "St. Louis Christian Advocate." The latter caused much merriment in the course of a very kind introduction of the preacher, by delivering a eulogy on THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, in which he declared it to be the ablest religious paper published, and that it was the duty of all who wished to keep in touch with the progress of the kingdom, and who truly love the Lord to read its every issue. Suddenly remembering the ablest of the "Advocate family," amid the laughter of hundreds, he tried to limit his eulogium to the bounds of the Churches of Christ.

James Small, Evangelist.

It was a sweet privilege to address our Bible school which, under the leadership of Dr. W. F. Traughber, was one of the most helpful friends the writer had while secretary of our national benevolences.

The new church home at Mexico is a marvel of beauty, convenience and durability achieved at the cost of $35,000. Rarely does the large auditorium seat Brother Kokendoffer's audiences, but the overflow is satisfactorily cared for in the lecture room annex. Many of our faithful preachers have greatly endeared themselves to their congregations, but none more so than this true man of God.



A. W. Kokendoffer, Pastor.

Next Lord's day Evangelists James Small and LeRoy St. John begin meetings with this historic church. A stronger combination than Pastors Kokendoffer and Harding and Evangelists Small and St. John would be difficult to find. They will be temporarily aided, too, by W. B. Taylor, of Moberly, Mo., a former and greatly beloved pastor, who is spending his vacation in Mexico. Here "Raccoon" John Smith spent his last days, here many of our strongest men have lived and labored; a membership of finer spiritual timbre and one more thoroughly imbued with the genius of this Restoration can nowhere be found. We predict a great meeting. Five hundred CHRISTIAN-EVANGELISTS per week will assist in the enterprise.

For a preacher's paradise give us a church like Kokendoffer's—the strongest one in a county seat of between 5,000 and 20,000, free of faction, intelligent, missionary, enterprising, neither exceeding rich or poor, and thoroughly in love with the Lord and his churches. S.

"Charles Carlton Memorial."

T. F. Weaver, pastor of Central Christian church, Whitewright, Texas, has been secured to represent Texas Christian University, Waco, Tex., and Carlton College, Bonham, Tex.

Brother Weaver is well known in Texas and Illinois as a Christian preacher of ability and an experienced college professor, and an excellent business man.

Besides soliciting students for the above institutions, Brother Weaver will solicit donations for "Charles Carlton Memorial" $30,000 building, to be erected in 1907.

By the blessing of God, and the liberality of the alumni, friends and Christian brotherhood of Texas and adjoining states, success is assured.

Are you interested in the success of this enterprise? Do not wait to see our representative, but write at once to T. F. Weaver, Whitewright, Texas, Pres. C. T. Carlton, Bonham, Texas.

Bethany Park Assembly.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

It was my pleasure to spend a few days with the Indiana brethren, in their state assembly at Bethany Park, recently. I had not visited this place for many years, and the changes were very marked. The trees have grown into a splendid forest; cottages in large numbers have been erected, and the lake has been enlarged and its shores beautified by the generous growths of trees and grasses. The same Hoosier hospitality made my stay a constant delight, while the happy face of Bro. L. L. Carpenter shone more brightly than ever. And well it might; for Bethany is out of debt, for the first time in its history; some needed improvements are now in sight, and the outlook for this center of our work in Indiana is brighter than ever. In honor of the years of service given to Bethany by Brother Carpenter, the hotel building, formerly known as the sanitarium, was christened Carpenter Hotel, and a free room voted to Brother Carpenter for life. This was a merited honor, and much more fitting than tardy resolutions of respect adopted after his life work had ended. Would that we would always distribute some of our flowers to the living. With the improvements that are being projected for Bethany Park realized, it should become one of the most attractive resorts for Disciples for the summer season, combining rest and worship, pleasure and instruction.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Chandler (Okla.) Christian Church.

Like all the congregations organized in new countries the faithful here had a long and hard struggle. Emigrants were coming and going, and in that unsettled condition of affairs, the less faithful would have given up in despair. The church of Chandler today is a monument to remind the world that "where there is a will there is a way."

The writer was called to this pastorate May 6, last, and has found it a congenial home. There are 355 enrolled at present. I never saw brethren and sisters more devoted to the church than those with whom I now labor.

This church has had a remarkable growth of late. Two years ago this August E. L. Frazier began a meeting which was continued seven weeks and resulted in the addition of seventy-two new members. Good seed had been sowed for several years preceding, and at that time a revival began which has never since languished; the church has actually been in a state of revival ever since. Bro. J. E. Dinger was called to the pastorate here to begin March 28, 1905, and served the congregation one year, during which time ninety-two were added. Though Brother Dinger had engaged to enter the evangelistic field at once, the church here persuaded him to remain one week longer for a short "revival." He then preached for them eleven nights and added forty-five more.

Since I came here we have added 16. July 29, we commenced a protracted effort which will continue as long as interest demands. We have a large tent pitched in a public place, and immense crowds are now hearing the primitive plea. Pray for our success. Oscar Ingold,

Chandler, Okla.

A New Church.

We closed our Reger (Mo.) meeting August 17, with an organization of twenty-one members. This is the first effort at organization in this place. It gives us a nucleus around which we hope to build a strong congregation. In this work we have received many Christian courtesies from our religious neighbors. They tendered us their (M. E.) house in which to hold our services, furnishing a good share of the congregations and helping us materially in song service and prayer. We came mighty close to federation with a strong case of co-operation and I talked union on the "Bible and the Bible alone," from the beginning to the close of the meeting. I had a splendid opportunity to get the true teachings of God before the people and I did not fail the opportunity. As a result of this meeting the people have a better understanding of our teachings and a kindlier feeling for us.

Desiring to continue the work that the board began here the brethren have arranged for preaching once a month. O. W. Jones, one of the strong preachers of this county, will have the spiritual oversight of this congregation. He is now the pastor at Milan, Mo.

As an appreciation of the board's work here, the brethren have arranged for a monthly contribution for the ensuing year to the missionary work in Sullivan and Putnam counties. Under the direction of the board we begin our next meeting at Sorrell, the fourth Lord's day in this month. S. J. Vance, Evangelist,

Carthage, Mo.

Ohio Letter.

The daily press brings the intelligence that the Franklin Circle church of Cleveland has extended a call to E. B. Bagby of Washington, D. C., and that he has accepted it. We wish to congratulate Franklin Circle church most heartily and extend a very cordial hand from the Ohio disciples to Brother Bagby. It is our prayer that his ministry may be long and prosperous.——The convocation at Hiram, August 5-12, was not so very largely attended at any one session, yet quite a company was there all together. Most of the preachers attended only a part of the sessions. The conferences were very helpful indeed. Earl M. Todd of Tonawanda, N. Y., gave two Bible studies that were of rare interest. The Ohio man also enjoyed a two-hour car ride conversation with Brother Todd that was equally as helpful. W. J. Wright added much to the program, making a great address on evangelism.——The Eastern Ohio ministerial association had a business session and elected officers and received candidates. R. Moffett and F. M. Green are the only charter members left.——The brethren at Paulding will let the contract on September 1 for a new $15,000 synagogue and also a new manse for the parson. J. P. Meyers is making a fine record with these people.——C. A. Freer will begin a meeting at North Royalton September 9. Chas. Ford is the regular pastor. Any church wanting a short meeting beginning December 2, can "get next" by writing the above-named evangelist.——Are you going to Buffalo? It is only a short time ahead. Let the nickel-saving start at once. Make up your mind early and the money will be found.——Bowling Green has the foundation for a $25,000 meetin' house about completed. It is built on the same lot as the old house. Bishop Darsie spent his vacation at Hiram with his father and mother. Where on earth could a better place be found for a vacation? A fortnight with father and mother beats all the summer resorts in creation.——C. A. Kleeberger has spent six weeks treeing students for Bethany. He reports several finds.——Don't forget that Geo. W. Muckley wants you to pass the hat for church extension September 2. Fill the hat full.—C. A. Freer, Painesville, O.

The Scandinavians and Our Plea.

I am glad the Scandinavians are to hear our plea for a united church. They are religious, devout, reverent. Those who regard the Lutheran faith as the one true religion see but little difference in the many hued denominational flags of their adopted country, while others, finding themselves in a community without a church of their own become inquirers and seekers for truth going from this church to that wondering which is "the right church," or the "nearest right." The perplexity of such inquirers only increases upon learning that most of the churches recognize each other as Christians and that the services and sermons in the different places of worship do not differ materially. Faith in Christ, Christian worship, Christian missions, Christian living, is not only endorsed, but urged on every hand. Why then all this division, these many churches, evangelists, schools, church papers and unseemly rivalries? That is what the uninitiated Scandinavian cannot understand and I honestly believe that we, the Disciples of Christ, are the only people who can give a satisfactory answer to this riddle, and we ought to do it.

I need not here restate the A, B, C's of the Gospel—the supremacy of Christ—and love the greatest thing in the world without which the union for which Christ prayed is an impossibility. Suffice it to say, we much teach the Scandinavian as we are seeking to teach all others, what are the first principles of the Oracles of God and be at peace among ourselves. We need the Scandinavians in our churches. Their faith in the first principles of success would act as a valuable tonic in very many places. The Northman believes in hard work, rigid economy and honest service. His creed is that whatever is right is bound to win and he is perfectly willing to earn his success. This reminds me that with the exception of the president of the United States, about all my interests are being looked after by Scandinavians, from Senator Knute Nelson and Congressman Volstad to our own Governor Johnson, state senator and representative, superintendent of public instruction, nearly all county, town and school officers are Scandinavians, all of which leads me to believe that not only are the Scandinavians capable of understanding and appreciating our plea, but the same force of character which has made them the recognized leaders in opening up the great Northwest, would make them powerful allies in bringing our matchless plea before their countrymen. A few suggestions as to how this is to be done is reserved for another article.—P. S. Olson.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free. F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Niagara Falls.

Outside of the big convention itself Niagara Falls will be a chief point of interest to those who come to Buffalo in October.

A fifty minutes' ride by the New York Central, or an hour and a quarter by the yellow electric car brings one from the convention city, north, to Niagara, the "thunder of water." The city of Niagara Falls itself is of interest. Known to many at a distance as only a place for tourists on a closer observation it is seen to be a great railroad center and the electric power city of the world. Its population now 27,000 has doubled in the last ten years, and will probably do as much in the next ten. It is a city of great factories most of which have located here by reason of the cheap electric power by which they are run.

Across on the Canadian side is Niagara Falls, Ont., a city of about 8000 people. Here, just recently completed at a cost of millions, are to be found three immense power plants. These will distribute electric power to Toronto and other points of Ontario.

But to most visitors the river itself and the scenes connected therewith will be of the most interest. Three-quarters of a mile above the falls the river by its steep descent and rocky bottom is broken into white-capped rapids. It is divided by Goat Island into the American and Canadian Falls. The American side has a width of about 220 yards and the water falls 175 feet. The Horseshoe or Canadian side has a width of 600 yards and a fall of about 160 feet. The water dashing down to the great rocks below is churned into white foam from which arises continually a spray white like steam.

One of the beautiful parks around the falls is Prospect park, on the American side, belonging to the New York State government. This has a $20,000 shelter house, seats for tourists and other conveniences free. On the Canadian side is Victoria park made beautiful with flowers and inviting to visitors. Between the two cataracts and belonging to New York is Goat Island, a park of 75 acres, on which stand the original forest trees.

If desired one may walk around Goat Island, seeing all points of interest in an hour. Those who prefer to ride may take a government carriage in Prospect park and go around the island for 15 cents, stopping at any point of interest and waiting for another carriage without extra charge. From Goat Island for $1 one may obtain a rubber coat and an experienced guide, and by passing over great rocks through the spray go back a short way behind the falling sheet of water into the Cave of the Winds.

From Prospect park an inclined plane railway leads to the foot of the American falls. By all means go down and look up. The ride will cost ten cents the round trip. If one likes walking he may take the 252 steps on the stairway free, but it will take more than ten cents worth of St. Jacob's oil the next day to relieve stiffness. While down this incline take the little boat, "The Maid of the Mist," which for 50 cents will furnish a rubber coat and hood, take you a half hour's ride through the mist and rainbows past the face of the American falls and up to where the water boils before the Horseshoe falls. No better view can be obtained of the falls than from the deck of this little steamer, which has carried its thousands and never yet had an accident.

It is 14 miles from the falls to where the river empties into lake Ontario. Seven miles of this distance is so full of interest that it has no dull points. The descent in the first seven miles is 104 feet, and most of the way are rapids which must be seen to have their grandeur appreciated.

Many things of interest in and about the falls must be passed by in this short article. Suffice it to say, we have here enough to bring you across the continent even if there was to be no great convention. And here will be found a sufficient variety to charm or suit the inclination of any.

For the secret order man there is Goat Island. For the unmarried brothers, the Three Sister Islands and The Maid of the Mist. With these you may flirt to your heart's content. For those who had no chance to be heard on the convention platform the Cave of the Winds is a safe place for the explosives. The inclined plane railway will accommodate the backsliding, while the "Great Gorge route" will be attractive to those who like to eat. The shady minded may stop at the "Devil's Hole." Come, brethren, to the convention, and see Niagara ere you pass over Jordan. J. A. WHARTON.

Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Australian Notes.

The first Sunday in July we took the offering for Foreign Missions, at the tabernacle, and the result was nearly four times as much as was received last year. My Bible class, which averages one hundred and thirty, gave $25. I have been in Sydney ten weeks, and more than seventy have come into the church by primary obedience. The building seats eight hundred, but extra chairs have to be brought in every Sunday night. The Tabernacle church is the largest church we have in Australia, and is probably the most enthusiastic. I go to Brisbane, Queensland, the 5th of September, will remain there, in a tent meeting, until October 12, at which time I sail for Japan, China, etc.—Jno. T. Brown.

TEXAS LAND BARGAIN

I have just purchased 6,400 acres of fine land in the Southwest Texas and only need about half of it for my own use. I had to buy the whole tract to get any of it and can hardly afford to cultivate all of it myself. I will sacrifice the surplus, selling in any size tracts at your own terms. It is all fine land, unexcelled for truck, cotton growing, general farming, or stock raising. Cabbage yields from $125 to $225 per acre; cauliflower from $75 to $200; beans and peas from $100 to $125; tomatoes from $125 to $400; potatoes from $60 to $150; onions from $150 to $800; watermelons and canteloupes from $60 to $300; cotton $35 to $50; two crops of corn per year on same land. You can harvest something every month in the year; climate delightful year around; plenty of water and bountiful grass for stock; lots of willing help; good average rainfall. Ideal locality for a home; telephone and railroad on land; county seat but 3½ miles distance and excellent roads. Purchasers may look tract over and take their pick—it is all good so I do not care which part of it I keep. It will pay to investigate this as I want to sell quick to get the cash to cultivate part left to me. Write for full information. GEO. L. COLBURN, Box 225, Pekin, Ill.

The author of "Quiet Talks on Prayer" (now in its 55th thousand), and "Quiet Talks on Power" (now in its 80th thousand).

Cloth, 12mo. 288 pages. Net 75c.

"QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS" is an attempt to group up in simplest Anglo-Saxon English the statements of the entire Bible regarding Jesus. The purpose is wholly practical, that one may get at a glance, for his own thought and heart, the swing of the Bible from end to end on its central theme.

Mr. Gordon's life work has been leading up to the theme of this new book.

TOPICAL ARRANGEMENT

FIRST—The purpose of Jesus' coming; the plan of his coming; the tragic break that occurred in the plan; the surprises that worked out of that break.

SECOND—The Person of Jesus from three points of view: the human; the divine; the winsomeness of his personality.

THIRD—The seven great outstanding experiences which reveal Jesus: the Jordan Baptism; the Wilderness Temptation; the Transfiguration as an emergency unusual; the Gethsemane struggle; the Victory of Calvary.

FOURTH—Study Notes. One of the most important features of the book, making it possible for the earnest reader to follow for himself Mr. Gordon's essential methods.

HERRON.

Mrs. Rose Marmaduke Herron, who had been living for the past two years in Urbana, Ill., died very unexpectedly in Mexico, Mo., on July 31, 1906. Mrs. Herron was the daughter of the late Morgan B. White of Montgomery county, Mo., and was born February 14, 1836. In 1865 she was married to John F. Herron of Pittsburg, Pa., who died in 1870. She leaves in her immediate family a daughter, Miss Belva M. Herron, a sister, Mrs. F. W. Gatewood and three brothers. Mrs. Herron was an active member of the Christian church, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and of various literary and social clubs in the places where she had resided, but of more significance than her work in these organizations, were her individual efforts for the betterment of the world about her. Early deprived of the comfort and care of family life, she devoted herself to helping the sick, and the afflicted. Mrs. Herron possessed unusual physical and mental vigor, unfailing cheerfulness, quick wit, and a keen sense of humor. These qualites, together with a deep religious faith, made her a most unusual character, one whose memory is a blessing.

BARTIMAEUS AND ZACCHAEUS.—Luke 18:35-19:10.

Memory Verses, 42, 43.

Golden Text.—The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.—Luke 19:10.

The golden text of this lesson is one of the many statements of Jesus's attitude toward sinners. No reader of the gospels can fail to notice how large a part of them is occupied with discourses, parables and incidents whose chief point and purpose was to teach the principle that sinful men are worth caring for, and that outward respectability and conformity to religious conventionalities are no proper criterion for judging the real worth of men. We have already had half a dozen or more lessons embodying this principle. It might almost be said that this was the most conspicuous and important element of the teaching of Jesus.

The episode of blind Bartimaeus (and the other blind man, according to Matthew) is a typical miracle. It was a beneficent work of healing, wrought under the impulse of pity upon a needy and friendless man who exhibited both faith and persistence in his petition, and resulting in a confirmation of faith both in the beneficiary of the miracle and in the witnesses.

"Thy faith hath made thee whole," is the keynote of this incident. There are those who say it makes no difference what a man believes. It made a great deal of difference to Bartimaeus. He believed that Jesus could give him his sight, and he acted accordingly. His belief (if he had any) as to how Jesus would heal him, was a matter of small consequence. Probably he had no theory about it. But his faith in the person of Jesus was fundamental.

This incident occurred when Jesus was nearing Jericho as he was on his last journey to Jerusalem. The stories of Bartimaeus and Zacchaeus both indicate that Jesus was at this time a widely known personage who had a great crowd of more or less sympathetic followers and whose actions were being carefully watched by all classes. His popularity and renown made his condescension in the case of Zacchaeus the more notable—surprising to the publican himself and inexplicable to the Pharisees.

What sort of man was Zacchaeus? Probably the best hated man in Jericho. To be a publican was to be a tool of Rome in collecting extortionate taxes from his own people. Under the Roman system of "farming the taxes"—that is, selling the privilege of collecting taxes—extortion was inevitable. To be a rich publican was to be a successful extortioner. Publicans were always the objects of hatred and contempt, and they generally deserved it.

Why did Jesus go to the house of Zacchaeus? Because Zacchaeus needed him. Jesus went not to those who could help him but to those whom he could help. And because Zacchaeus wanted him. He did not invite him, had never dreamed that the great and popular rabbi whom all men thronged to see would condescend to visit his house, but he received him joyfully. Jesus knocks at doors, but does not break them down. To this day, he comes only where he is wanted. And again, Jesus went to the house of Zacchaeus because he saw the worth of the man beneath all his sins and meanness. The others saw only the sinner and the publican; Jesus saw the man. Even the most sinful man is more than a sinner. He is primarily and essentially a man. His sinnerhood debases and defiles, but does not destroy or supersede his manhood.

The result of the visit was that by the power of friendship Zacchaeus conceived a new respect for himself and a new desire for righteousness. And in the light of silent and uncriticising purity he saw his own sinfulness as no amount of Pharisaic denunciation had ever shown it to him.

THE LIFE-GIVING STREAM.—Ezek. 47:1-12.

"While in the slippery paths of youth
I run secure and free,
Oh, let thy blessed Word of Truth
My Guide and Counsel be!

"Thus o'er my life let mercy move,
And guide my feet the way
That leads me to thy throne above—
To everlasting day!"

Well may this river represent the ideal development of Christian character, and be another presentation of first the seed of the kingdom in the heart, then the blade, followed by the corn, and then the full corn in the ear.

These streams originated in the temple but proceeded out over the land refreshing, beautifying, and blessing far and away. It should be so with us. In the church and in our homes we gain knowledge and power and grace but they are not to be confined there. Out into society and a thirsty, needy world we are to go expanding in sympathies, deepening in love and power, and more quickly hastening to cheer and restore and prosper.

The life-giving stream is made wide and deep and perennial by the confluence of many tributaries. Here blend in one great swelling tide food and raiment, home and its sanctities, friends and social amenities, forgiveness and long suffering, the indwelling of the Holy Spirit and the companionship of Jesus, resurrection and coronation. O that all the hot and feverish of earth would drink of its cooling waters and regale themselves in the verdure and beauty of its shores.

In the contents of the books are many unstudied evidences that the Bible was written by its reputed authors and in the land of its alleged nativity. There waters are particularly appreciated. The land is stony and hilly. The streams run quickly from the mountains to the sunken seas and the fears of drouths are unending nightmares. In every picture of bliss unfailing streams abound naturally as in the poor man's dream he is owner of vast estates. The blessings of the temple could not otherwise be so effectively portrayed to Ezekiel's first hearers and readers as flowing forth in streams of waters that not only were not stanched by summer but deepened and widened with its onward flight.

This river ever increasing in volume may be likened to the resources of the Church of Christ through the ages. In the first century its visible strength consisted of a few fishermen, the peasant apostles, the stream was ankle deep. In the fourth century Constantine invested it with the political power and military prestige of the empire and it was knee deep. By the sixteenth century Europe had been evangelized, scholarship dedicated its greatest gifts to the church, and ecclesiastical dignity and splendor had become very impressive and the waters were loin deep. Now the Gospel is preached around the world, with the beauty of holiness men are adorning the doctrine of Christ—behold the world is gone after him, the waters are deep and the good ship Zion is sailing majestically home.

This temple river symbolizes the deepening of grace with the flight of our years. In childhood these waters are ankle deep. Infancy is blessed but does not require at God's hands as do the latter stages of life. Parental care is its greatest need and this it receives through the ministries of Christianized homes. Youth with its growing consciousness of sin, the presence of temptation, the many stages where all the future hangs on decisions that must be quickly made may walk knee deep in divine comfort and strength. Manhood and womanhood have greater trials, graver responsibilities, and the abundance of their grace is symbolized by a river deep as to one's loins. Now comes old age; earthly friends are growing fewer and feebler, strength and courage almost gone, but the buoyant waters are deeper now and the wearied saint is borne on its tide past all shoals and out into the great ocean of blissful eternity.

SPIRITUAL BLINDNESS.—Jno. 9:35-41; Acts 26:12-19.

DAILY READINGS.

M. Blindness of the Pharisees.	John 9:35-41.
T. Blindness of the Jews.	Acts 26:12-19.
W. Seeing Without Perceiving.	Isa. 6:10-13.
T. Lovers of Darkness.	John 3:16-21.
F. Knowledge and Sin.	John 15:18-25.
S. Blind Guides.	Matt. 23:16-26.
S. Light for All.	Isa. 42:13-17.

Let us cultivate a vision enabling us to see defects rather than graces in our own characters, and good rather than ill in others.

Color blindness is a great calamity, but spiritual blindness is more deplorable. The former is a serious misfortune, but in America the latter is a crime. The one can not be helped by the victim but the other is almost always a matter of choice.

That Great Physician who opened the eyes of the blind when he was on earth among men has power to give us visions of fairer worlds and nobler careers and more splendid goals. No matter how great the darkness we will be guided "with mine eye" to the foot of the cross, if we wish to go, and find healing.

The Jews said to Jesus, "We never have been in bondage to any man, how sayest thou, ye shall be made free?" There is none so blind as those who will not see. They said, "We never have been in bondage," yet all around them were evidences of their subjugation by Rome and galling bondage. So with us: we deny bondage to Satan and yet we are unkind, impatient, intemperate, unprayerful and despairing.

We have known naturally severe and rheumatic old dames to demand that some young people be summarily dismissed from the church on account of their alleged "inconsistent amusements." We would not encourage young people to indulge in amusements inconsistent with their church vows or that grieve good people, but we wish those censors could so overcome their spiritual blindness as to see that their uncharitableness and harshness toward those young people is more heinous in the sight of the Master than the other "inconsistencies" about which they are so concerned.

On artists' easles are frequently found stones or cards in the deep primary colors. They are used to retone the painters' eyes that frequently become fatigued and lose their power of nice distinction in colors and shadings. So in morals we sometimes lose the fine sense of distinguishing between things permitted and things harmful and need the immediate presence of some of the rugged old spiritual maxims that never vary with the capricious moral sense of ages and nations. Among these are "God is and a rewarder of them that serve him." "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "And these shall go away into eternal punishment, but the righteous into eternal life."

How differently we see! The laborer sees in the rose a thing of beauty lending a charm to his happy home. The poet sees it not in its relation to that home; to him it is a part of the world, a smile on the face of nature expressive of its jubilant spirit. The botanist views it in ways purely scientific, he traces its harmony with the rest of the universe; it awakens no sentiment in his heart; its address is wholly to his mind. How fortunate if each could see in the rose all that they separately behold! One may be fuller visioned than another but each is partly blind. It is so with God. To one he is a Nemesis, to another simply Creator, to another a heavenly Father. One may be fuller visioned, but each is partly blind. Gazing steadfastly into the heavens heals the spiritual eyes. There let us look till we can behold the King in all his beauty.

"Centennial Aims."

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

I have read Bro. E. L. Powell's article in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, of August 2, on "Centennial Aims." Though Brother Powell is a man of brilliant brain and fine spirit, I do not agree with his "one-idea" monument plan—especially not with that of some tremendous edifice. I have already felt that perhaps too much of our centennial energy is spent in a material way, urging fine church edifices and college buildings. The "aim" and sum of the centennial energy should be spent in preaching the truth of the Almighty God directly to sinners to convert them to Jesus Christ, and to Christians to make them more pure in spirit and higher in conceptions. And it makes no especial difference if much of this preaching and thousands of converts made are never even mentioned in the papers.

The leading mind and spirit of the age has passed beyond the brick and mortar stage. These impress not the best thought of the age. This statement has no reference whatever to neat and serviceable buildings. Let us not spend the principal part of our centennial energy in a material way. DANIEL E. MOTLEY.

Washington, D. C.

So long as thinking men are interested in the kingdom there will be differences of opinion as to how best glorify God and save men. We favor the suggestions of both these able brethren. We ought to preach Christ more generally and more fervently, but we need not fall short of Brother Powell's splendid ideals in order to preach him acceptably.

What Do We Stand For?

DEAR BROTHER GARRISON—I feel pressed in spirit to ask, through THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, a few suggestive questions in relation to your position upon Christian union. I am only an humble elder in the Church of Christ, but in my mind the most important crisis of the restorative movement is upon us. If our plea was and is right, it will fail or be successful according to the attitude we take towards this desirable achievement. I have no words to express my deep anxiety upon this vital question, and thousands who are of like precious faith are equally interested, and are praying that this matter may be adjusted so as to please him who gave himself for the Church.

We all are exceedingly pleased with the spirit manifested toward those with whom you differ, but are sorry to say that we—or rather I—am somewhat at a loss to understand how you would have Christian union practically consummated. That may be because I am "slow to understand," or because I have not read all you have said or written upon the subject. Pardon me for being somewhat personal.

In the past I was connected with a religious body who alleged that they took "the Sriptures for their rule of faith and practice," and "Christian character as their test of fellowship." They would receive any one into full fellowship who came to them expressing a desire to live a Christian, whose range of "private" belief was anywhere from the Quaker to the Unitarian. Baptism in no case was required of them. However, if, after being received into the church (by a vote of the same), they "felt" it to be their "duty," they were ordinarily immersed. After listening to the "plea" of the Disciples of Christ, and thoughtfully reading God's Word, I became convinced that I was wrong, and united with the Church of Christ because I thought they were right, and the more I read and think and observe I am confirmed in the belief that they stand for the Gospel of Christ, and on the only ground of permanent Christian union.

I have much to learn. I would not be stubborn, I would not be wrong, but if the church from which I came, and others like it, with their mourners' bench religion, and their sprinkling, and infant baptism, "ordinances" and so on—if they are churches of Christ because they are "honest" in their views, and seem to have as good "a spirit as we have," then I and many others have made a great mistake. and should make a hasty retreat back to the church of our first love, and by confessing our sins perchance they will again take us into their fold. Does the New Testament church consist of immersed believers or not? Are we only a church among other churches? What do we stand for? How much must we compromise? Wherein have we been wrong? We love your spirit; we acknowledge your ability. Lead us out of the depths into the true light. D. H. HARRINGTON.

Columbus, Ohio.

We commend the spirit of the foregoing, but we hope our brother will be able to see, on reflection, the inconsistency of the position that, if any other churches than our own may be classed as Christian in spite of grave errors, then we ought to go back and join these churches out of which we have come, because of the better knowledge we obtained as we believe, of the truth as it is in Jesus. A one-eyed man, or a one-armed man, or a one-legged man, is a man, nevertheless, in spite of his defects. Does this fact tempt any one who has two eyes, two arms, and two legs, to destroy one of these members, because he can be a man without it? Besides, it does not follow, by any means that if those may be regarded as Christians who live up to the best light of Christ's will which they have, that we, who have learned that will better, may be so classed if we be disobedient to the light, as it has shined upon us.

We favor no compromise of the truth, and we believe in the correctness of our position, or we would not advocate it; but that the correctness of our position involves the condemnation of all who do not stand with us, to everlasting perdition, or to the realms of the unsaved, is what we emphatically deny. The Editor of this paper, like our correspondent, came from another religious body, and he has no disposition whatever to return to it, not because he does not believe that it is a Christian body, but because he believes that the position we occupy is broader, truer, freer, and better adapted to people pleading for Christian union. We sincerely hope that our brother, whose article manifests a good spirit, will be able to see a distinction so plain and so vital as this.—EDITOR.

MISSIONARY ADDRESSES. By A. McLean, President Foreign Christian Missionary Society. (Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.)

The first book presented to me after I entered the ministry was a copy of the above-named work. That copy is now much thumbed and the margin of its pages plentifully penciled. Little wonder! For seven years it has been the birthplace of my missionary sermons and rally addresses. The other day I saw an item in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to the effect that a new edition of these addresses had come from the press. I ordered a new volume at once. It has come and lies before me now. An excellent likeness of the author, our beloved president, beams out from the frontispiece. The body of each address is unchanged, but the statistics and data are brought down to 1905. In my opinion the market does not afford a better single volume on the subject than this one. It is brimful of missionary information. Its fund of scriptural citations is striking. There isn't a dull line in it. W. F. Turner, of Joplin, once said to me that this was one of the few books that had moved him to tears. The author has imparted to the printed page somewhat of the warmth and magnificent enthusiasm for world-wide missions that characterizes his platform and pulpit utterances and makes him a "God-intoxicated man." Whether the preacher's missionary library be large or small, it should contain this book. The price is $1 and the place to obtain it The Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, Mo.

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

PART III.

CHAPTER VIII.

Raymund closed his umbrella at the door and entered the bookstore with the fleshy gentleman. "Stick that vile thing in a corner," said the bald-headed man, still breathing heavily, and mopping his brow. "If I ever meet you again I'm going to take out an accident policy against green umbrellas. What kind of books do you want?"

"I want Cicero for one, and an advanced Latin grammar, and something in French—I think a French history in that language will be a good thing; and a trigonometry, and a psychology and a logic, and a—"

"How old are you, sir?" the man interrupted, staring hard.

"Fifteen; and a botany. I can use the botany well for I am traveling across the country." He started toward the counter but the other said, "Wait. I know that man, and I can get you bargains. But you tell me this; what are these books for?"

"For me; I can study them as we drive on to St. Louis. We are in a covered wagon."

"I would have judged so," said the other with a disparaging glance at Raymund's clothes. "The straw is still sticking to you!" There chanced to be a bit of straw lodged on the youth's shoulder. He brushed it off, laughing, for the other was so oddly frank and so childlike in his very anger, that Raymund could not but like him. "My name is Willby," said the fleshy gentleman. "Now, what's yours?"

This being told, the fleshy gentleman said, "Why are you driving to St. Louis?"

"My sister and I are on our way there to our uncle's, and as we are poor, a friend is taking us in his wagon. My sister's name is Rhoda."

"How old is she?" snapped Mr. Willby.

"Fifteen; we are twins."

"Have you no father or mother? And if not, how did you get so far advanced in your studies? Where do you go to school? Can you read Cicero? Have you already finished Caesar?"

"We are orphans," said Raymund, when the other had paused for breath. "My sister has been kept in an orphan home until now, but I have been working on a farm; and at night I would study; I studied very hard. I went to the country school house one term, but it wasn't much use, because I was ahead of all the classes. I got it by just digging away when everybody else was asleep. Caesar was real easy, I thought. I read all the eight books. I finished all the books I had. I liked geometry splendidly." Raymund was anxious to give as many details as possible to spare Mr. Willby from asking any more questions.

"Here, John," called Mr. Willby, to the book dealer, "get us these books at once—and we want 'em cheap. We don't care how worn or battered they are, if every page is there—hey, Raymund?"

"Certainly not," said Raymund. The bookseller climbed his ladder to look at his most faded collection, and Mr. Willby said, "Whose farm was it? and what did you do on it? and why did you leave it? and what do you expect to do in St. Louis?" So, as there was really no need to conceal a thing, except about Boggs and Mrs. Van Estry, Raymund told his story. When the books were done up in a parcel and the fat gentleman could think of no more questions, he said, "If you've no objection, I'll go home with you—meaning to your wagon—when the rain has stopped." Raymund explained that the house on wheels was not in a condition to receive visitors of state, but added that if the other could make allowances, he would be received gladly.

"I know all about movers' wagons," said Mr. Willby, "though I am glad to say, I have never ridden in one. I know what to expect, and I'm expecting it, so don't you bother!" Until the rain ceased, he talked about the books, and showed himself on familiar terms with their contents. He passed Raymund through a rather rigid examination and finished by patting the youth upon the back. "You're all right!" he cried, beaming delightedly. "And if you learned all that alone, the right stuff is in you!"

"A French governess gave me a start," said Raymund. "I owe a great deal to her."

"What's her name?"

"Mrs. De Fer."

"Well, my lad, since you owe her a debt, I'm glad to hear you paying it. Be grateful! That's the most neglected branch known to mortals, gratitude is. I'm glad to hear you speak of her in that way. Now the rain has let up." He led the way out with a side glance at the green umbrella, but presently darted into a shop from which he emerged with a bundle. When they came to the vacant lot, the wet canvas walls had been spread outward to dry. The seat, over which Wizzen had spread a waterproof cloth, was occupied by Rhoda and Mrs. Wizzen. The latter was knitting.

Raymund introduced Mr. Willby, who placed his bundle in Rhoda's lap. It proved to be candy, oranges and bananas. Rhoda was a good deal surprised by this offering from a stranger, but her brother hastened to explain that Mr. Willby knew almost as much about them as they knew themselves.

Mr. Willby, seated upon the tongue of the wagon, addressed Mrs. Wizzen with, "And how old are you, madam?"

"She is very hard of hearing," said Rhoda, shaking her head.

The fat gentleman immediately raised his voice and bawled his question.

"Sold?" said Mrs. Wizzen, laying down her knitting. "Has Wizzen sold the horses?" There was a hopeful note in her tone.

"Madam," shouted Mr. Willby, standing upon the tongue to bring his face closer to the old lady, "I say, how old are you?"

"Yes," Mrs. Weed admitted, "they are rather old, but they are good for some years yet, I assure you, sir."

"Mr. Willby," said Raymund, "I think she is about seventy-eight. She is very active for her age."

"I want to know her age," said Mr. Willby, "without any surmises. I do not think she is seventy-eight. Has she no ear-trumpet?"

"Yes, sir," said Rhoda, "but it has been lost since yesterday. We know it is in the wagon, but there are so many things in there, that when anything is lost, we never look for it any more. Wizzen says it saves time, that way."

"Who is Wizzen?" the other immediately demanded. "And where is he? Is he going with you to St. Louis?" In the course of an hour Mr. Willby's curiosity had been as fully gratified as it could be without the employment of an ear-trumpet. "I must leave you, now," he said regretfully, "but I have this to say: I live in Frog Bend, a town not far from here, on the river. You'll pass near it. I want to say, that if you orphans ever need a friend, look me up. I can't include Mrs. Weed in this invitation; I can not have anybody about me who is unwilling or unable to answer my remarks. But you, Raymund and Rhoda, will be welcome guests at my house. You have entertained me, and I will entertain you."

"We will never forget you," said Rhoda. "But I wish we could invite you to stay to dinner; and we do invite you if you would be willing to take your part with us."

"I appreciate that," said Mr. Willby, "but I mean no offence when I say that I do not think it likely that your board could satisfy my needs. I am a well-preserved man, and I owe my good health and cheerfulness to a careful diet. I am very particular about the kind of food I eat. So if you will pardon me, I will leave without meeting Wizzen, though there are a hundred questions I should like to ask him."

When it was past noon and Wizzen had not returned, Rhoda suggested that she start the gasoline stove and put on the coffee. Of course while they were in the heart of the capital they would cook and eat in the privacy of the covered wagon. While she and Raymund were discussing the point, a black man, wearing a white apron entered the vacant lot, carrying a very large tray. It proved to be a dinner, sent from the restaurant, at Mr. Willby's orders. Judging from the splendid repast, Mr. Willby must have meant, when he spoke of being careful about his diet, that he was careful to get all the good things his money could buy. There was some excitement in transferring the various dainties into plates and pans so the tray and its dishes could be borne away. Still, Wizzen did not return, and they were obliged to eat without him. When he did come, he looked so unlike the ordinary Wizzen, that he cast a despondent spell upon all. He could not eat, and he did not seem to care to hear about Mr. Willby. It was presently evident that he was trying to make himself interested in the strange visitor, and at last he worked himself up to the point of going off to a convenient distance to chew his tobacco. But he was greatly depressed. Raymund once uneasily inquired if he had heard or seen anything of Boggs or Mrs. Van Estry, but Wizzen shook his head impatiently. Finally he took Rhoda to one side.

"See here, Rhoda, I'm in trouble, and maybe you can help me. I've been to the penitentiary."

Rhoda did not know if this was said in the way of reminiscence, or if he had made his visit with a free will, but she was quite startled at his words.

Wizzen drew his cap farther over his eyes and pulled up a stone to look under it, and opened his pocketknife to feel the blade, and then said, "She is in there, you know."

Rhoda did not know, and Wizzen was aware that she didn't, but he found it hard to explain. "Now it all comes down to this," said Wizzen, "which they is no use having any sentiment or moonshine, for I'm a plain moving man and don't know nothing about this thing of brooding over a trouble as if you was trying to hatch something out of it. Nothing won't hatch out of a trouble but another trouble, so I don't brood over it, but just leave it there to git cold. But as I say, she is in there; in the pen, Rhoda, in the pen. And Mrs. Weed don't know it."

"O, Wizzen!" exclaimed Rhoda suddenly, "do you mean her daughter?"

"Yap. That's who I mean. I've been to see her and we talked quite a spell. It ain't that she keered anything about my coming, for she never keered for me though oncet I thought she did. But me knowing her to be in the pen, and her ma thinking her loose was the point. And she don't want her mother to know which it ain't so much of importance what she wants done, but what do you think about it?"

"I don't understand, Wizzen, at all."

"Well, it looks plain to me," said Wizzen in a dry and difficult voice. "Which would please her mother most; to think her gal was free to come and go, or to know that she's clapped up in prison for five year or more?"

"Why, Wizzen! how could it make her happier to know her daughter is in prison?"

"It's this way," said Wizzen: "Her being in the pen, we know she will lead a good honest life for as long as she is in there, but if she was free we would know, if we knowed her, that all the time she would be up to mischief of the rankest kind."

"Of course I can't be sure, Wizzen," said Rhoda thoughtfully, as her blue eyes carefully hid their pity for Wizzen; "it's a new situation to me. But I think if I was a mother, I'd rather have my daughter free to do most anything, rather than think of her behind iron bars, eating bread and water."

"I reckon you're right," said Wizzen. "I believe the old lady thinks as much of her, as if she hadn't never been throwed off by her. Well, we won't say no more about it. But I want to git out of this town as quick as lightning. Nothing wouldn't hire me to stay here long, not if I was elected a state senator."

Sunset and Evening Star.

BY ALFRED TENNYSON.

Sunset and evening star,
  And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar
  When I put out to sea,
But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
  Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
  Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell
  And after that the dark.
And may there be no sadness of farewell
  When I embark:
For though from out our bourne of time and place
  The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
  When I have crossed the bar.

Some Chautauqua Notes.

I mean the first, the great Chautauqua, not one of the 325 satellites that glow in various parts of the world this summer, the harvest of the seed planted at Chautauqua Lake in 1874.

Every year on the night of August 7 Chautauqua celebrates with enthusiasm and spirit the beginning of this great movement, and calls it "Old First Night." This season, on this occasion, the amphitheatre, which is built in a natural ravine and seats between six and seven thousand, and when the aisles are filled with camp chairs a couple of thousand more, was crowded until it became a solid mass of nearly ten thousand human beings, a wonderful sight, indeed.

At this meeting Chancellor Vincent, who presided, announced a gift of $20,000 for the building of a new organ in the amphitheatre, from a donor whose name was withheld.

At the close the Chautauqua roll was called, when those belonging to the various classes of the Chautauqua Literary Circle rose or waved their handkerchiefs as the year was called. Every year was represented, and as the roll call went back year by year, and the "old guard" responded, the enthusiasm waxed high. This was followed by the roll call of states, which served to show the cosmopolitan character of Chautauquan life, as it was answered by representatives from the south, from Canada and from the wide world. The members of the C. L. S. C. now number one-half million with a million and a half readers.

One of the most popular lecturers this year was Dr. Dawson of London. It was a privilege to enjoy a week of such teaching as his in the devotional hour and to hear his masterly literary lectures. Prof. S. C. Schmucker and Dr. Edward Howard Griggs are always fine, but never better than this season.

When you have visited a place like Chautauqua your life is enriched by the memory of the rare souls you have met. Among these was Miss Christina Butler, daughter of the pioneer Methodist missionaries to India, Dr. and Mrs. Wm. Butler. She is her father's biographer, and this autumn expects to return to India with her mother, now over eighty years of age, to attend the jubilee of Methodist missions in that country.

One thing that adds much to the Chautauqua life for Disciples is that we have a pleasant, centrally located headquarters, a general place for meetings and gatherings. This is due, largely, to the efforts of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Ford who have worked faithfully for the past nine years to accomplish this end. The Disciples, few in number in those days, first met in the "upper room" of the Congregational house. The next step was a hut which was occupied for two seasons, when in 1896 the present house was bought. It was remodeled and dedicated in 1904, and has all these years been presided over by Brother and Sister Ford, who welcome the coming and speed the departing guest with genuine Christian hospitality, and who take a pardonable pride in the fact that we have as good a headquarters as any, if not the best on the grounds. It is spacious and attractive, and has a hall that will seat about 200. The quiet communion hour on Lord's day morning is one of the most delightful memories you carry away from Chautauqua. August 5 165 sat down to the Lord's supper together, the services being conducted by Bros. F. W. Brown, of Chagrin Falls, O., and Stevens, of Cleveland.

It Did Not Matter.

Booker T. Washington tells the following story of a member of the "po'h" white trash who endeavored to cross a stream by a ferry owned by a negro.

"Uncle Mose," said the white man, 'I want to cross, but I hain't got no money."

Uncle Mose scratched his head. "Doan you got no money't all?" he queried.

"No," said the wayfaring stranger, "I haven't a cent."

"But hit done cost you but free cents ter cross de fery."

"I know, but I haven't the money," insisted the white man.

Uncle Mose was in a quandary, and after a few moments' thought, said:

"Boss, I done tole you what. 'Er man what ain't got no free cents am jes' ez well off on dis side of der ribber as on der odder."

The Service of Grief.

Christ's heart was wrung for me if mine is sore;
And if my feet are weary, his have bled;
He had no place wherein to lay his head;
If I am burdened, he was burdened more!

The cup I drink, he drank of long before,
He felt the unuttered anguish which I dread;
He hungered, who the hungry thousands fed,
And thirsted, who the world's refreshment bore.

If grief be such a looking-glass as shows
Christ's face and man's in some sort made alike,
Then grief is pleasure with a subtle taste;
Wherefore should any fret or faint, or haste?
Grief is not grievous to a soul that knows
Christ comes and listens for that hour to strike.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

You are now to hear about the great ice cream social at Bentonville, Ark., of August 3. It was the strangest social I ever heard of. Everybody was invited to stay at home and send 10 cents for a saucer of imaginary ice cream, and all the proceeds were to be saved up to help in our orphan Charlie's education. The usual inducements of going to a social were all absent. Nobody expected, as usually happens, to get in exchange for his dime, about 5 cents worth of ice cream and the rest in religion. Nobody could show her pretty clothes or look at other people's, or play out in the churchyard while the older people sat on benches waiting for it to be over. Nobody sat in a corner lonesomely looking as if having a good time, on purpose. And when it was over, there were no dishes to clean, no room to be swept, no lights to be paid for, nobody going home sleepy and cross, and best of all, no deductions to be made from the collection for "necessary expenses." You ask, why should anybody send money to stay at home, for ice cream that was all air? The answer is simple: to help educate an orphan who has only one leg and who can never make a man of himself unless helped in his education. You say, "Oh, yes, of course it's a good thing, but there are so many other good causes that need money, I doubt if many went to your queer ice cream social!" Reader, if the names of all who came were printed on this page, the three columns would be a solid mass of names! We were here from fifteen different states, and you can see, yourself, that if all these names were printed, nobody would want to read our department. I suppose the best way is to make a dive into this stack of letters on my table, without picking for best or shortest; so here goes, and you can imagine you hear our ice cream guests chatting in merry voices as they wend their mental way to Bentonville.

Mabel E. Nicholas, Burlington Jct., Mo.: "I have never seen any Av. S. letters from Burlington Junction. 'The Bronze Vase' is interesting. Papa, mamma, brother and I spent last winter in Colorado for mamma's health, but this summer brother and I are visiting our aunt and uncle here in the country. We have a nice time eating apples and peaches, taking care of little chickens and, best of all, eating fried chicken." (I suppose your apples and peaches were shipped from Arkansas, as I am under the impression that they are raised only in this state). "Papa and mamma write us a nice long letter each week. We like our new pastor, W. H. Rust, very much. It was thoughtful to have an ice cream social for Charlie's educational fund. Uncle, aunt, brother and I each send 10 cents." Myrtle Searcy, Springfield, Ill.: "Mamma, sister Margaret and I send 30 cents for Charlie's education. We hope Felix will get his share of ice cream at your expense." (He has just had more than his share of mouse at my expense, for I found some of the remains of my study-chair cushion and there has been great cleaning going on, and some excitement). "My sister had a yellow cat, named Felix, and he was so much like a preacher, he caught a number of chickens. When we found it out he died. If you don't want to be bothered with neighbors' chickens, teach Felix to catch them." (I trust none of my neighbors will see this; however, nobody in Bentonville came to the social except the Wood girls [25 cents], and as they live on the other side of town, I know of no safer place to talk about my neighbors than on this page). Laura Hutchinson, Anderson, Mo.: "Here is a dime for Charlie's education. I hope the social may prove remunerative." Jenny Bagby, Plattsburg, Mo.: "In response to the invitation to the social, I send 50 cents from Marvin Sherwood in memory of the pleasant afternoon he spent in the woods with you and Tom Capp, Robert and Prince Thompson. My mother is the only mother he remembers and since she died, he sympathizes with all orphans. As five of you went to the woods that happy day this will treat each one to a dish of cream. Read Matt. 6:3, which means, I would rather not sign my name, but that would be impolite." (How well I remember that afternoon at the falls, crawling under the barbed-wire fence, and rolling big stones down the baby mountain! The pleasure of the day all lives again in getting 50 cents from it for our orphan.) Beulah Shortridge, Glenwood, Ind.: "I could not get up a social for our orphan, but I went around among my friends and told them about Charlie and the Av. S. I send $1.50 and names of the contributors." (Not room to give them here, but every guest's name is entered in my Av. S. account book.) Mrs. W. C. Merrill, Long Beach, Cal.: "Here it is 3 o'clock and I've not started to the social! Won't you and Charlie rest out in the shade till I come? Since I'm here, I must tell you that Mr. Merrill and myself and the five little Merrills enjoy the Av. S. stories very much. All who come to our social must be very happy to feel that they are doing good in the world and giving pleasure to Charlie and others. I wish you had been here in June to hear Brother Scoville. Our S. S. now numbers over 300. We all love Brother Thornton and his family. We had 255 additions, and since the Scoville meeting have had one or more every Sunday since. This is not for the paper, only for yourself and Felix." (The paper will please keep its hands off.) Mrs. Edith Slightam, Spokane, Wash.: "I send for 10 dishes of cream at 10 cents per." (And that makes Felix purr.) "A Friend" (Quaker?) "Philadelphia: 25 cents for Charlie's education." Mrs. Lucy Marrer, Wabash, Ind.: "After reading your kind invitation to attend the ice cream social at Bentonville, I told the ladies of the Christian church about it, and they were all willing to sample the cream to compare it with Hoosier cream. I am glad to send you $2. I hope Charlie will never forget his true friends, and that in after days his earlier years will be pleasant memories. Rev. Edgar Daugherty is our pastor." Donnie Swift, Billings, Mo.: "I send 10 cents for my dish of ice cream. I suppose the social will be over when this reaches you." (No, just on time.) Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Allen, Los Angeles, Cal.: "It is with much elation that we accept your invitation to be present at that social August 3. We are coming—in the spirit—at that time or somewhere near it, to help swell that worthy fund of which we've heard. Please reserve then, ice cream plenty, enough, in fact, for a crowd of 20, the price of which we're sending by this mail. May all respond in this like manner, then success will perch on Charlie's banner." (Charlie, get your banner ready) "and in life's future conflicts he'll not fail. We are growing poetical, too, you see." (I had to print the stanzas as prose to economize space, but it's all right, for everybody must see it's poetry, it is just swelling and bursting through the lines.) Zoe C. Moller, San Francisco, Cal.: "My husband and I enjoy the Av. S. stories and send 25 cents for Charlie's ice cream. If he likes it as well as I do, he will have no trouble in eating that much, and more!" (You have heard of churches who couldn't help mission or orphan homes because they were in debt; but, reader, what do you think of San Francisco sending money for orphan Charlie's education— and sending it not with a look of conscious heroism, but with a jolly laugh and a word of sunshine? When I cast my mite upon the waters of popular sympathy and help that not long since flowed toward the Golden Gate, I little dreamed that in so short a time my bread would be returned.) Harry Buckley, Lawrenceburg, Ky.: "I heartily endorse the ice cream social for Charlie's education. That's the kind of a social that suits me, a social with the quid pro quo left out" (this is not Latin for tobacco but is put into English by Harry's next words) "where every dime taken in, represents a solid dime" (and no ice cream is taken in). "Put me down for 10 tickets in the front row where I hope to see Ruth Sampsel, Donnie Swift, Bertha Beesley, Grace Everest and the other faithful ones. I am yours for a jolly crowd and a good time." Bertha Beesley, Moselle, Mo.: "I send $2 for our missionary Drusie. I made a collection for Charlie's social and took up $1.30. I enclose list of contributors" (all of whom are recorded in my book.) Mrs. Thos. G. Va, Plainview, Texas: "I am sending a package of cards for Drusie, saved up by my S. S. class, that she may share them with the little ones in China, also $2 from the S. S. for Drusie, and 50 cents from myself for Charlie. May God bless them both is my prayer." M. J. O'Dell, Fayette, Idaho: "I send $1 for our Charlie with a hope and prayer that dimes and dollars may be plentiful at the social. Tell Charlie it is as hot here in Fayette valley as I ever felt in St. Louis, but it is cool enough after midnight to sleep comfortably under a blanket. Tell Felix when he goes out hunting to be careful not to catch malaria. It might spoil his complexion." (Who said there was any malaria in Arkansas?) Harriet McCausland, Coffeyville, Kan.: "I send my 2 quarterly reports beginning with February 11. I have begun over again because it was so long since I sent in any that I have forgotten how many I did send before. Papa, mamma and I want to come to the social so we send 30 cents and wish it were $30. I am glad Charlie has his vacation. I think 'Bronze Vase' is fine and I think you are splendid." (Now, good for you, Harriet, I feel that you understand me as I am!) "What do you do with all these reports? How long do you keep them? You must have a pile!" (They are piled up until each February 11; then the prize reports are decided; then all except the best are solemnly burned and their ashes scattered to the four quarters [one for each quarterly report.]

Charlie, Dorsey, Ill. (you see that Charlie has finished his visit with his sister Bessie, from his new address): "I had a pleasant time with my sister. Ethel Orr said she was going to give Bessie a chain for her locket. I came here to Mrs. Skinner's last night. I reached Dorsey about 9, and as Mrs. Skinner didn't know when I would come, there was no one to meet me. I telephoned and they had just got in bed. They hitched up the horse and came after me. It was a two-and-a-half-mile drive. It was cool and pleasant so I enjoyed it." (It must have also been cool getting out of bed and I hope was equally enjoyed.) "You won't have to send me THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, because Mrs. Skinner takes it. I think Arkansas people ought to share up their rains with us, for the farmers here need them." (They can have 'em. It has rained every day here for the past nine days and it's just stopped now to get ready to do it again.) Mrs. N. C. Skinner, Dorsey, Ill.: "The Ridgely Sunday-school accepts the invitation to Charlie's social, and sends $2.40. Ours is a small school. I send $1, half for Drusie. My four-year-old grandson, Clarke Forman, sends 11 pennies for Charlie." Mrs. B. R. Brown, Orphan Home, St. Louis, Mo.: "Some of the ladies followed your suggestion and had an ice cream social for Charlie's education. I am sending money order for $18. We regret that you, Charlie and Felix, could not be present. I am so grateful to hear that you noticed an improvement in Charlie. I do so trust that he may grow up to be a good, noble man. Tell Charlie I am so anxious to see him in his new suit. We thank those who have given Charlie the lovely vacation he so much needed." (I am sorry I can't tell about every guest to our social in one number of the paper. In two weeks we will go on with the story. I can't tell you just how much the social made us, because people are still buying our ice cream. As soon as we sell out all that's left, we can announce the sum. Up to the present our receipts are $64.90, but I am hoping somebody will send for another saucer, so we can have it $65. I am sure that two weeks from now, all money will be in, and then we can tell exactly what the social brought Charlie. As far as I am concerned, I think $64.90 for an ice cream social at which there was no ice cream is doing pretty well! In two weeks we will try to print all the letters that are left over this time.)

CHATTANOOGA, SEPTEMBER 18-20, 1906.

On September 18, 1906, will occur the forty-third anniversary of the Battle of Chickamauga. It is proposed to celebrate this memorable event with a reunion of the various regiments that participated in this memorable battle and the various battles fought around Chattanooga. This reunion will be held at Chickamauga National Park, September 18, 19 and 20, and the present indications are that it will be the largest and most notable gathering ever held in the South. On the above dates, the remnants from the armies of twelve states, comprising the following: Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas and Kentucky, will assemble, many for the first and last time since they marched from its blood-stained fields, forty-three years ago.

Here is one of the great opportunities for the education of the youth. Don't fail to take your children and show them historic Chattanooga, with all its historical connections. It is the opportunity of a lifetime. Go and see the old war generals and other officers; point out the places of interest on the battlefield; let them show you and explain, in person, the markers erected on the battlefield showing the positions of the opposing armies at the time of battle. It will not be long until none will be left to do this noble work.

It will be many years, if ever again, that such an opportunity will present itself. See that your tickets read via the Louisville & Nashville R. R., the Battlefield Route. Call on your nearest railroad agent for rates and advertising matter pertaining to the reunion, or write nearest representative of the Louisville & Nashville R. R.

The pink circular in this paper does not have to do with your subscription. We trust you will use it in securing a subscription from a friend who does not now enjoy your privilege of reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Go with us to the great Buffalo convention via the Wabash. Join our train at the nearest cross roads, if you do not start with us from St. Louis at noon October 11. Without extra cost you may go from Detroit either by lake or through Canada.

Over Niagara via "Wabash."

For one new subscription sent us at $1.50 we will send you a "diamond point" pen "warranted by the manufacturers" and that could not be purchased at retail for less than $1.00. For $2.75 we will send you THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and an automatically filling fountain pen warranted for ten years.

When we get older we select our own literature, while children it is selected for us, but in childhood it is usually determined whether we shall continue Bible readers all our lives or whether we shall "throw off this yoke of bondage" when no longer under direct parental control. By all means use the W. W. Dowling Bible School series that the children may cultivate a liking for religious literature. They cost no more than inferior and alienating sorts.

Matters of tremendous consequence to this Restoration movement are to be considered at Buffalo, which promises to be the greatest convention since our Cincinnati Jubilee. You ought to be a witness to its procedures and have a voice in its councils. Those willing to secure subscriptions for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST can earn transportation. Write us for particulars. You will enjoy the convention the more because the expense does not all come from your regular income. You will bless every home you visit while earning transportation.

While not so many clubs have been received this week as usual, yet a great many have sent the subscriptions of friends they have solicited to become member of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST family. That is the most substantial growth, but we are pleased to have received the following clubs of new subscriptions at $1.50 each, to-wit: Millville, Pa., 4; Moulton, Ia., 7, W. D. Endree, minister; Cynthiana, Ky., 30, W. E. Ellis, minister; Washington, O., 12, Wm. Boden, pastor; Jamestown, O., 6, W. J. Loos, pastor; Moberly, Mo., 23, W. B. A Western Kansas postmaster wanted to inform the public that the location of the postoffice had been changed, so he inserted this notice in the local paper: "The postoffice has been moved from where it was to where it is now."

The Waiter's Rebuke.

Secretary Taft said of a certain domineering statesman:

"He fills men with dread. They quail before him. They can't call their souls their own in his presence. Altogether, he makes me think of a waiter I once met in the west.

"In a small western town many years ago I put up at the Palace Hotel.

"I was assigned to a room. There was no water or towels in the room, and I rang.

"There was no reply.

"I rang again.

"Still no reply.

"And again and again and yet again I rang, and finally a waiter appeared.

"This waiter was a robust man of stern and forbidding aspect.

" 'Did you ring?' he said in a rumbling bass voice.

" 'I did,' I answered.

" 'Well, don't do it again," said the waiter with a menacing scowl, as he withdrew."

A small boy sat quietly and patiently in a railway car on a hot, dusty day. An old lady, leaning forward, asked sympathetically, "Aren't you tired of the long ride, dear, and the dust and the heat?" The lad looked up brightly, and replied with a smile: "Yes, ma'am, a little. But I don't mind it much ,because my father is going to meet me when I get to the end of it."—W. F. Crafts, Ph. D.

THE AGES COME AND GO

By H. W. Longfellow.

THE Ages come and go,
The Centuries pass as years;
The life of man is a gleam
Of light, that comes and goes
Like the course of the Holy Stream,
The cityless river that flows
From fountains no one knows,
Through the Lake of Galilee.
And Him evermore I behold
Walking in Galilee,
Through the cornfield's waving gold,
In hamlet, in wood, and in wold,
By the shores of the Beautiful Sea,
He toucheth the sightless eyes;
Before Him the demons flee;
To the dead He sayeth: Arise!
To the living: Follow Me!
And that voice still soundeth on
From the centuries that are gone,
To the centuries that shall be.
From all vain pomps and shows,
From the pride that overflows,
And the false conceits of men;
From all the narrow rules
And subtleties of Schools
And the craft of tongue and pen;
Bewildered in its search,
Bewildered with the cry:
Lo, here! lo there, the Church!
Poor, sad Humanity
Through all the dust and heat
Turns back with bleeding feet,
By the weary road it came,
Unto the simple thought
By the great Master taught,
And that remaineth still:
Not he that repeateth the name,
But he that doeth the will!

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS

BY S. D. GORDON

The author of "Quiet Talks on Prayer" (now in its 55th thousand), and "Quiet Talks on Power" (now in its 80th thousand).

Cloth, 12mo. 288 pages. Net 75c.

"QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS" is an attempt to group up in simplest Anglo-Saxon English the statements of the entire Bible regarding Jesus. The purpose is wholly practical, that one may get at a glance, for his own thought and heart, the swing of the Bible from end to end on its central theme.

Mr. Gordon's life work has been leading up to the theme of this new book.

TOPICAL ARRANGEMENT

FIRST—The purpose of Jesus' coming; the plan of his coming; the tragic break that occurred in the plan, the surprises that worked out of that break.
SECOND—The Person of Jesus from three points of view: the human; the divine; the winsomeness of his personality.
THIRD—The seven great outstanding experiences which reveal Jesus: the Jordan Baptism; the Wilderness Temptation; the Transfiguration as an emergency unusual; the Gethsemane struggle; the Victory of Calvary.
FOURTH—Study Notes. One of the most important features of the book, making it possible for the earnest reader to follow for himself Mr. Gordon's essential methods.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

Read A. L. Ward's earnest second to the motion recently made by E. L. Powell, in these columns, for a memorial church in Boston. We bear personal testimony to the unfortunate location of our present church and to the heroism of Boston Disciples, and particularly to that of Brother and Sister Ward.

We call particular attention to our centennial secretary's article following. A great many goals are set before us for 1909. One of the brightest and most certainly attainable is "One Million Dollars for Church Extension." We plead for a generous offering from every congregation of Disciples in the land next Lord's day, and for large individual gifts. We pray for a great revival of church extension, enthusiasm and consecration. One million dollars in this fund will give heartening and hope and victory to thousands of our struggling congregations and make them sources of strength to our brotherhood in their communities instead of objects of charity and pity. We hope next week's Christian-Evangelist will contain columns of telegraphic announcements of congregations having gone far beyond the "Extension Apportionment."

Dr. E. T. Davis, of Kansas City, makes a very helpful Centennial suggestion to our churches and preachers. He deeply deplores our brief pastorates, the frequent changes occasioned by restlessness of the preachers and the caprice of congregations. Among the evils of this practice is failure to plan wisely and whole-heartedly for the continuous development of the churches, providing for the payment of church debts and new buildings, the acquirement and right use of social and religious prestige and other achievements possible only where there are long-continued pastorates. He calls on all Disciples to help overcome this crying evil and suggests that plans be laid for having regular preaching every Lord's day in all our churches between this and the Centennial, and that every church in the brotherhood begin now to plan for a great revival during the last few months of this first century, and to have them all to conclude in time for the statistics to be part of our first Centennial reports.

Stopping Leaks.

BY W. R. WARREN.

If all of the leaks about our churches could be stopped, we should be well on the way to the attainment of most of the Centennial aims. Ever since its organization, the Board of Church Extension has been constantly and consistently stopping leaks. Every one of the thousand churches that it has helped has been saved from the leaks of fire, defective title and unsafe construction. The brotherhood of churches has been saved from the loss of money given to help one church in stopping them. Over half a million dollars that would otherwise have ceased from their labors long ago are now in the fund and devoted to perpetual beneficence. Without church extension there would be a constant succession of solicitors before our churches. Among those an occasional impostor would slip in and not only rob the cause but discredit the worthy; so springing a double leak. Few honest men are as cautious in handling the funds of others as they are when dealing with their own. In the old hap-hazard way of every needy church going out to seek its own help, many churches were erected in ill-chosen locations, many were unwisely planned and extravagantly built, some were sold for debt after they were finished. All these leaks church extension has effectually stopped. Next to the first mentioned leak the heaviest was from the amount expended in traveling expenses by the solicitors for local churches. And it was more serious than the other, for nothing remained to show for it. The other was a "sinking fund," being entirely absorbed by the one point; but this was sheer waste.

If the financial leakage of the old, irregular way of helping young churches to build was serious, still more fearful was the moral loss. Churches, like individuals, should have self-reliance, business integrity and respect for the rights of others. These things were apt to go at loose ends in the old days. The Church Extension Board has been a wise, kind and firm schoolmaster, training up young churches to wise and just administration of their affairs and saving untold loss in the vital elements of church life. Every dollar given to church extension is not only perpetually safe for good work, but incidentally it will be forever saving both money and character.

Why Not a Memorial Church in Boston?

BY A. L. WARD.

A Church of Christ was organized in Boston July 23, 1843. This church continued to meet for about one year, after which there were no meetings of our brethren until November 11, 1866. From this time regular meetings were held for about the period of ten years, and then after another interruption of three years they began to meet regularly again. In 1880 the scattered Disciples of the city were brought together into a more efficient organization; in 1882 they met in old Horticultural hall; in 1885 in the South End tabernacle; in 1899 in the present building on St. James street, Roxbury.

The work began, of course, with the meeting of a very few people to "break bread," and to talk over the possibility of a church building of their own. The numbers grew until in the South End tabernacle there were about seven hundred members. With the move to the present location the number was reduced to about 350. One of the reasons for this was the fact that the church had moved and that too from a locality where many of the members lived; but another reason, and to my mind the chief one, the church was unfortunately located on a side street. This street is frequented only by the few people who live upon it, and by a few others who have business dealings with those who live there. While the street is near a great thoroughfare it is itself little traveled.

My ministry has been of sufficient length here to convince me that the church which hopes for success must be on a street that is used by the people. If we are to continue in the city, and make the success which our cause is worthy of, we must have a more public location. I am certain that I have the support in this position of such men among our brethren as the former successful minister here, Bro. J. H. Mohorter, and the former equally successful secretary of the American Society, Bro. B. L. Smith. These men know this field and also know how illy prepared we are to cope with the situation.

There is just now an opportunity for us to get a church property ideally located at the head of St. James street, and on the great thoroughfare leading to the best residential section of the city. Thousands of people go over this street each day. But the one thing we lack is the money with which to secure this splendid property. The congregation is liberal. It has done its share in the past for missions, and that too when the money was badly needed to push the local work. The people spend about $50 each year in car fare in coming to the church services. This, I dare say, can not be duplicated in the entire brotherhood.

This is an opportunity for the Boston church, and an opening for the extension of primitive Christianity. Who will come to the help of this worthy people? It will take not less than $12,000 in addition to our present property, which is worth about $16,000. It would be a noble report for the Centennial convention, and one second to none that will be made there, if it could be reported that its Boston church has secured this splendid property. Will not some of our brethren with means investigate this? It is a call of God.

Chinese on the Isthmus.

Mr. Shontz and Mr. Gompers have locked horns on the question of Chinese labor and the eight-hour law on the Isthmus of Panama. Mr. Shontz has announced that it is the intention of the Canal Commission to import Chinese coolies under contract, and, if the experiment proves successful, to use their labor exclusively in constructing the canal; he also announces that the eight-hour law will not be considered as binding in the isthmus. Mr. Gompers, as president of the Federation of Labor, denounces both of these propositions as illegal and unwise. He is afraid that the introduction of Chinese labor on the canal strip of the Isthmus of Panama will be but an entering wedge for its introduction in the United States proper; and he argues that if eight hours is enough for a man to work in our temperate climate, common humanity forbids requiring any one to labor nine or ten hours a day in a tropical climate. At the bottom of the opposition to the use of Chinese labor on the canal, seems to be the vague feeling that it is some way an injustice to American labor. We are so much in the habit of thinking of Chinese laborers as undesirable competitors in the home market that the familiar arguments for Chinese exclusion get themselves transferred to Panama, although the conditions are wholly different. American laborers will not go to the Isthmus. At the present time Jamaica negroes are being employed. The introduction of the Chinese will displace no one except the Jamaicans. It is not easy to see just what harm can come to the American laboring man through the introduction of coolies to do work which he refuses to do. As to the legal right to bring Chinese contract labor into the canal zone, Mr. Shontz is acting upon the opinion of the attorney general of the United States that the Chinese exclusion law does not apply to that territory. To a layman in law, it would seem tolerably obvious that the Chinese exclusion law can not be expected to follow the flag if the constitution itself does not. The same is true of the eight-hour law. On the legal phase of the subject, we should say that Mr. Shontz has the long end of the argument. Moreover, it seems that the only way to get the canal dug is to have the Chinese dig it. The Americans will not, and the Jamaicans can not do the work. If the Chinese can and will, why not let them have the job?

Cannon's Boom.

Speaker Cannon's Presidential boom broke the silence last week at Danville, Ill., at the district convention. Mr. Cannon was renominated for Congress and was very pointedly designated as the choice of his district for the next Republican Presidential nomination. The speech which Mr. Cannon delivered on that occasion was the keynote speech for the convention, and may fairly be taken to indicate the keynote of any presidential campaign or administration which he might have the opportunity of conducting. The beginning, middle and end of his argument for the continuance of Republican rule was prosperity. In the history of this country, he said, high tariff, Republican rule and prosperity have always been coincident, while financial depression has always been the corollary of free trade and Democratic domination. We are not at present interested in either affirming or denying that the Republican party ought to be kept in power, but we have no hesitancy in saying that Speaker Cannon's arguments on the proposition seem to us seriously inconclusive. To begin with, his assertion of the unfailing relation between high tariff and prosperity is not historically true, as the hastiest survey of our financial history will indicate. In the second place, we have never tried free trade, and so have no experimental knowledge of its results. It is true, however, that at least once in our history a tariff which was virtually for revenue only was in operation at a time of great prosperity, namely, in 1844 and the years immediately thereafter. In the third place, the prosperity argument assumes, though it dare not assert, that sunshine and rain, bumper corn crops and great gold discoveries, are the direct result of a wise and beneficent administration. There are a good many people in this country who call themselves Republicans and will vote the Republican ticket if they have a fair chance, who would nevertheless be grievously disappointed if the party were to enter upon the next presidential campaign with no more honorable issue than the full belly and the big corn crop.

Wages and Prices.

The impression of prosperity is usually created rather by the aggregate of business and the height of prices than by the consideration of the actual purchasing power of the average man's wages. During the past decade this country has, as all must admit, been enjoying a period of extraordinary prosperity. A recent bulletin of the Bureau of Labor, however, indicates that the cost of living has more than kept pace with the advance in wages. Basing the estimate upon the average retail price of 30 food staples taken in quantities proportioned to the amounts used by an average family, it appears that the cost of food has increased 17.7 per cent during the past 10 years, while the average rate of wages has increased only 14.6 per cent. The chief advantage so far as the wage-earner is concerned, is that fewer men are out of employment now than 10 years ago. Merchants, manufacturers and others to whom the increase in prices means an increase in income are doing exceedingly well, but wage-earners and salaried people who find the purchasing power of their dollars diminished, while there is no corresponding increase in the number of their dollars, have reason to feel that they are scarcely getting their share of the general prosperity which is so widely advertised.

Free Seeds.

The free seed graft seems to be almost at an end. The appropriation of $290,000 for the distribution of seed next spring had a narrow escape in a recent session of Congress, and it seems probable that the ancient custom will not survive another winter. It would have perished long ago, as it deserved to perish, had there not been among the congressmen of both parties a superstitious notion that opposition to it would lose the farmer vote. And yet it was a good scheme when it was first introduced. The original theory was that, since it was the purpose of the Department of Agriculture to make two good blades of grass grow where only one poor one grew before, the department might properly distribute seeds of new and improved varieties which would not otherwise be easily obtainable by the public. From this excellent beginning the practice deteriorated until it was nothing more than the distribution of ordinary or inferior seeds bought by the department in open market and given out through the congressmen as a sort of petty political patronage. Henchmen and voters who were not worth a post-office could be paid in seeds. It would be quite as rational for the federal government to distribute horse-shoe nails to the blacksmith, or free note-books and fountain pens to school teachers, or free hammers and saws to carpenters.

New York Candidates.

The friends of Mr. Jerome are evidently preparing to launch him upon an independent candidacy for the governorship of New York. Hearst is already in the field with the same object in view—and, incidentally, he is taking opportunity in non-political speeches here and there to denounce Jerome as a man who started promisingly but has degenerated into an abject slave of plutocracy. With two such Democrats already in the running before the Democratic convention meets, it would seem probable that the convention would do well to accept and endorse one or the other of them. Both have shown their power as independent vote-getters, and a third Democratic candidate, backed by the party machinery but opposed by these two, would have a very slender chance of election if the Republicans are wise enough to nominate a man like Hughes. These considerations gain some interest from the opinion recently expressed by a prominent Democrat, that "the next governor of New York will be a Democrat, and the next President of the United States will be the next governor of New York."

The Pope on France.

Pope Pius X has issued his long-expected encyclical on the religious situation in France. As might have been safely predicted, he denounces the separation of church and state as an iniquitous outrage, an attack upon the church and a menace to the cause of true religion. The process of disestablishment is usually accompanied by such lamentations on the part of those who are disestablished. After reading the Pope's letter, one needs to take a second thought to assure himself that the Catholic church has all the rights in France that it has in the United States, and that the new regime means not persecution of the Church, but only a fair deal to all. The Pope also expresses his sorrow at the prevalence of infidelity in France, and urges the faithful to do their utmost to combat it. For centuries the Catholic Church has had full sway in France, backed by all the power of the state, and at times using that power to persecute its enemies, but the outcome of it all has been a large percentage of infidelity and a majority sentiment in favor of disestablishment. The Pope ought to see that the old method has failed, and to welcome the opportunity to put into operation a process of evangelism which does not depend upon governmental support, and does not have for its object the building up of a powerful ecclesiastical machine.

Where Jesus Placed the Emphasis.—II.

There yet remain a few practical applications of the teaching of Jesus concerning the fatherhood of God to which we wish to call attention.

One of the great evils of our time is the spirit of unrest, disquietude and anxiety, among professed Christians, even as among others. Men and women grow prematurely old by fretting and worrying over matters which they can not control. This, in its last analysis, springs from a distrust either in the wisdom or goodness of God. Jesus saw this evil in his own day and sought to remedy it. This was one reason, at least, why he laid emphasis upon the fatherhood of God. His specific for the evil which is causing so much unhappiness in our day, is set forth in the following passage, than which there is nothing more beautiful and comforting in all the literature of the world:

"Therefore I say unto you, be not anxious for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than food, and the body than the raiment? Behold the birds of the heaven, they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; and your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are not ye of much more value than they? And which of you by being anxious can add one cubit unto the measure of his life? And why are ye anxious concerning raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. But if God doth so clothe the grass of the field which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith! Be not therefore anxious saying, what shall we eat? or, what shall we drink? or, wherewithal shall we be clothed? For after all these things do the Gentiles seek; for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things." (Matt. 6:25-32).

The chief secret of the growth of Christian Science will, we believe, be found in the emphasis which it puts upon this part of the teaching of Jesus. It affects the daily life of the people vastly more than many of the theological doctrines on which stress is laid. If God is indeed our Father, why should we be anxious about those things which lie outside the sphere of our will, but under the general superintendence of his providence? Why not trust his father-heart? If he feeds the birds of the air and notes the sparrow's fall, will be not care for his children? A man lay tossing upon his bed at night, unable to sleep because of the care and anxiety that filled his mind, when his little child, sleeping near him, wakened in a fright and called, "father!" Reaching out his hand and taking the hand of his little child, the little one, whose fears were at once quieted, was soon sound asleep again. This lesson of trust was not lost. The care-ridden man asked himself, Why can not I, also, trust my heavenly Father? and casting all his care upon him, he turned over and fell asleep.

"Let not your heart be troubled: believe in God, believe also in me." To believe "also" in Christ is to believe in God as Father, and that is Jesus' remedy for troubled hearts. Why should our hearts be troubled over the departure of our loved ones, if they are only going into another apartment of our Father's house? Has the reader ever observed the significant connection in which that beautiful and familiar passage of Jesus occurs—"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest"? It immediately follows the statement, "Neither doth any know the Father save the Son and he to whom the Son willeth to reveal him." (Matt. 11:27). Is not the lesson obvious, that Jesus will give rest to the weary by revealing to them God as Father; and this truth must be "revealed" to every man in his own religious experience before he finds rest unto his soul.

What zest this teaching of Jesus concerning God should give to prayer! "When ye pray," said Jesus to his disciples, "say, Our Father who art in heaven." He has never really prayed as Jesus prayed who does not have some realizing sense of God as Father. When the Holy Spirit within the heart of the believer enables him to cry "Abba, Father," then he can truly pray. How strange it is, after all, that any believer can be neglectful of the privilege of prayer, when he has a heavenly Father who takes delight in giving him all the good things needful for him, including even his Holy Spirit! Does this neglect not spring from a failure to realize God's fatherliness? Is it not a question which the pulpit of to-day may well put to itself, whether it places the emphasis upon the truth that God is our Father that Jesus placed upon it?

The obligation of holiness of life grows out of the fact that God is our Father. "Be ye perfect even as your heavenly Father is perfect." Children are supposed to resemble their father, and the fact that we are children of God ought to be a mighty stimulus for holy living.

This truth should strengthen us also in enduring chastening, seeing that "God chasteneth every son whom he receiveth." The chastening of a wise and good father is for the child's good. This is certainly true of all God's chastening.

Other lessons from God's fatherhood might be drawn, but we leave our readers to do this for themselves and pass on to notice other truths on which Jesus placed emphasis.

A Situation and a Remedy.

One of our most thoughtful ministers preaching in a town in one of our western cities describes the following local condition, which, we opine, is duplicated in many another town east, west, north and south.

Dear Brother Garrison:—A town of 1,500 inhabitants, a county seat, amidst almost untold prosperity. We have six churches, including our own. All of them are struggling hard to maintain ministers of very common ability, not one of them having a man of commanding strength. This condition has existed for many years. As a result public sentiment has come to count churches as a matter of course, but not seriously to be reckoned with, when it comes to the powers that be in the town. There is a large proportion of the membership in all churches that neither works nor pays nor attends church regularly. Fraternities claim the bulk of the sympathy of the people, many belonging to from two to six of them. This is true of some church members. The saloon element, races, baseball, Sunday fishing and Sunday target practice by the volunteers: Sunday visiting in the country; low theaters and shows and dances; Wednesday evening band concerts at the prayer-meeting hour, in spite of kindly protests of all the ministers; toleration of vice and open adultery; the mayor a sportsman who measures his obligations to religion by a $5 or so to each of the churches, a man who is "all things to all men" for the sake of political ambition; a county attorney who is the son of a sot, a partial drunkard himself and a willing cat's-paw to the baser element; a city marshal whose highest philosophy for the removal of vice, which is blighting our young people, is to license it. These are some of the conditions that give complexion to our society. I know of but one devout man in the town, and he has recently come here, and his righteous soul is vexed because of the discountenance to which he is subjected because of his refusal to join in riotous living.

This is indeed a dark picture but the minister assures me that it is not at all overdrawn. He compassionates the people more than he blames them. "They have not had Christ presented to them as a rule as much above the sniveling sentimentalist, interpreted with as many crotchets as there are sectarian preachers. I can not but believe that the better element among unbelievers are bewildered or mistaken. By so much I believe that they would listen, and some of them would accept, if the Christ were held up to them as the 'one among ten thousand, the one altogether lovely.' They are waiting to see that the Gospel is really the power of God and to be asked to give expression to the very best they are capable of in yielding obedience to Christ." The minister so writing is trying to so present Christ, but the great mass of people do not know it, and hence are not profited by his ministry. This is the situation. What is the remedy?

In such a situation we should call the ministers and other godly people of the town together to talk over the condition and see if some plan could not be agreed upon for united action in bringing about a better state of things. The man who sees and feels the unsatisfactoriness of this condition of things is the man to take the initiative in seeking the remedy for it. The first thing that is generally thought of in a case of this kind, is a union revival service. But it seems to us there is a good deal to be done before such a service can accomplish its best results. If the remnant of godly members in all the churches would come together and pray over the situation and take counsel together, they might agree upon a program of concerted action that would put their churches in better condition for an aggressive movement on the vice and iniquity of the town. Church members themselves must put away iniquity and religious indifference before they are prepared to take any part in an aggressive movement.

But suppose the other ministers and churches are content with the situation and refuse to take any concerted action? In that case let the minister and church that feel the need of a better state of things put themselves in readiness and send for a good evangelist and plan for such a meeting as will attract the attention of the town. Nothing but a bold, aggressive gospel that condemns vice and exalts righteousness, that presents Christ as the remedy for all our human ills, can meet the demands of the situation. Our ministers and churches should take the lead, where others are not taking it, in seeking to remedy such a condition of things as that described above. Quiet acquiescence in it would be a crime.

Notes and Comments.

The church at Jerusalem, like all the primitive churches whose names are mentioned in the New Testament, had both its strong points and its weak points. In its original unity, liberality and brotherly love, and in its steadfast devotion to apostolic teaching and to worship, it is a model for all time. Its weak points were its failure to sympathize with the larger meaning of Christianity which came to such prophetic souls as Stephen and Paul, and its consequent failure to make the most of its opportunity as the mother church. It is the ideal which the New Testament furnishes of what a church should be that is our model, rather than any actual church which existed in the apostolic age.

Something or other, no matter what it is, has reminded us to say that the matter of being politic may be easily overdone. We have known many a good case spoiled by it. Somehow we learn to suspect the sincerity of a man who is controlled very largely by policy. The word politic is used in both a good and bad sense. In its good sense it means wise, prudent, sagacious; in its bad sense it means artful, unscrupulous, cunning. It is a nice thing to draw the line between the two, but an honest-hearted, courageous man is not likely to allow his prudence to lead him into mere artfulness in concealing his real position, nor his policy to degenerate into timorousness and duplicity. After all, the "shirt sleeve" type of diplomacy, which strikes straight at its point, is apt, in the long run, to win the respect of most people whose respect is worth having.

The department of "Sidelights on Current Events" in the "Globe- Democrat," contains a good deal of sense, as well as a good deal of humor, and not infrequently it expresses a religious sentiment that would do credit to the pulpit. In a recent number commenting upon a sermon on the subject of "Worldly Malaria" in the church in which the preacher had advised his congregation to "climb up to the hills of God" and escape the pestilence, the "Sidelights" fears that a good many people and many churches, even, will misconstrue this advice, and interpret it to mean "climbing to the hills of aristocratic localities and abandoning the fruitful fields of endeavor in the low slums." The following suggestions to the churches coming from the secular press, might well be taken to heart and put into practice. We have often felt that if men had a little more heroic work to do in the church they would have a great deal more interest in it, and their own spiritual life would thrive much better. The writer says:

> "Instead of draining these noxious moral swamps, and making them wholesome and fit, they leave them to their fate. And the miasma and poisonous vapors will rise and follow and overwhelm them.
> "They need to return, take off their coats and do a little ditch digging. Most of us would enjoy such labor. The churches complain of us that we do not attend services, but that may be because they give us nothing to do but to listen to platitudes.
> "The artifices of the Sunday-school picnic and the church fair may draw us out on their occasion, but it is for a worldly 'good time,' and not to seriously consider our obligations to God and man.
> "We like obstacles. We want work to do and difficulties to surmount. We want to fight the devil, not make a truce with him. Show us the swamps and where this moral malaria originates and let us clean them out."

The acting assistant editor is taking some liberties in the absence of editorial authority in quoting from a letter intended for the editor alone, but silences his scruples by suppressing the name of the author. He assumes responsibility for publishing the following excerpt because he believes it voices the sentiments of thousands of Disciples rising into fuller liberty and more splendid vision and who are becoming the stay and hope of this Restoration:

> "I am beginning the second year of my first pastorate after six years in one of our own universities. Among the many formative influences of my ministerial life and work, I count not the least the broad and sweet spirit of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I am one of the rising hosts of young men who have been with you in seeing the dawning of a better day for our cause and in thinking that its best interests lay in keeping abreast of the times and in watching for the leadership of the spirit of God in the movements of the day. You have been charged with being unsound in faith and with leading young men astray in the principles which you advocate; but I think you are saving the faith of many. Some years ago, when I began to think for myself, and found my hold on old traditions loosening, it was the preaching of ———, under whose ministry I sat for two years, and the teaching of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and the influence of such men as Brother ——— that helped me to see I was not losing faith, but was simply getting rid of some things that obscured the light. I believe that I have a clearer and firmer faith to-day because of your work, and that of such men as these. The Christian ministry has been made attractive by your ideals. I have sometimes thought that narrower influences might have driven me into skepticism during that critical period in my life; at least I do not think it would have attracted me to the ministry. I believe that many young men are being saved to the ministry and to Christian service by the spirit of such men as yourself.
> It was my pleasure recently to baptize a young lady who for several years had been struggling against skeptical views, unable to reach the faith for which she hungered. The simple presentation of Christ as the answer to all the soul's needs, and the beauty of the life which he lived, and the attractiveness of the call to service which he makes, appealed to her, and she is now a Christian.
> It is my firm conviction that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is the conservator of faith in these critical days. I would feel ungrateful if I did not express my appreciation of your work. Though not acquainted with you personally, I love you and these few words are from the depths of my heart."

Current Religious Thought.

How much we have in common with our denominational friends! Not only do we seek to glorify the same God and Father, and to enter through the same gate into the holy city, but we have many of their perplexities and barriers to the realization of our hopes. Last week's "Baptist Standard" contains an article on "Denominational Suicide" we might study with profit. From it we quote:

> "Leadership—intelligent, aggressive, devoted—is necessary to the progress and continuance of denominational life. The leadership of the future is to be found largely among the ranks of young men and women now enrolled in institutions of higher learning. These institutions present a field of missionary effort than which there is none whose promise is more justifiable or more fruitful. It was a mark of highest wisdom which led to the establishment of Christian associations in the centers of student life and it is a matter of great regret that in so many instances these associations have lost sight of their original purpose of evangelization.
> "But if the work of gaining new recruits for the kingdom of righteous from among the students in our colleges and universities is such a needed and strategic one, what shall be said of the need of conserving and developing the Christian life already there? What sentence shall be pronounced upon that general who, in the zeal for new conquests, leaves utterly unguarded the strategic field which has been hardly won, who abandons his base of supplies while reaching out after fresh territory? What sentence shall be pronounced upon that denomination which, winning youth to the service of Christ in the various local churches throughout the country, sends them out into the institutions of higher learning and leaves their freshly awakened spiritual natures uncared for, and that during the most critical period of their intellectual and spiritual life, amidst conditions which tend strongly to sap them not only of denominational loyalty, but even of the desire for Christian fellowship and service? Such abandonment is criminal so far as the youth are concerned; it is suicidal for the denomination. Because of this neglect our own denomination has lost from its ranks hundreds of men and women who began their university life as Baptists, but who, now, are using their culture and influence outside of the denomination which first possessed them. * * *
> "What are we, as Baptists, going to do about it? We may not, as indeed we can not, recover all the young life we have already lost, but we can safeguard the future. Some day, and that not in the distant future, some Baptist of large heart, large means, and that large sense of justice which will not allow him longer to discriminate between Baptist students in denominational schools and Baptist students in state universities, will handsomely endow this work of shepherding our youth in university centers, and so forever put an end to this denominational leakage and prevent this denominational suicide."

PENTWATER MUSINGS.

At this early morning hour, when no one about "The Pioneer" is stirring, profound quiet reigns, save the low swish of the lake. Scarcely a leaf trembles on the trees. Out yonder on the lake the fishermen's red boat with its white sails, on its way to the nets, is about the only sign of life that is visible. With almost the regularity of clockwork, does that fishermen's boat make its trip to the nets to gather in the night's harvest of fish. These hardy, stolid men in calm and storm pursue their craft, never elated, apparently, with success nor discouraged by failure. The best "catch" is only "tolerable" or "fair," and the biggest failure is only fishermen's luck. No doubt they possess some of the same traits which characterized those fishermen of Galilee whom Jesus called to be fishers of men. Now the sun, climbing above the hilltops east of us is lifting the mists from the lake and touching the thin clouds here and there with saffron and gold. The magic morning hour, the miracle of the dawn, with its stillness and the suggestion of mystery, is giving way to the glory of the day. A special charm attaches to all beginnings, whether it be the dawn of day, the opening rosebud, childhood, or the earliest premonitions of a higher and better civilization. He who slumbers away the hour of early dawn and sunrise, robs himself of the best hour of the day and one that may be made to tell most on the failure or success of the day. The "Morning Watch" should put all the sentinels of the soul on guard and kindle the fires of devotion to God and to duty.

We have not told our readers about our new office here on the lakeside. As a matter of fact, it has only been ready for use within the past few days. Unlike the editorial office at "Edgewood-on-the-Lake," this is an integral part of "The Pioneer" cottage. It is on the south side of the cottage, and has two windows, one facing south and the other west, both of them commanding a view of the lake, but the southern one of the woods as well. One who is fond of both the water and the trees is sometimes at a loss in choosing a location, as to whether he will go to the forest, or to the seaside or lakeside. But here we have the combination of lake and forest, and one may, without changing his seat, look out upon the one or the other as inclination may suggest. We have found it a distinct advantage to have a study window overlooking the lake and commanding a wide range of vision. It prevents one from being too provincial and circumscribed in his thoughts and sympathies. And then we like to gaze far out to the horizon line in the southwest toward St. Louis and the home office, and to think of all the interests which center there. The evening star, as it shines out in the western sky at this season, seems to direct the eye homeward, and to stand over the city which for a third of a century has been our home and the center of all our activities. The Christian-Evangelist has become so thoroughly identified with St. Louis that the very name of the city has become a synonym among us for a certain type of religious thought and influence, distinguished from others by its well known characteristics. The relation of this type of thought to the kingdom of God and to the permanent progress of our cause, is a matter we are willing to leave to the future historian.

Speaking of history, who of us cares to be judged by the passions and prejudices of the little hour in which he lives and labors. How small a matter is it if one should be misjudged and misunderstood, during the brief span of his active life, if his labor and influence should be able to stand the calm, judicial test of history! It was, no doubt, a painful experience for Paul to be estranged from his extremely conservative brethren because of the freedom and breadth of the Gospel which he preached, but how insignificant it was, after all, compared with the honor and affection which all Christendom has accorded him since his day! "His day," did we say? All the subsequent days since he lived and wrought have been his, because his life and teaching have contributed mightily for whatever glory and triumph they have achieved. Whoever links himself with God and truth, regardless of present consequences, and works unselfishly for the betterment of mankind, enters so largely into the life of the future that all the coming times are his. If we could all live and labor under the inspiration of this idea, truth would make more rapid progress in the world, and the kingdom of God would go forward by leaps and bounds. Yonder steamer, which, has just hove into view, and which will soon reach its port, little heeds the winds and waves which may have retarded its progress, if only it but reach its desired haven, bringing with it its precious cargo of human life. What will it matter to us, a thousand years from now, what the men of our time have said or thought about us, if only we have given the best there was in us for the good of humanity and the glory of God? One "well done" from the Master himself will more than offset the reproaches of a thousand critics who, like ourselves, have no power to discern the real motives which have controlled our lives.

This will be our last opportunity, before the offering for church extension, the first Lord's day in September, to urge upon our churches everywhere the importance of having a part in this offering. It is the union of effort that tells. That great lake that stretches out before us as we write, is but a vast combination of drops of water. In the long ago it was decreed that there should assemble together, in co-operative union, an infinite number of kindred drops of water, in this great basin, and Lake Michigan is the result! Great ships, carrying the commerce of the great states surrounding it, float upon its bosom, and innumerable tribes of fish swim beneath its surface, furnishing food for countless thousands. How different would have been the result if the various particles forming this great inland sea had declined to enter into the wider co-operation, because of their individual weakness! A thousand green, stagnant ponds, breeding mosquitoes and malaria, might thus have taken the place of the one great, sublime, life-giving and health-promoting Lake Michigan! Thus nature itself is teaching us the necessity of co-operation in every good work. How many poor, struggling churches might be floated out of the shallows of their present poverty and neglect, into the full sea of prosperity and usefulness if all the churches of the brotherhood were to unite their contributions in this church extension fund, which reaches out its brotherly hand to every struggling church within its reach! We can see many motives why the churches should unite in this offering, but we can not think of one, that is at all worthy and honorable, for refusing to do so. One of the special things to aim at this year, as it seems to us, is the enlistment of a much larger number of churches in this form of Christian benevolence. We trust that our ministers and church officials everywhere will interest themselves in seeing that this offering is made, and that their church has a part in the enlargement of the fund to a million dollars by the coming of our centennial.

Our summer colony here at Pentwater grows steadily, and the problem for the coming season will be to accommodate with cottages those who wish to come. Brother and Sister Richardson of Kansas City have arrived for a short stay and are guests at "The Pioneer." Brother Richardson has already tackled a fish that was too much for him, and lost part of his tackle and his fish, too, after a gallant fight in which the great fish led. Bro. C. M. Fillmore, of Cincinnati, who had just arrived, was with us in the boat and watched the encounter. Brother Fillmore is suffering from overwork and is here under his physician's order to rest. Brother Idleman, pastor at Paris, Ill., and a party of friends are expected next week seeking a summer resort for future use. Several members of the Campbell Institute expect to hold a "retreat" here at the club house the first week in September. Bro. J. H. Hardin, our Missouri superintendent of Bible schools, with his wife, are expected here to-day to spend Sunday with us. Bro. R. M. Denholme, manager "New Orleans Item," is expected here next week to join his family, who have taken a cottage in Pentwater. We have had several calls during the present week from readers of "Pentwater Musings" in different parts of the country, who could not resist the temptation to come and see for themselves. We have had a busy week, but it has been relieved by the faces of friends and by association with some of God's elect spirits. All together, now, for church extension and the Buffalo convention!

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

We are once more in London—London the pride and the problem of the race, a stone forest of houses, a rushing stream of faces, a metropolis covering 693 square miles, with 7,000 miles of streets, 900,000 houses, and 6,581,402 people. Of course it is big. It is the capital of a vast empire. The United Kingdom has 43,000,000 souls, and, including India, the empire has 385,348,000. London is the great city of the United Kingdom. Then come Glasgow, with 761,709; Liverpool, with 584,958; Manchester, with 543,872, and Birmingham, with 522,204. Next to London in the empire would be Calcutta, with 847,796, and Bombay, with 776,006. In the United Kingdom, that, is the British Isles alone, they consume 256,000,000 bushels of wheat yearly, or six bushels per head, and 1,234 million gallons of beer, or 28.8 gallons per head, and 256½ million pounds of tea, or six pounds per head. Their coal production the past year was 232,428,272 tons; iron ore, 13,774,282 tons, and wool, 132 million pounds. Their shipping showed a tonnage—sailing vessels for these islands alone, 1,802,667, and steam vessels, 8,751,853. Such is England, and London is its capital.

There are many Americans here—over 30,000 live and do business in the city. If Americans do not feel a pride in the mother country they are not true Americans. Landing at Plymouth their feet touch the figures "1620"; at the dock at Gravesend they drop a tear on the tomb of Pocahontas, the Indian princess, in St. George's Church; in Warwickshire they see on the gravestones the names of the ancestors of Virginia colonists, and in London the memorials and associations of William Rogers and Sir Henry Vane, Washington and Franklin and Benjamin West, John Harvard and George Peabody, Lincoln and Lowell and Longfellow and Phillips Brooks. And have they not a common heritage, a common Bible, a common language, a common work and a common destiny?

A cleaner or better governed city than London can not be found. It has many features which might be copied with advantage by us. There are 28 boroughs, each borough with its mayor, annually elected, with aldermen and councillors, the boroughs varying in population from 26,968 to 334,928. The mayor of Shoreditch, Mr. Thomas Burnell, is a Disciple of 35 years' experience in the metropolis, and to him I was indebted for many courtesies. Shoreditch has a population of 118,705. The "city" proper is one of the boroughs, and covers a square mile, with 30,000 people by night, 1,130,000 by day. The city corporation can claim an antiquity greater than that of the "mother of parliaments," for a charter was granted to it by William I. The first mayor was appointed in 1189, and the title "lord mayor" was given by Edward III. This official marks his coming to office by proceeding in state on November 9 to the Royal Courts of Justice to be sworn in, and then by giving a banquet the same evening at Guildhall which costs him, with the "show," $20,000, so his salary of $50,000 for the year of his incumbency easily goes. In "the city" the lord mayor takes precedence of everybody save the king. The city has two sheriffs, 25 aldermen and 206 members of the council, elected annually by the taxpayers, and a police force of 1,000 men, while all London has a force of 17,000. It costs $75,000,000 annually to run the government of London, and it has a debt of $229,000,000. The last 10 years it added 600,000 people. It has 166,670 paupers, and its voluntary offerings for charity exceed $25,000,000. It is blessed with more hospitals than any city on earth, and on "Hospital Sunday" all the churches take offerings, and ladies station themselves at the street corners to receive gifts, $225,000 being the receipts of the day.

Guildhall is the stately civic palace associated in the popular mind with the great banquet of Lord Mayor's Day, when the members of the government make their political pronouncements. It has been the scene of some of the most stirring episodes in English history. Nearly every crowned head in Europe has been feted here, and all the leading statesmen, soldiers and sailors and men who have been honored with "the freedom of the city." In the great hall elections are held, and the great feasts are given and the famous deliverances made. Gog and Magog, two huge wooden figures, stand near the entrance. Its council chamber and aldermanic court room are most sumptuously decorated. There is a library, with 115,000 volumes, and a museum of great interest, with antiquities and curiosities, old Roman remains and shop and tavern signs, such as the "Boar's Head," connected with Falstaff and Bluff Prince Hal, Goldsmith and many others of England's characters.

A history of Guildhall would be a history of the nation. Here we see Richard Coeur-de-Lion in Crusader times, and Fitz Walter, when the citizens lend aid to the barons in wresting from John the charter of England's liberties. Here, in 1529, is the first banquet on Lord Mayor's Day, and here Charles I is feted, and Cromwell, the first Englishman of his time. Here it looks forth upon the great plague in 1665, which carried off one-fifth of the inhabitants, and the great fire, which consumed, in 1666, 13,000 houses. It can tell of Wat Tyler's rebellion and Jack Cade's; of the fires of Smithfield, when Mary burned the martyrs; of the Armada; of Marlborough, who comes to it with 89 standards taken at Ramillies, and of William Pitt receiving the freedom of the city. It reminds us how, when our trouble with the mother country was on, citizens met here and drew up "respectful but solemn warning against the fatal policy pursued by the king's ministers toward the American colonies," and again petitioning King George "to suspend hostilities and adopt such conciliatory measures as might restore union and confidence and peace to the whole empire." Here we see the Duke of Wellington, Peel, Russell, Livingstone, Gladstone, Disraeli, Salisbury, Shaftsbury, Nelson, Colin Campbell, Wolsely, Roberts and Kitchener; Victoria, in 1837, and again with Albert in 1851, and again the splendors of the jubilee. Over its front we may read the words, "Domina Dirige Nos—"the Lord direct us"—as we see over the Royal Exchange, "The Earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof," and over the very drinking fountains, "The Fear of the Lord is the Fountain of Life"; and while statues are here of Nelson and Wellington and other great Englishmen, one observes over the entrance images of stone representing Law, Learning, Dis-

GOOD NIGHT'S SLEEP

No Medicine so Beneficial to Brain and Nerves.

Lying awake nights makes it hard to keep awake and do things in day time. To take "tonics and stimulants" under such circumstances is like setting the house on fire to see if you can put it out.

The right kind of food promotes refreshing sleep at night and a wide awake individual during the day.

A lady changed from her old way of eating, to Grape-Nuts, and says:

"For about thre years I had been a great sufferer from indigestion. After trying several kinds of medicine, the doctor would ask me to drop off potatoes, then meat, and so on, but in a few days that craving, gnawing feeling would start up, and I would vomit everything I ate and drank.

"When I started on Grape-Nuts, vomiting stopped, and the bloating feeling which was so distressing disappeared entirely.

"My mother was very much bothered with diarrhea before commencing the Grape-Nuts, because her stomach was so weak she could not digest her food. Since using Grape-Nuts she is well, and says she don't think she could live without it.

"It is a great brain restorer and nerve builder, for I can sleep as sound and undisturbed after a supper of Grape-Nuts as in the old days when I could not realize what they meant by a "bad stomach." There is no medicine so beneficial to nerves and brain as a good night's sleep, such as you can enjoy after eating Grape-Nuts."

cipline, Justice, Fortitude, Temperance, with the figure of Christ surmounting the whole, which will set forth the spirit of the city and of the nation.

My friend Mr. Burnell showed me through the public buildings of his borough. Nothing interested me so much in London as the municipal provisions for the people. I went through the public baths and wash houses. Hundreds of thousands are invested in a single plant. Shoreditch, for example, has two of these institutions. Accommodations are provided for hundreds of men and women. A first-class bath for 12½ cents, hot water, soap, towels and every comfort. A second-class, quite as good, with all necessaries, for five cents. Connected with each class is a large swimming pool, and in winter these are covered over, furnishing large halls for gatherings of every kind. Wash houses are fitted up with modern machinery, and poor women come and for three cents an hour are provided with hot water, tubs, machines operated by steam for drying and pressing, and every essential to the care of the week's washing. A free library and reading room belong to the plant. Another feature we may well imitate is the public lavatories in the streets at convenient locations all over London. They are built under the pavement at the chief crossings, cost from $2,000 to $3,000, have conveniences for both men and women, free for those who have no money, and private, with soap, towels, hot water and even bath, for those who prefer to pay a few pennies. They pay the boroughs and are a blessing to the people. Think of our good city of Washington without even one such public convenience along the whole of Pennsylvania avenue, though often thronged as it is every four years by half a million people! Another thing is the "safeties"—little reserved elevated places around the street lamps in the great thoroughfares to which men and women and children may stop for security in the rush of traffic. Who does not bless the city fathers of London for this little contrivance! Everything about London seems for the people—schools, thousands of acres in parks and gardens for their enjoyment, crime reduced to a minimum, sanitation as near perfect as can be, 'busses taking you everywhere for two cents, and the best police force and safest streets in the world.

B. B. Tyler on the Jerusalem Church

By J. W. McGarvey

I am one of those who regard the original church in Jerusalem as a model, as "the mother of us all," and my wrath was naturally kindled by Brother Tyler's criticisms upon her in The Christian-Evangelist of August 16. For fear that the faults which this genial and talented writer finds with her shall be accepted by many as real faults, I come to her defense.

The first fault found is that, while she was an example in caring for her poor, her charity "was not dignified and orderly. The members meant well, but in a short time they were in a snarl because some were, as they thought, neglected in the distribution of alms." Now, it is unjust to say that the church was in a snarl; for this murmuring came from only a small minority, and the church immediately prevented a snarl by appointing seven men of the dissatisfied party to take charge of the whole business, as much as to say, You think your widows are comparatively neglected; now we turn over the whole business, including the care of our widows, into your hands. This was the action of the church, and was it not a model in this particular? It buried the murmuring under an avalanche of generosity and hushed it forever.

The second fault found is that this church was anti-missionary. This charge has become quite common with brethren who have more zeal for missions than discretion in their advocacy of them. "It made no attempt," says Brother Tyler, "to herald the good news to the whole creation." This is true up to the death of Stephen. And why? The apostles had been commanded to begin at Jerusalem; and such was their success in that city that the number of their converts was daily increasing and multiplying up to the very day in which Stephen was stoned, and the disciples, all except the apostles, were compelled to flee to save their lives. Up to that moment it had appeared as if the whole city would be won to Christ in a short time. Was that a time for any of the apostles to leave Jerusalem and go to Samaria? He who thinks so would have interrupted Scoville in the midst of his great meeting in Anderson, when sinners were confessing the Lord by the score every day, and have said to him, "See here, my brother, they need the gospel down here on Goose creek more than they do in Anderson; leave here and go down there." And when this church was dispersed by the persecution did the members prove themselves anti-missionary? Everybody answers, No; for "they went everywhere preaching the gospel. Though they had lost their homes and all their earthly possessions, they persevered in the good work which had brought all this upon them.

But Brother Tyler says: "It is more than probable that an uncircumcised Gentile believer would not have been given a welcome to the Lord's table." This is not only probable, but it is certain; and for the very good reason that in the wisdom of Christ the time had not yet come for uncircumcised Gentiles to be thus received. The model church is one that follows her Lord; not one who runs ahead of him.

Again, Brother Tyler says: "The most conspicuous member of this church did not, for a long time, understand that in every nation he who fears God and works righteousness is acceptable to him." This was because the question who is acceptable to God is, with true believers, a subject of revelation, and God had not yet made the revelation. Peter did not understand that he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, until it was revealed to him. The model church hearkens to its Lord and leans not upon its own understanding.

"The Jerusalem church was pretty narrow. Don't you think so?" This, with many, is the severest charge of all. With some persons to be narrow is the worst of faults in a church. They run on the broad gauge themselves—broad enough to take in the world, the flesh and a good deal of the devil. They toss their caps and shout because they are in the broad way, not seeing to what gate it leads, and they sneer at those who are so narrow as to keep within the narrow way that leads to the other gate. Call a man narrow, and you have got him down. There is an excess of boldness in applying this epithet to the church founded and guided by the inspired apostles. If it was narrow, the Lord save the rest of us from being broad.

But finally Brother Tyler finds that Paul thought too little of this church to call it a model, and that it thought very little of Paul. But while Paul nowhere

DUBIOUS

About What Her Husband Would Say.

A Mich. woman tried Postum Food Coffee because ordinary coffee disagreed with her and her husband. She writes:

"My husband was sick for three years with catarrh of the bladder, and palpitation of the heart, caused by coffee. Was unable to work at all and in bed part of the time.

"I had stomach trouble, was weak and fretful so I could not attend to my housework—both of us using coffee all the time and not realizing it was harmful.

"One morning the grocer's wife said she believed coffee was the cause of our trouble and advised Postum. I took it home rather dubious about what my husband would say—he was fond of coffee.

"But I took coffee right off the table and we haven't used a cup of it since. You should have seen the change in us and now my husband never complains of heart palpitation any more. My stomach trouble went away in two weeks after I began Postum. My children love it and it does them good, which can't be said of coffee.

"A lady visited us who was always half sick. I told her I'd make her a cup of Postum. She said it was tasteless stuff, but she watched me make it, boiling it thoroughly for 15 minutes, and when done she said it was splendid. Long boiling brings out the flavor and food quality." Read the the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

calls the Jerusalem church a model, he does say of it that though the literal Jerusalem was in bondage with her children, "The Jerusalem that is above is free, which is our mother," and by this Jerusalem he means the Jerusalem church. Paul could never severely criticize his mother; and he never did. But, says Brother Tyler, "Paul did not stand well in that church." It is true that when he returned from his persecuting trip to Damascus the apostles were slow to believe that he had become a disciple; it is true that certain men from that church came to Antioch and contended that his Gentile converts must be circumcised and keep the law; and it is true that many members of that church, at a later period, were prejudiced against him because of a false report which had come to them; but in every instance, on being properly informed the church sustained and honored him. Is not this the way for a model church?

Brother Tyler is too good-humored a man to be laying violent hands on "the mother of us all."

Modern Religious Persecution---A Defense

By B. L. Chase

7. Sorrows of Persecutors.

Do not think that the persecutor is void of feeling when he shows no sympathy for the suffering of the condemned heretic, or refuses to bestow a kind word upon his afflicted and humiliated family. He knows that these things must be; and that these light afflictions, which are for the moment, work out a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory for the brotherhood and the venerable company of persecutors. He knows that by the divine law the sins of the fathers must be visited upon the children to the third and fourth generation. Why should these things move him? The persecutor has troubles of his own, contrary to the popular opinion. Is it no pain to him, think you, when a heretic escapes by the breaking down of the case against him? When the brethren of the leading churches continue him in good standing and full fellowship after being pronounced unworthy of fellowship? When he is given a place on a national convention program after being called a "Unitarian" and an "Alien"? When those who take no stock in the infallibility of persecutors and have no fear of them, are called "leading men among us"? When the very condemned are appointed by the brotherhood to represent them in interdenominational meetings? When missionary and educational enterprises prosper after they have been condemned by the persecutor? Has he no feeling? Such things are enough to bring tears from a heart of stone! No, the persecutor is human, if he is infallible; he can suffer for some things, if he can not suffer for the accused.

It has been said that one peculiarly sensitive and tender-hearted persecutor lay awake all one night because a college continued to use in its classes a book which he condemned as "infidel." Another has steadily lost flesh because the Disciples refuse to make his "convictions" a test of fellowship among their churches. It has been a continual sorrow to all persecutors that the leading pastors and churches do not join heartily in the various persecutions and they stand hourly in dread lest the Disciples will oppose all persecution as contrary to the Spirit of Christ.

Another thing that gives the persecutor sorrow is the enmity of the man he has condemned to punishment as a heretic. The ill will of any man is a sorrow to him, much more that of a man whose soul he seeks to save. Very few heretics ever recognize the motive that lies back of their persecution. They will not endure correction. Their pride of opinion, their love of liberty and fairness stand in the way of their souls' health. They do not realize that the persecutor loves the one he chastens; and that his fatherly hand applies the rod because it is needed. What child ever did receive the rod as it was given? A part of the test which the persecutor applies to the heretic is the way in which he treats his correction. If he repents of his errors and accepts the "convictions" of the persecutor he is forgiven and received back into favor. If he rebels and resents it, that alone is sufficient evidence that his heart is not right. Every persecutor knows how liable to be wrong in the heart is every man who is wrong in the head. The justness of their persecution on account of his opinions is frequently confirmed by the indifferenec of the persecuted to the words of Christ. The persecutors always admonish them to receive their persecution as becometh the sons of God. Jesus said: "Love your enemies and pray for them that persecute you." How many persecuted heretics ever do? They entertain hard feelings toward their persecutors, and call them "popish" and "bigoted." How ungrateful toward their benefactors who have sought only their good and that of the truth! When they are smitten by their persecutor they smite back; whereas Christ taught that his disciples should not resist evil, but when smitten upon one cheek should turn the other. What sorrow it must give a persecutor to see one who professes to be a follower of Christ smite back! That is evidence enough that such a one is unworthy of fellowship. But worst of all it frequently happens that churches among the Disciples keep such persons in their membership.

Another thing that gives the persecutor sorrow is his temptation to pay heed to his humane impulses. He would flee from his task with horror if he did not view it as the surgeon views his work. Human sympathy and the moral consciousness would drive him to despair if he were to forget the missionary and benevolent purpose of his work. It is a horrible thing to go suddenly to a man who is happily, earnestly and acceptably carrying on his work as a teacher in a college, and say to him, "You must resign your place here and cease forever to be a teacher among the Disciples." It is like the coming of a death summons to a man in the bloom of health. Many a man loves his teaching, his college, and his scholars so devotedly that he could almost as easily give up his life as give up his work. It is enough to make a persecutor pause before blasting such a man's happiness and usefulness. No small offense could tempt a good man to ruin another man's usefulness. It is the last depth of malignity of nature to do so under cover of zeal for the "truth," "our plea," or "the good of the cause." No "cause" or institution is more important than common fairness or humanity. No cause can long survive at the expense of them.

And yet the persecutor's duty calls upon him to take away that which is as sweet as life itself. His humanity often revolts at it. He would listen to the voices of his humanity and conscience if there were not other voices in his soul more imperative and commanding. Another voice in his soul says: "There is a professor in a certain college who is reported to be teaching the higher criticism to his students. The students, in their simplicity, like it, and will carry it among the churches, and the people, in their simplicity, will like it too. And then we will disappear as a brotherhood. I must get that teacher out of that school or we will disappear as a brotherhood." Such is his unanswerable logic.

It is the superior, long look ahead that characterizes the persecutor, as well as the certainty of his conviction. It is this that nerves the surgeon for his work. He can remove the arm, leg or eye of a patient with real pleasure because he knows it will be for the health of the whole body. He is thinking of the rest of the body that is imperiled by the diseased member. He follows his medical conviction, just as the persecutor follows his religious conviction. The only difference is that in most cases the sick man gives himself willingly into the hands of the surgeon, knowing himself to be in danger; while the heretic, not knowing himself to be diseased and to be endangering the health of the whole body of Disciples, objects to being put into the hands of his persecutors.

The persecutor does for the whole body of Disciples what each Christian is commanded to do for himself. "If thine eye cause thee to stumble, pluck it out, and cast it from thee; it is good for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes, to be cast into hell fire." There are men among the Disciples who seem as precious to them as an eye to the body; but if we are likely to disappear as a brotherhood on account of their teaching, better drive them from us than pass into extinction. Who is going to perform the doctrinal surgery for the Disciples if not our persecutors? It must be done; the bad doctrine must be exposed and the teacher of it removed. If he will not remove himself, it must be done for him, and against his will. Let us sympathize with our persecutors in their troubles and sorrows.

What the Brethren Are Saying and Doing

By B. B. Tyler

Does prohibition prohibit? If the prohibition of the liquor traffic does not prohibit, if as much intoxicating liquor is sold where there is a prohibitory law as where there is a license law, why are men who are interested in the sale of liquor universally opposed to prohibition? Facts show, however, beyond a peradverture, that prohibition prohibits. San Francisco from the 20th of April until the Fourth of July was under prohibition. It is said that so strictly was prohibition enforced during this period of time that a man caught with a bottle of liquor in his pocket was shot down dead. This statement seems to me to be an exaggeration. Let it pass as such. This, however, is a fact that from April 18th to July 4th, with thousands of homeless people in the city, and thousands of visitors from north, south, east and west, in San Francisco, to see the sights, the arrests of the evil doers were only from two to six a day. In all the turmoil and confusion of the tens of thousands of homeless people, and the influx of uncounted thousands of visitors, such order prevailed that the police force, according to its own statement, had nothing to do.

San Francisco is now granting licenses to sell intoxicating liquors, the license fee is now $500, as against $85 prior to the earthquake. What is the result in the immediate and visible result? The first Monday after the opening of the saloons there were seventy-four cases before the police courts as against five the preceding Monday. Seventy-two on Friday, as against two on the previous Friday, and the second Monday one hundred and thirteen as against three or four the second Monday before reopening the saloons.. Let these facts stand out before the eyes of our readers in majestic capitals.

Why did San Francisco decide to reopen the liquor saloons? The standing argument everywhere is, "the city needs and must have the revenue from the saloons." It is said that before the disastrous earthquake and fire in the month of April there were 3,400 saloons in the Golden Gate City. It cost the people of the municipality, so it is said, and the statement is not unreasonable, $737,160 more to pay for police protection alone than the amount of revenue received by the city from the saloons: And this is business!! A company of ordinary preachers could do better than that!!!

"The Commerce Monthly" is "a chronicle of banking and financial news," published in St. Louis. In its issue of August 14, it contained the following on the editorial page:

BUSINESS AND "THE LID."

The awakening of the public conscience, as is evidenced by the so-called putting on of "the lid" in numerous places in the land, is certainly a matter for congratulation by law-abiding citizens. It is a matter of congratulation, not so much because it has made a large reduction in a certain class of crime, as because people who have for years considered a "wide open" town necessary for prosperous business conditions have found out differently.

Business—and by business is meant finance as well as trade—is in no wise allied with riotous living. For a time, to be sure, a "wide open" town may seem to be the most prosperous and thriving, but when the real test is made it will be found that the law-abiding and conservative community makes the best showing.

Furthermore a city which "puts on the lid" and stands by it comes to be well spoken of abroad, as note by the following in the "Indianapolis Star," which says:

> "The lid" is on in St. Louis tighter to-day than it has ever been. There is no back door, no side door, no slipping in. And what is the result? In the first place, they have quit killing people on Sunday to make a St. Louis holiday. The coroner has far less work to do, and the morgue keeper has a chance to read the newspapers. There are now fewer than one hundred prisoners in the city jail—a state of affairs not paralleled in years—and a recent report of the police department record shows that crime has fallen off something like 70 per cent in twelve months. The facts are eloquent. St. Louis has come to know "the lid" and likes it.

The same condition exists in other cities where the experiment has been given a fair trial. And can any one say that from a business standpoint St. Louis isn't as prosperous now and doing as great business and growing as rapidly or more so than ever before? Sobriety and a strict observance of all laws is the best plan for any city.

Do not fail, please, to note that this quotation is not from a "cranky" temperance publication. "The Commerce Monthly" is a strictly business paper. It claims to number "among its subscribers nearly every progressive banking institution in the country," the copy from which I quote I picked up in the United States National Bank in Denver. It is a sign of the times when such papers as "The Commerce Monthly" and "The Indianapolis Star" use such language as is here recited.

"The Denver Republican" this morning, announces that "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" are holding a ten days' meeting in one of our city parks. This meeting represents the church with the long name in the eastern part of Colorado. The announcement explains that "this church has no affiliation with 'the Latter Day Saints of Utah,' or 'Mormons,' as they are better known, and repudiates their polygamous teachings and many of their other doctrines." The headquarters of "the Reorganized church" is at Lamoni, Iowa.

"Mormonism" is an "issue" and "a live question in this part of the world." I smile when I read in eastern papers that "the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," of the Utah variety, has given up the doctrine of plural marriages and the practice of polygamy. There is not a word of truth in this statement—not a word. Their missionaries in Denver go from house to house teaching the doctrine of polygamy. This is their specialty. I met two of their "elders" in a home in this city, in which they insisted on setting forth the doctrine of plural marriage. They are contemptible sneaks. When you have an opportunity to meet them, do so. When you meet them, do not treat them as gentlemen. If you do so you will make a mistake. Proceed to wipe the earth with them. This is what I did and I have not been able to meet one of them since. This was a private seance, the "elders" were so sure of their position that they expressed a desire to meet me in the home of the lady where they had insisted on talking up polygamy. They said to her: "We will be delighted to meet your pastor and discuss matters with him in your presence. We do not desire anything better. You will at once see the superiority of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in its doctrine, to the church of which you are a member." The scoundrels will not meet me again. You think the word "scoundrel" is too strong." That is because you are not acquainted with the doctrines, the methods, the practices, of the Mormons.

In the political field, they hold the balance of power in a number of states in this great Rocky Mountain empire. Reed Smoot has recently been in Idaho and here are some of the things that he is reported to have said:

The Mormons can dictate their own terms in Idaho this fall, and this I can declare to you officially.

Our colonization of certain counties is full and complete to assure the right returns. I have personally made the canvass. In the next legislature in that state the balance of power will be held by the Mormons and the Democrats and Republicans alike will find a futility of effort without Mormon support.

We are a great power and our power will grow and our enemies must reckon with us.

There is much more of the same kind for which there is not space in this letter. There is "a Mormon menace." Believe me, my brother, this statement is more than a mere alliteration.

Denver, Colorado.

I am tired of planning and toiling
In the crowded hives of men;
Heart-weary of building and spoiling,
And spoiling and building again.
And I long for the dear old river,
Where I dreamed my youth away;
For a dreamer lives forever,
And a toiler dies in a day.

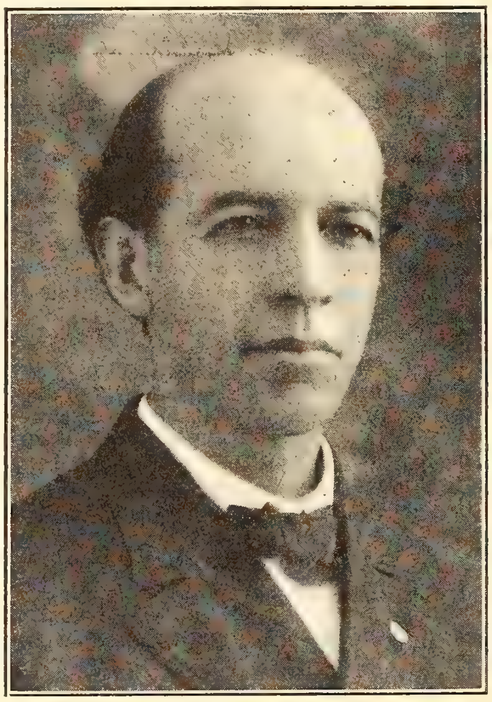
Why I Became a Christian Preacher

By S. R. Maxwell

Ships are turned by helms, horses are turned by rein and bit, and men, if they have any brains, are turned by the power of ideas.

I was a Methodist preacher for nine years, and I am now and have been for the past eight years a preacher in the ranks of the current Reformation. I was induced to leave Methodism and champion the plea of the Christian church on account of the compelling power of new ideas.

To begin with, I believed in Christian union and I was convinced that Christians could not get together on any sectarian basis. "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." Sow the Methodist discipline and you grow Methodists. Sow the Augsburg confession and you grow Lutherans. Sow the Thirty-nine Articles and the prayer book and you grow Episcopalians. Sow the Westminster confession and you grow Presbyterians. Ideas are seeds and they have an inveterate tendency to produce their kind. It became clear to me that if you want a uniform crop you must sow uniform seed; uni form, that is seed of one form. Now, I had read in the New Testament that "We are born not of corruptible seed but of incorruptible, even the Word of God which liveth and abideth forever." Then it became clear to my mind that the only way to bring about union was on the Word of God alone, divorced from all human opinions whatsoever. When I arrived at this conclusion I was living in the city of Wilmington, Del., and I went to Washington, D. C., and had an interview with Bro. W. J. Wright, who is now corresponding secretary of the A. C. M. S., and in my opinion splendidly equipped for the position. I related my experience to him and stated my views. He smiled, and when I had finished he said: "My good brother, you stand exactly where we as a people stand. We stand for union on a platform that can never be brought into the realm of debate amongst Protestants. We stand for union (1) on the creed of the New Testament church, "Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God; (2) on the ordinances of the New Testament church, baptism and the Lord's supper; (3) on the life of the New Testament church, that of love expressing itself in self-sacrifice for the salvation of others.



S. R. Maxwell.

I consider it fortunate for me that I came into contact with the plea of the Christian Church incarnated in the person of such a broad, deep, intelligent man as Brother Wright is. Ideas influence men but men also influence ideas. An idea is a compressible thing and sometimes it gets into a small man. The broad, universal, reconciling, harmonizing principles in the platform of the Christian church become narrow and sectarian when they pass through the mental processes of some men. "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle" than it is for the great ideas presented to the religious world by Alexander Campbell to pass through the narrow passages of some men's brains without becoming narrow and savagely sectarian.

What won me was not that the Christian church is the only church that is infallibly right, but that the Christian church is the only organization amongst Protestants or anywhere else that presents a platform for union composed of principles that never have been in dispute, are not now in dispute and never can be brought into dispute amongst Protestants. The plea is well expressed in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

"In faith, unity; in opinions and methods, liberty; in all things, charity." I rest on this platform, and if any one can show me one that is superior, I will move instantly.

The Waning Sense of Sin

By JAMES NORVEL CRUTCHER

Is sin, after all, so sinful? With the "new theology," the "new happiness," and "the new faith," have we not a new sense of sin? And is not this new sense the warp and woof of present-day waywardness and disobedience? Sin was once said to be garbed in flaming apparel and preachers sought new and frightful words to tell the depths of despair into which a sinner would fall. Sin was thought to sear men's hearts, wither their hopes, blight their lives and destroy them eternally. Sin was pictured as a "hideous monster, of so terrible a mien, that to be hated was but to be seen," and this enemy of all that is pure and true was said to stalk up and down the highways of the earth, "seeking whom he may devour." The devil was the "bad man" of every child's life, and the hated intruder into many hearts. A revival without a sermon on fire and brimstone was out of the ordinary. Prayers were punctuated with references to the "worm that dieth not and the fire that is not quenched." Frightened sinners were held over the yawning abyss, and sulphurous fumes filled the air. Hymns of the times were filled with hints of the awful doom that awaited the rebellious and unrepentant souls. Exhorters waxed eloquent in their descriptions of "sinners in the hands of an angry God."

From these things the religious world has drifted to the extreme of excusing sin, of silence on many of the popular sins of the times. After all, the devil is not so bad—if there is a devil! He has laid aside the crimson cowl of Mephisto and is now a "jolly good fellow," companion for saints, all garbed in the pale winding sheets of self esteem and appreciation. "Boys will be boys, you know," and there is always virgin soil for wild oats. The prophet declared that the time would come when men "would not endure sound doctrine, but would gather unto themselves teachers after their own lusts." And under the present-day way of looking at things, sin has become simply "the prosecution of nature's plan for the advancement of the inhabitants of the earth," and evil has become "a phase of good." There is a strong tendency to shade the differences between light and dark, between truth and error. Men are in grave danger of forgetting that there is a kingdom of darkness and a kingdom of light. Men now approach the facts of life from time rather than eternity; they look at the human heart from the human standpoint and measure life by the human standard. It is not what sinful men think of themselves but what God thinks about them. It is not fair to measure ourselves by ourselves. Men are as unwise to-day, with all of the conceit of the times, as they were when the apostles preached against sin. To become wise they must now, as then, lay their lives once more against the law of God, and learn, from the fearful discrepancy which such a course reveals, that God can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance. Sin is a fearful, tragic reality. We see its ravages on every hand. Jesus was delivered for our offenses. If we have not offended, then the story of the cross "descends to the level of a mere incident in the history of hate." If it is not true that "all have sinned" and "must appear before the judgment seat of Christ," then it is not true that "the blood of Jesus cleanses from sin." Not only is sin the doing of violence to the soul itself, but "the decay of love, the enfeebling of will, and the general atrophy of the nature." Into a world of misery and soul-hunger, along whose shores are scattered the ruins of thousands of men, "made in the divine image," the Christ has come to restore. Damning sin and saving love must go hand in hand in the preaching that we do to-day.

African Missions and the Uncompleted Chain*

Swift movements of Divine Providence mark the Africa of to-day. What was, until recently the ancient continent of weirdness and strange mysteries, is now the modern land of keen effort and intelligent study. Here the maker of states and the maker of money alike contend, flanked by the missionary, the anthropologist, and the student of flora and fauna. The statesman, the speculator, the missionary and the scientist all find in this gaunt and giant stretch of blackness a real and rugged field for endeavor and achievement.

This land the statesman has parcelled and colonized and is fast Europeanizing, the speculator has exploited and opened, and is fast commercializing, the scientist has traversed and observed, and is fast classifying. At last this slow-going continent of the ages moves with modern alertness. A new Africa is thus emerging from the mist and darkness that so long enveloped the old.

But what of the missionary and his labors? The statesman has his chain of colonies, protectorates and dependencies; the speculator has his traffic chain of rail, caravan and waterways, and along these the scientist pushes his observation and study.

Is the missionary left behind in this grand march of new Africa progress? Not so. To learn the contrary, one has but to note the white dots on the black surface of Africa's missionary map. These mission stations now skirt the entire coastline and are penetrating the tropics from all sides—from Egypt up the Nile into the Soudan, from the east into Uganda and around the great lakes; from the south, up beyond the Zambezi River, and from the west coast, up the waterways of the great Congo and its tributaries. Missionary progress in Africa is indeed the striking chapter in recent church history. But not to be carried away by the enthusiasm of accomplishment, a sober facing of these great reaches of unevangelized background sometimes suggests that phrase applied to the church, viz., "Playing at Missions."

Beginning at the Cape-end of the great continent, the traveler, considering the long residence in that section of the two European peoples, expects to find the largest and best result of Christian missions in Africa. But territory rather than teaching has mostly occupied the European, the securing of the one to himself, not the imparting of the other to the native. But the first may be the best and necessary way to get at the other. And then "gold" rather than "gospel" is in the ascendancy in South Africa. The Christian (and he is in bonds to give the gospel to primitive as to all races) can not but wish that there had been, and even now was, less strife to get and more striving to give, less eagerness to secure land and wealth, and more eagerness to save life and soil.

However, despite these serious adverse circumstances in South Africa of political and gold greed, the Lord's work is not without large marks of blessing. Thousands of Zulus and Basutos are regularly hearing the Gospel of Christ. In addition to the activities of the missionary societies of the different churches, there are the labors of the South African general mission with centers at Capetown, Durban and Johannesburg, and with work in Zululand, Pondoland, Basutoland, Gazaland, and extending north into Portuguese territory.

It is a cause for great thanksgiving that large sections of the Boer Church are taking new and fresh interest in the work of giving the Gospel to the natives. The founding of the missionary training school by the Dutch Church, was necessitated by a remarkable movement of the Holy Spirit among the young Boers, who at the time were prisoners of war at such places as St. Helena and Ceylon. This movement, while not of the same range and scope as the Welsh revival, was, in its true inwardness, most like to that wave of the Holy Spirit which swept so many young men into the way and work of Christ. These Boer volunteers for country, for the time captives of war, at once became volunteers for God and missions. "Het Boren Gesunden Institute," known as "de Drostdy" (Worcester Cape-colony) came into being with this new missionary life, generated by the Spirit of God, and thus captive volunteers became "student volunteers." Such men as Abram Louw, Mr. Murray and Pastor DeVilliers have occasion "to thank God and take courage" in view of his movement of the Holy Spirit with which God has honored and used them. The missionary work of the Boer church is to-day a telling one in British Central Africa. One is sure to read with quickening interest that book by the Boer missionary secretary, "Thousand Miles in the Heart of Africa."

But there is no more striking or remarkable work in any section than that of the equatorial regions. Entering the tropics from the east coast, the traveler at once learns of the C. M. S. work with its bishop and new cathedral, and scattered missionaries.

The recently organized American work, known as the Africa Inland Mission, has its six or more stations along the general direction of the railroad through British East Africa. Some of their mission stations are situated a few miles back of the line and are doing a work in populous and quite neglected districts.

The American Society of Friends less than three years ago established a station known as Kaimosi, situated about twenty-five miles north of Kavirondo gulf (in Victoria Nyanza). This is the only Protestant mission to the large Kavirondo tribe—a people friendly to the government, quite industrious, and although walking about in their native nudity, they are an exceptionally moral tribe. It is to be hoped that the friends will multiply stations among these people.

Doubtless the C. M. S. whose aggressive bishop in Uganda has already itinerated there will soon be pushing work up the slopes of Mount Elgon and take the story of grace to the neglected, and in some parts, hostile peoples there. This mountain, over 14,000 feet high, has an active volcanic crater some eight miles in diameter and seven hundred feet in depth. The cave dwellers are there, and it is to be hoped that the Gospel will be carried to them and to all the environing peoples, and their spoken languages reduced to writing.

The Nandi tribe adjoins the Kavirondo on the east. They are a fierce and warlike people. Against them the British government has recently completed a considerable and successful expedition. No mission exists among these savages. May the evangel of the missionary soon come to them and lead them from the warfare of cruelty and destruction to the warfare of faith and holiness.

To the south lies German East Africa which, despite what has already been done, has yet remaining vast tracts of unevangelized land.

The C. M. S. work, which, as already stated, begins at Mombasa on the east coast, continues with increasing intensity and influence in Uganda. This aggressive work, with its well equipped quota of missionaries, its many native Christians and church buildings, its excellent Uganda Bible and literature, its native pastors and teachers, is all too well known for detailed description here. Pushing westward from Uganda's port, on the great Nyanza, the traveler, during sixteen days of marching, sees more of this work as he continues into the country of Toro.

Here on the slopes of proud snow-crowned Ruwenzori is another strong center of C. M. S. work, of the same policy and stamp as that of Uganda, and connected therewith. With its native pastor, teachers, churches and schools, this work is fast giving to the country, as we think should be the aim always, a native church, which could in any event of wisdom or necessity become self perpetuating. As in Uganda, this Toro work evidently began, and certainly continues, with the patronage, so to speak, of the upper class, king, queen, big chiefs and leaders coming to daily Bible class.

The striking success of all the C. M. S. work in these parts is due, we think, first, to the fact that the advent of the missionary was prior to that of either the official or merchant; second, to the emphasis on the Word of God, and the making of that the one text-book of the land; third, to the fact that Christian and spiritual culture occupies the place given in other lands to general education; fourth, to the influence of the rulers, chiefs and leaders, who became the first converts; and perhaps more than all other causes, fifth, to that of the reliance upon, and blessing of the Holy Spirit; and sixth, lack of all division and sectarian strife in the church of God, since the existence even of a divided church is unknown to the Baganda Christians.

But still westward the caravan moves, the Baganda Christian has tucked away his hymn book and Scriptures which he carries; and you should see him as he picks up a sixty or seventy-pound box of goods, puts its on his head and goes off on a trot with a shout and a song. The traveler bids a reluctant farewell to the missionaries and native Christians at Toro, nestling so quietly and beautifully on the eastern slopes of towering Ruwenzori. He is awed as he goes away from this last mission out-post on the east, knowing that a long journey of weeks awaits him before he sees another missionary, which will not be until he reaches the great Congo river. Thus with sad heart he journeys, knowing that he is traversing the dark gap which marks the uncompleted chain of Africa's equatorial mission stations.

As the mission stations entering from the east coast end at Toro, so the stations entering from the west coast end at Yakusu, the English Baptist Missionary Society, three hours' river travel below Stanley Falls. To cover this intervening gap one tramps for eight weeks of six days of six hours each. He will pass through more than 100 towns and villages. These are clearings made in the great 300,000 square mile forest. In these settlements are people numbering from one hundred to a thousand. During the last days of the march, in the approach to Stanley Falls, these clearings greatly amplify and multiply. Besides these native village clearings, through which the traveler passes, there are in the deeper forest, villages of those interesting little people, the timid, shrinking pygmies. During all these eight weeks of travel, one sees not a single herald of the Gospel of God's grace and Christian love. Aside from out-and-out heathenism and its sad accompaniments, the religion of these forest peoples is a heathenized Mohammedanism. This has been disseminated, as in so many other parts of Africa where the traveler is so constantly meeting them, by Arab and Swahili traders and slave traders from the east coast. Such in brief outline is the section marking the break in Africa's chain of equatorial mission stations.

The Problem of the Country Church

By Rev. J. F. Rosborough

Abraham Lincoln said: "The Lord surely loves the common people, he made so many of them." Evidently the Lord loves the country churches, he has so many of them. Let us remember that "Christ loved the church and gave himself for it." May his infinite love for the weak churches inspire our hearts with a corresponding love. The pioneers of the movement for the restoration of primitive Christianity were generally plain men, many of them without liberal education, but learned in the Scriptures. These earnest preachers, very naturally, found strong affinity and hearty response in the rural places. These faithful servants of God were Christ-commissioned, and went into the field without any guarantee of compensation, and independent of any society or congregation. This fact, together with the emphasis on the doctrine of "liberty in Christ," and the excellency of being the "Lord's free men," led to complete isolation of congregations, or what we may well call ultra-congregationalism. This congregational independence was inevitable under the circumstances, and its continuance might not be so disastrous if each congregation were able to keep and support a competent leader, but the fact that the church had been planted without any mention of money, the inability to give and a prejudice against a "hireling ministry" made it impossible in many places to maintain regular preaching. Consequently many a promising sowing came to nothing because of neglect to cultivate the field and gather the harvest. The little band failed to catch the spirit of sacrifice from the faithful minister and soon assumed the spirit of humility born of supposed poverty. Nothing is easier to cultivate than modesty and humility when church finances are being considered. Another discouraging feature with many country churches is the emigration to the cities often of their best workers or leaders. This entails loss and discouragement to the weak and struggling country church, and unless encouragement or help come soon it results in cessation of work, loss of interest and decay.

Many a church has died for want of leadership in business management as well as for want of a shepherd to feed the flock. Whether the method of our fathers was the wisest, or whether it would have been better to plant the cause first in the towns, so the church might grow with the town's growth, and become a radiating center of Gospel influence, is an open question. But on this, we agree, we must set ourselves to the task of solving the problem. A large per cent of our churches are in the country and villages. Each year witnesses the constituting of many new ones, and the loss of others. On the whole the net gain is not proportionate to the importance of the plea and our resources. This lack of increase is due, mainly, to losses. This is a calamity. The country must continue to be a base ot supply in morals and Christian character, as well as in material products. I have in mind several churches that have ceased to meet except when some one drops in and temporarily resuscitates the church. In some cases the unknown preacher victimizes the church and leaves it in a state of convulsion. Some churches having been admonished against unknown preachers, have settled down to an undisturbed rest, which may be the sleep of death. Our complacency amid this appalling death is sinful. Our motto should be: "Every church and every member shepherded and kept for aggressive service." The commission requires this. Perishing souls demand it. The principles of utility and economy compel it. Let us settle the conviction among the preachers and boards that these churches must be saved to the cause. But how can it be done? The Gospel is the means in saving men and advancing the kingdom, but consecrated judgment must decide on methods of work. We must win through sane methods, consecrated effort and patience. We can not speak out of large experience; therefore we can not be dogmatic. We are feeling our way. I submit a few propositions:

First. Success or failure of churches is largely a question of leadership.

Second. Every congregation should have a competent minister who can preach the Word and lead in other matters appertaining to the church's welfare.

Third. If a church is able, it should sustain a minister full time.

Fourth. Churches not able individually to provide preaching full time should be grouped with other churches to maintain regular preaching.

Fifth. The grouping should be regarded as permanent, or until something better is possible.

Sixth. The minister for a group of churches should, if possible, live in their midst.

Seventh. State and district evangelists should superintend the fundamental teaching and grouping of churches.

I now proceed to sustain the seven propositions:

First—There is in every congregation enough native, latent ability to make the church aggressive and successful. Yet in the very presence of such possibilities and power churches wane and die. It is simply a question of leadership, of directing the power. It is safe to say that our country churches are not doing the half of what would be possible with good leadership.

Second—The Minister and Leader. There are few born leaders. Even these must study how to lead. Most of us are followers. The trained minister is a necessity. Our schools will more and more train the minister not only to fill the pulpit, but to lead the church into aggressive service. We must have ministers with constructive ability for these country churches.

Third—Preaching Full Time by Resident Minister. There are many advantages in a minister devoting full time to one church. Many country churches could easily install and support a minister, and, by so doing, quadruple their power for good and increase their own joy.

Fourth—Uniting Churches in Groups. It is simply a business proposition that a church unable to support preaching full time should join with others to provide regular preaching. A church can not live to itself, but it can die to itself. Manifestly two neighboring churches uniting for services represent more power than the two working separately. "One shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight."

Fifth—Permanency. Temporary and changing plans, or the constant danger of dissolution of plans is enervating. Permanency gives strength and courage and commands respect, and there should be no thought of changing, except for improved methods. A permanent plan secures better results.

Sixth—The Resident Minister. The minister for a church or group of churches should, if possible, live with his people. It saves money that should be used for the Lord's work. He can know his people better. He is needed in the home in times of sorrow and of joy. His daily life gives added power to his public ministrations.

Seventh—State and district evangelists should do this work because:

First. The office already exists, and it should call for no added machinery.

Second. The office is permanent under state organization.

Third. They have the opportunity that no others have. They know the churches and the ministers. The district evangelist is not intended to hold meetings in the stronger churches (though he might sometimes be allowed this luxury), but to help the weak places. He can best do this by showing them how to help themselves; that is, by putting them in a position to be self-supporting, and this can be accomplished only by uniting the churches systematically.

It may be asked by what authority we would organize the churches in this way. Of course it can not be done arbitrarily. It would be neither possible nor desirable to form an eccleciasticism for coercion or excommunication. We can have no such centralization of authority. In the first place, this question must be agitated lovingly, patiently, plainly. The preacher who sees the interests of the kingdom above all selfish ambition will pray and study and agitate. Our conventions, state and district, should discuss this timely and vital question. Our church papers might speak a word on "federation"—the federation of our weak churches for aggressive work, which is a thousand times more important than any other phase of federation. The district evangelists must be among the churches and patiently, lovingly and plainly show them the absolute necessity of systematizing the Lord's work. They must be shown: First—That the church is pre-eminent. Every temporal matter must yield to its claims. Second—There must be an unselfish regard for others, and a willingness to surrender personal preferences for the common good. The hypercritical spirit should be routed from the pew, the croakers relegated to the rear, and Christ enthroned among his people. Third—That there must be a sympathetic rather than ecclesiastical bond among the churches; not coercion, but Christian privilege. Paul labored to bring the churches into sympathetic co-operation. His "care of all the churches," his transmission of gifts from the richer to the poorer, his persistent conveyance of the message of salutation and good will in such words as, "The churches of Asia salute you," indicate the heart yearning of the great apostle for a strong bond of sympathy among the churches. Fourth—That churches must be educated in the importance of giving to the Lord.

If we faithfully press these matters, the love of the kingdom will conquer narrowness and avarice. The golden opportunity for the country church is here. With rural free delivery of mail and the telephone wires netting almost every rural district, what could not be accomplished for the Lord by a group of churches and a live, competent, consecrated minister? Through the wisdom given from above, let us lay our hands on the vast resources of this age and turn them into agencies for the salvation of men and the advancement of the kingdom of Christ.

Centralia, Ill.

Fret Not Thyself.

The little sharp vexations,
  And the briars that sting and fret,
Why not take all to the Helper
  Who has never failed us yet?
Tell him about the heartache
  And tell him the longings too;
Tell him the baffled purpose,
  When we scarce knew what to do;
Then, leaving all our weakness
  With the One divinely strong,
Forget that we bore the burden,
  And carry away the song.

Our Budget

—Send us a "wire" Monday—

—If you exceed your apportionment.

—Church Extension should be the theme till a gift has been sent Brother Muckley.

—But little more than $100,000 per annum is required to give us $1,000,000 in this fund by 1909.

—Take the offering Sunday if possible. Church Extension will be in the air. You will get telepathic assistance from hundreds of surrounding churches denied you the next Lord's day.

—But if for any reason the offering is postponed, Church Extension should have right of way in press and pulpit, in plans and prayers till every congregation has met its obligations to those thousands of our brethren struggling for a church home.

—The next turn of the wheel may transfer many of us preachers to a charge where we shall need Church Extension money to house our mission, or to modernize the antiquated building in which our people will be meeting. Let us all plead so earnestly through September for the Church Extension fund that in all good conscience we can call on our brethren for assistance when the Board must intervene between us and barren years of waiting.

—Charles E. Schultz and wife, of Newcastle, Ind., are entering the evangelistic field. Their first meeting will be with Cecil Franklin, at Yorkton, Ind.

—King Stark, assisted by singer R. T. McRae is in a most encouraging meeting at Dover, Mo. There have been 36 additions to date, 31 being by confession and baptism.

—We regret to learn of the decease of J. M. Carwell, of Pocahontas, Ark. He was a faithful friend of The Christian-Evangelist whom we hope to meet in the better land.

—Irving Taylor Le Baron, assisted by Singer L. Byron Conrad, of Illinois is in a meeting at Mt. Olive, Mo. Other congregations desiring the services of this evangelistic team may address Bro. I. T. Le Baron at Macon, Mo.

—There are now 109 appeals that have come to our Board of Church Extension since March 1, when the board ceased granting loans for lack of funds. Inspiration enough for a great offering.

—F. Ellsworth Day, of Nelson, Neb., offers his services to the churches for two meetings between September and March. Brother Day is a good preacher and will prove of real help to the churches calling him.

—H. L. Veach reports that the Pike county convention of the churches of Christ, held at Barry, Ill., August 13 and 14, was well attended and all those present departed greatly strengthened for future usefulness.

—Irving Taylor Le Baron, evangelist, gave a stereopticon lecture on "From Cause to Effect," before the Union Sunday-school convention at New Cambria, Mo., August 23, that was reported as being very interesting and instructive.

—Everything has been done from the office at Kansas City that could be done for the church extension offering. The success of church extension day is now in the hands of the preachers and churches. Will the preachers lead the way?

—Last week the Foreign Society received a gift of $1,000 on the annuity plan from a friend in Ohio. This was the second gift from this source and the number of the bond was 274. Also a gift of $50 came in from a brother in Montana.

—G. A. Reynolds, of Dyersburg, Tenn., is holding protracted meetings, assisted by Evangelists Sheldon and Eisenbarger Although it is August in Tennessee, their very large tent is filled to overflowing every night, and profound interest prevails.

—Anson G. Chester writes that the Richmond Avenue Church, at Buffalo, sustains a real loss through the removal of Dr. W. A. B. Clarke and family to New Rochelle, N. Y It is a beautiful testimonial to so live in a church that our departure is sincerely mourned by the faithful.

—W. S. Johnson, of Litchfield, Ill., was a welcome visitor last week. His church during his ministry has advanced from one of the weakest to the strongest in the city. In a few weeks his people will rejoice in the dedication of a beautiful new house of worship.

—Frank W. Allen, of Odessa, Mo., closed a two weeks' meeting at the Midway church in Audrain county, August 19. There were seven additions, six by confession and baptism. The brethren speak in high terms of the splendid preaching of this young man.

—In next week's Christian-Evangelist will be a very interesting reply by E. S. Muckley of Portland, Ore., to E. L. Frazier's "Who is a Christian in the Twentieth Century." We believe kindly discussions of these important things will be most helpful and gladly give room to them.

—Our Bentonville (Ark.) brethren recognize their blessings while in possession, and have given J. W. Ellis, their able minister, an unanimous call to the pastorate for an indefinite time. The congregation is harmonious and enthusiastic for the Master in all good works.

—This office greatly enjoyed a visit last Thursday from Charles A. Young, editor, evangelist and college lecturer. Brother Young seems to lose none of his youth, geniality and righteous ambition with the flight of years, but to grow in grace and power. Come again, Brother Young.

Do By

Church Extension

As Christ

Would Have You

—J. H. Mohorter, secretary of our National Benevolent Association, is arranging for a tour among the strong churches of the southwest in behalf of the Juliet Fowler Home at Dallas. Brother Mohorter's work in the interest of orphans, helpless old people, and the friendless sick, is being greatly blessed.

—J. B. Lockhart has been unanimously called by the church at Unionville, Mo., to continue his pastorate there for his third year. W. L. Harris, of Lincoln, Neb., and L. W. Mailey, of Greensburg, Ind., are assisting him in a revival meeting. Two additions to date, and interest rapidly growing.

—Evangelist Richard Martin, together with six of his family, are in a very successful meeting at Sturgis, Ky. These various members assist as violinists, soloists and personal workers. There have been nearly 1,500 added to the churches in Brother Martin's meetings since beginning his southern tour.

—Evangelist M. L. Anthony is in a meeting at Glasgow, Ill., where he first became a member of the body of Christ under the ministry of John H. Coates. He is free for other engagements after his October meeting in Scottville, Ill. We cheerfully commend Brother Anthony to the brotherhood as an able and successful evangelist.

—There is always room in this paper for brief, reverent, articles instructive in the plan of salvation, confirming faith in the inspiration of the Word and the sovereignty of Christ, and whose tendency is to convert sinners and edify saints. Such contributions by brethren really adding to the number of the saved are thankfully received.

—Lura V. Thompson, Carthage, Ill., C. W. B. M. organizer for Illinois, visited, with us last Thursday, returning home from a very successful tour through southern Illinois. Sister Thompson is not only an able official, but greatly endears the C. W. B. M. to all through her own personification of the graces it would inculcate in the home and foreign lands.

—Dan Trundle and wife, of Bisbee, Ariz., are spending their summer vacation at Long Beach. Brother Trundle writes that on August 7 he baptized a young man in the Pacific Ocean "because there was much water there." He also bears testimony to the great enthusiasm and helpfulness of the recent Southern California convention.

—Evangelist Small's meeting in the Mexico (Mo.) church, announced to begin September 2, has been postponed one week on account of Brother Small's being detained elsewhere. We can not censure the churches for holding on to Brother Small as long as possible. We predict he will have no "small" meeting with Bros. Kokendoffer and Harding at Mexico.

—Hugh C. Gresham, of Trenton, Neb., is meeting with fine success in his union Bible school revival work. That he is appreciated is proven by the executive committee's enlarging his field from two to five counties. Brother Gresham writes that Nebraska is a fine field for our ministers to enter. The people are appreciative and eager to hear the truth.

—O. D. Maple and J. Ross Miller, evangelists, will begin meetings at Gas City, Ind., September 10, and Cairo, Ill., October 1. Three hundred copies of The Christian-Evangelist will be among their helpers. This is a strong evangelistic team, and we trust they will be constantly engaged by the churches to preach and sing the old story of Chirst's redeeming love.

—It is source of satisfaction to the Budget paragrapher to have President McGarvey put the seal of approval on his observation relative to the new Manchester church being patterned after the old Jerusalem model. This also tends to confirm our hope that our scholarly brother will yet attain unto perfect harmony with all the sentiments and aspirations of The Christian-Evangelist.

For Loss of Appetite

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE

It nourishes, strengthens and imparts new life and vigor. An excellent general tonic.

—Alonzo B. Aldrich, of Brockton, Mass., writes: "The Manchester (N. H.) work is a great blessing to us in New England, and we owe the same to the Christian-Evangelist and those connected therewith. May God bless you all and add his special blessing upon the lines sent out each week."

—D. Wesley Campbell and L. E. Swigert as singer, are helping D. W. Conner, of Edinburg, Ill., in a meeting that promises to be one of the greatest in the history of that congregation. Brother Conner recently baptized Miss Margaret Cole, who goes to Porto Rico in a few days as teacher by government appointment.

—J. S. Dabney has just received a unanimous call to continue as pastor of the Herron Hill congregation, Pittsburgh, for three years longer. There were three additions last Lord's day and the church is greatly prospering. This paragrapher dedicated the new church building two years ago and greatly rejoices in the popularity of "Brother Joe" and the prosperity of his church.

—President Hill M. Bell, of Drake University, visited St. Louis recently for conference with a number of young men contemplating entering the university. The result is that six of them will enter that great school in September and five others will follow later. The development of this institution of learning under President Bell's administration is a generous part of our centennial glory.

—Ferd F. Schultz, Beallsville, Ohio, is preparing now for a great evangelistic campaign to be inaugurated there in the near future. As one aid, he will place a copy of The Christian-Evangelist in each home in town and countryside every week of the meeting. Brother Schultz is one of those able, consecrated, unassuming ministers whose labors with our churches are always fraught with blessing.

—J. D. Williams, of the Eldara and New Hartford (Ill.) churches, is very happy in his ministry. He was assisted by W. H. Cannon, of Lincoln, in securing $415 at a basket picnic on August 19, for the payment of all indebtedness on the New Hartford church. He is having frequent additions to both churches, and is very hopeful for their great upbuilding numerically, financially and spiritually.

—R. O. Rogers, the enterprising and tireless pastor at Fredericktown, Mo., is the first of our ministers to complete the list of subscriptions necessary to secure free transportation to Buffalo. This was so easily done he will begin at once to secure another ticket. This will injure no pastor's prestige with his people, but help it rather. Congregations are glad to thus co-operate with preachers they love. Let all our ministers attempt this enterprise.

—How seldom are our evangelists called to conduct union meetings! But how successfully they could do so is being illustrated by Charles Reign Scoville at Monroe, Wis.—see "Hot from the Wire." Brother Scoville has promised us an early account of this unique revival. We are interested in learning how this most orthodox evangelist is co-operating with our denominational neighbors in saving the lost.

—J. B. Hunley, of Canyon City, ably seconds Brother Garrison's recent editorial suggestion that the importance of the devotional part of our state and national conventions should be greatly emphasized. He expresses the fear that we fall behind the great missionary and Bible school conventions of some of our denominational brethren in this important matter. If this has been true in the past, let us see that it will be true no longer.

—Edward Keller is in a meeting at the Plainview church, near Memphis, Neb., assisting Harry G. Knowles, minister. We hope for an early and inspiring report.

—James G. Causler is in an excellent meeting at Payson, Okla. There were 26 accessions the first fourteen nights. Great interest is manifested by the large audiences that wait nightly upon the services.

—Chas. H. Caton, one of our unusually able preachers, writes us that he has completed a number of summer engagements and is now resting at Columbia, Mo. We hope our churches will keep him busily engaged.

—After a few weeks' vacation spent with his family in this city, S. R. Maxwell has returned to his Kennet (Mo.) pastorate. On account of old and invalid parents he is compelled to forego the pleasure of having his loved ones with him always.

—President Carl Johann, of Christian University, was among the week's callers. We are happy to report he is making rapid progress in freeing from all indebtedness this school that has had such a creditable part in building up our cause in these great valley states.

—Notice in another column Wallace Stuckey's testimonial to the efficiency of the Christian-Evangelist as an evangelistic assistant in protracted meetings. We furnish them to the churches at a price so low all can have the benefit of their silent advocacy of Christ and the church.

The pink subscription blank in your last Christian-Evangelist is not a statement of account, but is our overture to you to secure a new reader for your favorite paper. If you can not get a new subscriber, and the date on your yellow label indicates you are in arrears, you may use the blank for your own renewal, but try first for the new subscriber.

—Cephas Shelburne has just closed his fourth year with the Huntington, Ind., church. During the time 400 have been added to the membership, the Sunday-schol has reached 450, the C. W. B. M. 100, the old building outgrown, and on next Sunday, September 2, they dedicate the best church edifice in northern Indiana and one of the best equipped in the brotherhood.

—L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., assisted M. M. Ammunson in the dedication of a new church home for the Independence (Ind.) congregation August 12. What might seem unnecessary to add to an account of one of Brother Carpenter's dedications is that the necessary money was raised for the payment of all indebtedness. Brother Ammunson is greatly beloved in the community where he labors.

—Perry James Rice, whose long ministry at South Bend is one of the most illustrious in our Indiana annals, appears to be accompanied by his characteristic success in his new pastorate with the Portland Avenue Church at Minneapolis. In him our "northern frontier" has an able sentinel and oracle. We wish Brother and Sister Rice great happiness and many evidences of a successful ministry in their new home.

—With sorrow we report the death of T. J. Arnold, one of our missionaries to China since 1889. He came to Santa Cruz, Cal., some months ago upon the recommendation of his physician, and not improving in health he went to England, sailing from New York August 8. A cablegram from Liverpool announcing his death was received at the office of the Foreign Society, Cincinnati, August 21. He leaves a wife and six children.

"Help us to get into our own church home."

ARE YOU READY

to enlist your congregation for Church Extension in SEPTEMBER?

The Board at Kansas City ceased promising loans in March and have asked for aid in building since then, and $125,000 is needed for these appeals. Inspiration enough, you say, to enlist any Church of Christ in the Annual Offering.

WRITE AT ONCE,

ordering literature and collection envelopes, and tell the Board you will take the offering.

The Annuity feature of Church Extension is profitable to you and the Board. You receive 6 per cent and the Board builds churches with your money. Write for information to G. W. Muckley, Kansas City, Mo.

—W. E. Wilhite is in a great meeting at Belpre, Kan. He organized a new church August 19 and raised $2,000 towards a building upon a lot donated the new church. There were seven baptisms and confessions by others. The best classes of people in the community are being reached. He is greatly assisted by Sister Wilhite, who conducts Bible drills for the benefit of the young people, preparing them for membership in the church.

—J. L. Hill has returned to Cincinnati after a month's vacation, and with renewed vigor takes up the work at Central Church. During his absence the pulpit was supplied by Owen Livengood, with great satisfaction to the congregation. The work at Central is prosperous. The congregations have held up well during the summer. There were six additions the last day Brother Hill preached before leaving. One addition during Brother Livengood's preaching and six other additions at the service yesterday morning. Active preparations are being made for the revival beginning September 16, in which Bro. W. H. Pinkerton, of Paducah, Ky., is to do the preaching.

Colonist Rates.

Colonist rates to the Pacific coast will be put in by the Union Pacific, commencing August 27, instead of September 15, to remain in effect until October 31, inclusive.

—J. Ross Miller, O. D. Maple's singer, is training the chorus choir at Gas City, Ind., for the meeting which the Maple-Miller team will begin September 10. These preliminary services are invaluable aids to meetings, and we recommend that the people meet in song and prayer services for weeks preceding the coming of our evangelists. This will enable them to visit many more congregations each year and multiply the number of the saved.

—Pastor G. A. Reynolds, of Dyersburg, Tenn., assisted by Evangelist W. J. Shelburne and Miss Mayme Eisenbarger, singer, is in a tent meeting. During the first two weeks there have been fourteen additions by confession and baptism and five otherwise. It is reported that Brother Reynolds has greatly endeared himself to the community in which he is laboring and that his personal influence is a large factor in the success of this meeting.

—A. W. Kokendoffer reports the Audrain county convention held at Vandalia last week to have been one of the best in the history of the county. One of the results of this gathering will be the establishment of a new mission church in Audrain county in the immediate future. Summer seems to be losing its terrors for conventions and protracted meetings among the Disciples. The tendency now is to give all twelve of the months to the advancement of the kingdom.

—From the "Kansas City Star" we learn that Bro. T. P. Haley will continue as pastor of the South Side Christian Church another year. Last November Brother Haley resigned, thinking a younger and more active man would be of greater benefit to the church. The church, however, disagreed with him and unanimously called him to another year's work. Brother Haley has accepted this call and will enter actively upon his ministry as soon as he returns from Macatawa.

—A. C. Parker, of Ladonia, Texas, writes the meeting there in which he was assisted by R. R. Hamlin, of Fort Worth, and F. C. Huston, of Indianapolis, was the most successful ever held in Ladonia. There were 107 additions, ninety being by confession and baptism. Some of the most wicked men in the community turned to the Lord. Every one in the Bible school old enough to obey the Savior, came into the church. The whole city was moved. He very highly commends this evangelistic team.

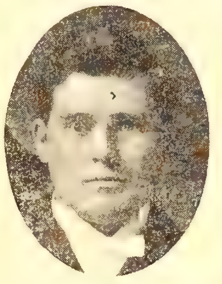
—Corresponding Secretary H. W. Elliott sends the final announcement of the seventy-fourth annual convention of the Kentucky Disciples that will meet at the First Church, Louisville, September 24-27. All delegates sending their names in advance to R. M. Hopkins, 218 Keller building, will be provided with free entertainment for lodging and breakfast. Reduced rates have been secured without the necessity of getting certificates. A very instructive program has been provided and a large attendance of Kentucky Disciples is greatly desired.

—While C. V. Allison and wife, of Mound City, Mo., were attending the county convention at Maitland, Mo., Sister Allison was stricken with appendicitis and was compelled to undergo an immediate operation. Brother Allison writes that after two weeks the indications are for her recovery. His letter overflows with expressions of gratitude to the kind friends of Mound City and Maitland, and especially the family of Mrs. C. C. Phillips, at whose home they were being entertained during the convention and where Sister Allison still is. We join hosts of other friends in hoping for Sister Allison's early and complete restoration.

—J. A. Cunningham, the "drummer preacher" of Tupelo, Miss., preached Lord's day morning and evening at Una, Miss., August 12. We commend the example of this brother to all other traveling men and tourists gifted with the power to interpret the Scriptures. In the early days the disciples "went everywhere preaching the Word." Whether specially called to the ministry or engaged in secular pursuits through the week, wherever a Disciple of Christ goes he ought to tell men of his Saviour and win them into his fold.

—S. S. Smith, Eldorado, Kan., sends a beautiful tribute to his mother, Mary Margaret Smith, who entered into the better land July 10, 1906. In his letter accompanying the booklet he states: "There was nothing to her like her dear old Bible and The Christian-Evangelist, of which she had been a careful reader for years." While more people are reading The Christian-Evangelist than ever before in its history, we doubt not it has a greater host of friends on the other side of the river and among the dearest of them is Sister Smith.

—The Dallas county (Mo.) Christian churches will hold their convention at Buffalo, September 14-16. Every effort is being made by the committee to have an interesting convention and it is hoped the attendance will be large. J. Q. Biggs, of the Buffalo (Mo.) church, writes that there is great development in his local Christian Endeavor society and that the Bible school will soon have a rally. The church is planning for a revival in November. Brother Biggs may always be depended upon to give all he has and is for the advancement of the kingdom.



—One of the ablest, most faithful and successful evangelists now winning the mighty northwest to Christ is George C. Ritchey, of Roseburg, Ore., and now in a meeting at Nampa, Idaho. Brother Ritchey has organized several new churches in his territory and greatly added to the membership of older congregations. He has engaged 300 Christian-Evangelists per week to preach in Nampa homes while he tells the story of redeeming love from the pulpit and illustrates it in his daily walk.

—The following communication, printed verbatim et literatim et fly speckum, was recently received in answer to a business communication. Is it not in itself a vindication of our claim that The Christian-Evangelist has a mission in this world?

> Nary Sunday school hear, sitch things is onskripteral. wee rede our bibels and don't taik nobody's word. No humen explanashun in owern wee don't want none of ole mezely literachure. wee jest eat this bibel hear. wee have alredy got a bibel class and ax one and other bibel questions and the breathron ancer up and wee don't hafter take no human explaning. Mr. Garrisown, pleize put this ancer in your paper.—Cheerman Bibel class, which means no litratour of man. Arkansas.

—Dr. J. G. M. Luttenberger is attending hospital lectures in Berlin. He writes that there are great opportunities for the dissemination of the principles of the churches of Christ in that capital city of the empire, if Americans of means would endow the enterprise. He says the tendency of Lutheranism is towards rationalism; that the people would gladly hear the more spiritual doctrines of our churches. The Baptists are well established there, having six churches with a membership of 7,000. We hope ere long some movement will be made for the preaching of primitive Christianity throughout that great German land.

THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY,
Y. M. C. A. BUILDING,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

—S. R. Reynolds, Des Moines, Ia., asks "What would be the influence of church federation on organic unity and on the organized activities of the church?" It is believed by the friends of federation that it would be a powerful influence working for Christian union, but whether organic unity or not, would depend on the meaning we attach to the term "organic." The organized activities of the church would go on, much the same, but should be quickened by this closer conformity to the will of Christ concerning the union and co-operation of his disciples. Whatever the church does in harmony with Christ's will ought to help it in all its work done in Christ's name.

—Charles Reign Scoville, evangelist, writing from his great union meeting at Monroe, Wis., says: "I want to thank you ten thousand times for The Christian-Evangelist two weeks ago with that most excellent editorial and Dr. Whyte's article on Christian Union. That is the first time that I have ever been able to see how union could be brought about. I positively believe it is possible through love—love of God, love of the truth, love of all people. When we look not to the things of ourselves but the things of others, loving our neighbors as ourselves, we will see many things from their standpoint, and also they will be made to see many things from our point of view, and the union for which he prayed is possible. I am showing that article to every one of these pastors."

—How easily we may alienate ourselves from Christ, and how frequently we do! The inspired dictum is, "If any man hath not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." With most of the great CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST family the paramount question need not be, "Have I entered the kingdom in the divinely appointed way," for most of us have with scrupulous care, but it is, "Is the spirit of Christ prevailing in me"? "Am I still of his or has this ill temper, litigiousness, vengefulness, suspiciousness, censoriousness, this lack of brotherly love made me other than his this hour"?

—We urge all our readers who possibly can to attend the great international convention of Disciples at Buffalo, beginning October 12. The provisional program appearing in another column does in itself constitute an almost unanswerable reason for our going. We should remember, too, that while Buffalo is not far from the scene amid which this Restoration had its origin, Disciples are comparatively few along and east of the "Niagara frontier." The effect of a convention of great magnitude in impressing a sense of our mighty numerical strength and social consequence upon the children of the east will be almost magical, and forward through a week's demonstration our cause there as much as has been gained during the past decade. In addition to the personal pleasure and help you will receive, considerations of loyalty and help to the church should be thrown into the scale when determining whether or not you will muster with us at the convention.

—The Editor is in receipt of a letter from Brother Herbert Yeuell dated August 11, and written from the steamship as it was nearing Ireland, saying: "After nine days of stormless voyage from Boston we are beginning to look for the Irish coast." Very few of the passengers, he writes, had been ill and his wife, who feared the voyage, had stood it remarkably well. He writes that there are two ministers besides himself and several typical Scotch Presbyterians on board. He distributed Bro. W. J. Wright's tract among them and had an interesting time with them. He says: "I find that the old country people are less inclined to criticise our attitude than are Americans. They seem to be in advance of Americans as regards union sentiments. One very intelligent Scotchman said, after I had outlined our position, 'Why, we believe that in Scotland, already, but the failure of the Plymouth brethren to teach their ideal along those lines would make it difficult for you to succeed in our country with that plea! Besides,' said he, 'we have Disciples of Christ in Glasgow, and they hold to your views on baptism and the Lord's supper, but they are exclusive, and no one takes them seriously, and they will fraternize with none but their kind. You seem to be of a broader school and more acceptable to my way of thinking.' I told him that we had some of that same sort in America, but that did not destroy our ideal, although, in many places, it woefully hindered our progress. I told him of our hosts of men and churches co-operating with Christians of all sects so far as a practical application of Christ could be made, but that we still held to our ideal, earnestly praying for the entire unity of God's people." Brother Yeuell did not expect to reach London before August 13, and was anxious to reach his mother's beside and know how she was.

The Galesburg (Kan.) Meeting.

Still the crowds come. Three additions last night. The whole country is being stirred by the meeting. Everybody reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and learning they have misunderstood our plea in the past. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has helped in getting our plea before the people in the right light.

We have been assisted by Bros. J. H. Stuckey and Duncan McFarland. Many are "almost persuaded" to accept the Lord. Another religious body in the town whose attitude is not just what it should be, but their members attend largely.

We continue for a few days but must soon go home for my own meeting which is postponed till September 9. Miss Snowie Ditch will sing for us at Libo. Will baptize Monday evening and shall perhaps close Tuesday to get home.—Wallace M. and Ethel Stuckey.

A Good Revival and Fellowship.

During the 17 days' meeting which closed August 15 at South Elkhorn, 83 were added, 56 of whom were baptized. Prof. H. L. Calhoun, of the College of the Bible, did the preaching. The house was full at every meeting, and it was frequently filled to overflowing. The interest in listening to the old Jerusalem gospel was great from the beginning. The speaker's style was so plain and simple that no one who heard him could fail to understand the truth of the Gospel. The spirit of love and fellowship prevailed among all Christian people who attended the meeting.

On the last Lord's day 69 of those who had joined during the meeting stood in line while, in the old-time way, the congregation extended to them the hand of fellowship. This hearty welcome did much good. More handshaking would help most of our congregations.

For a Church in New Hampshire.

Already acknowledged	$812 25
Mary F. Holbrook	50 00
D. O. Smart	25 00
American Christian Missionary Society	25 00
"A Sister" (Oakland, Cal.)......	10 00
Total	$922 25

The above is the second contribution the president of our Board of Church Extension has made for this New Hampshire fund. Are there not others who, having learned of the unexpectedly large expense of establishing a new church in a wealthy eastern city without one resident Disciple, wish for larger fellowship in this purely missionary enterprise? It is not a question of whether God wishes this Restoration represented in New Hampshire or whether it is possible at this time to found a church there. It is simply a question of whether we can secure enough money to rent an auditorium in a desirable part of the city and maintain an evangelist long enough to win people to our plea. Let us quickly double our present receipts and our reproach of coming to our first centennial without a single church in one of our oldest commonwealths will soon be removed.

A Modern Miracle.

Mrs. S. T. Roberts, Clinton, La., sent a postal card request for a trial bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine to Drake Co., Drake Bldg., and received it promptly by return mail without expense to her. Mrs. Roberts writes that a bottle of this wonderful Palmetto Medicine proved quite sufficient to completely cure her. She says: "One bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine has cured me after months of intense suffering My trouble was Inflammation of Bladder and serious condition of Urinary organs. Drake's Palmetto Wine gave me quick and entire relief, and I have had no trouble since using the one bottle."

Drake's Palmetto Wine cures every such case to stay cured. It is a true, unfailing specific for Liver, Kidney, Bladder and Prostate Troubles caused by Inflammation, Congestion or Catarrh. When there is Constipation, Drake's Palmetto Wine produces a gentle and natural action of the bowels and cures Constipation immediately to stay cured. One small dose a day does all this splendid work, and any reader of this paper may prove it by writing to Drake Co., Wheeling, W. Va., for a test bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine. A letter or postal card is your only expense.

Resorts Near Buffalo.

Buffalo is situated in the midst of many and beautiful resorts—probably the most beautiful in the United States.

Twenty-one miles to the north is Niagara Falls, one of the scenic wonders of the world. This resort attracts to it, annually many thousands of visitors from all parts of the world, and has been admired by the princes and nobility of almost every nation. The scenery along Niagara River is extremely beautiful. The river is about 33 miles in length, and descends 328 feet in its course from Lake Erie to Lake Ontario. Where the river leaves Lake Erie it is less than a mile wide, but in its course expands to several miles, and is dotted with several islands, the largest of which is Grand Island, 11 miles long, and which extends to within a mile and a half of the great cataract. The narrowing of the channel and the rapid descent, at the rate of 60 feet to the mile, produce the Upper Rapids, in which the leaping river presents the most beautiful expanse of foam and spray. It is quite impossible to describe the beauty and grandeur of the cataract. The river, at this point 4,750 feet wide, leaps over a cliff nearly 150 feet high, and discharges its thundering waters into a channel 180 feet deep below. It is estimated the river discharges about 18,000,000 cubic feet of water every minute. The American Falls, being shallower, present a most beautiful white, lace-like appearance as they leap over the higher elevation. The Canadian Falls, being very deep, preserve their rich green color until they have dropped far out from the crest. The spirit of the wild things pervades the place, and the deep roar of the waters, from which the Indians gave the falls their name, fills one with a sublime sense of awe and wonder. Many beautiful Indian traditions linger in this enchanted spot. Dickens said of this wonderful scene: "I heard the mighty rush of water, and felt the ground tremble underneath my feet. I could see an immense torrent of water tearing down from some great height, but had no idea of shape or situation, but great immensity. I was in a manner stunned, and unable to comprehend the vastness of the scene. Then, when I felt how near to my Creator I was standing, the first effect and the enduring one—instant and lasting—of the tremendous spectacle, was peace. Niagara was at once stamped upon my heart, an image of beauty; to remain there, changeless and indelible, until its pulses ceased to beat, forever. I think in every quiet season now, still do these waters roll and leap and roar and tumble, all day long; still are the rainbows spanning them, a hundred feet below. Still, when the day is gloomy, do they fall like snow, or seem to crumble away like the front of a great chalk cliff, or roll down the rock like dense white smoke. But always does the mighty stream appear to die as it comes down, and always from its unfathomable grave arises that tremendous ghost of spray and mist which is never laid."

Not less interesting is the river below. For a mile the startled waters flow deeply and quietly on. Then the deep channel narrows to a few rods and the pent-up waters surge and foam in the mad rush of the Lower Rapids. These discharge into a basin of rock, where the river turns upon itself at right angles, forming the famous Whirlpool, the depth and power of which no man can measure. The river pursues its mad way through this narrow channel until it reaches Lewiston, where the torrent expands into a deep and swift-flowing river. On either side of this channel, the banks rise almost perpendicularly to a height of nearly 200 feet. Through this distance of seven miles the river descends 104 feet. This is the Great Gorge. The International Traction Co. has placed a trolley at the foot of the cliff, at the edge of the rushing torrent, on the American side, and on the brink of the cliff on the Canadian side. This trip is one of the most interesting and inspiring in the world.

The falls are surrounded by places of great historic interest. At the end of the gorge, looking out over the expanse of the river below and the receding hills, to Lake Ontario, is Brock's monument, the scene of a famous battle between the American and British forces in the war of 1812, when the American forces were pressed over the steep embankment into the mad waters below. Here are still to be seen the breast-works. Bayard Taylor said of this emminence that it was the moost beautiful view in the United States.

A most delightful trip is that across Lake Ontario, in the large steamers, to Toronto, the leading city of Canada. The steamers leave from Lewiston, at the end of the gorge, pass downward through seven miles of the lower river, past Niagara-on-the-lake, Queenstown, Youngstown and out into the lake, to Toronto—a distance of about 45 miles, and a ride of about two hours.

Buffalo has two beautiful beaches within easy reach. One of these is Crystal Beach, on the Canadian shore of Lake Erie, and within an hour's ride by steamer of the city. This is a fine bathing resort, and the summer home of many cottagers. It is patronized by many of Buffalo's best citizens. No liquors are sold on the place. The other is Olcott Beach, on the southern shore of Lake Ontario, reached by a two hours' ride by trolley, through a picturesque country, through the Tonawandas, the largest lumber port in the United States, and through Lockport where are located the locks of the famous Erie Canal.

Niagara river is a part of the St. Lawrence system, leading to the Thousand Islands, and from thence, past Montreal and Quebec, to the sea. This is considered a particularly attractive trip by thousands of people annually.

Buffalo is within easy access of all the famous resorts of the east. Not more than a hundred miles to the southwest of Buffalo is Chautauqua lake, with its famous Chautauqua Assembly. In the eastern part of the state are the Berkshire Hills and the Adirondack mountains. Here are the Catskill mountains, the scene of the famous story of Rip Van Winkle. The central part of the state is dotted with large and beautiful lakes. To the east is Lake George, nestled among the clouds, one of the favorite resorts of the east, and the seat of the Silver Bay conference. Here also is Lake Champlain. There is the beautiful Hudson, flowing past West Point, Sleepy Hollow and the country residences of the wealth of New York City, down past the metropolis of the nation, and out into the sea. Pleasure seekers take the day ride up or down the Hudson by steamer, on which their railroad tickets are honored.

BUFFALO
OCT. 12-18
INTERL MISSIONARY CONVENTION

Buffalo is the gateway from the west to the historical ground of New England, and such centers as Boston, Philadelphia and a score of other localities, made sacred to every American heart by the history of the past.

It would be difficult, if not possible, to find a finer aggregation of interesting places and pleasant resorts than are to be found in the vicinity of Buffalo. Doubtless many will plan their vacations so as to attend the convention, and then spend a period of sight-seeing or recreation at some of these famous resorts in New York.

Scoville at Atchison.

Atchison, Kansas, has just closed the most successful meeting ever held in that state. The meeting was conducted by Charles Reign Scoville, assisted by De Loss Smith and Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Kendall. The meeting continued four weeks under Brother Scoville, and resulted in 503 additions. Mr. and Mrs. Kendall came two weeks in advance of Brother Scoville, and they with the pastor began the meeting. When Brother Scoville arrived the interest was thoroughly aroused, and there had been eleven additions. Upon the first invitation by Brother Scoville, eight stepped out and from that time to the close, there were confessions at every invitation save one, and that was a rainy Sunday morning when the congregation was made up almost wholly of members of the church. The least nunmber that came upon any invitation was five. The largest number upon a single invitation was 36.

The meeting was a remarkable one in many respects. It was held in midsummer. The weather at times was hot, very hot. It was thought by many that at such a time we could not hold a successful meeting.

As our church building will seat but 400 people, it was necessary to build a tabernacle. The tabernacle seated 1,500 and cost $350. There were many who said to the pastor when the building was under construction, "You do not expect to fill this, do you?" It was filled night after night and proved to be far too small for the crowds. Hundreds stood on the outside during the entire service. People came from all the surrounding country. Topeka sent up a delegation of 80 on one trip. The meeting has contributed members to nearly all the churches in the surrounding country.

People in the church and out of it, when they heard of Scoville's meeting in other cities, would say, "You might hold a great meeting in some places but it can't be done in Atchison." Of course, this is an old story and just what you will hear in any city when a great meeting is proposed.

A real hindrance to us in Atchison was the fact that we have just one daily paper and its editor is an unbeliever. Anything going on in church circles is not considered by him news at all, and finds no place in his columns. We had to pay five cents a line for every news item that went into the paper. If the editor or his staff made any reference to the meeting it was to cast some slur or to reflect on the sincerity of the workers, or the value, or the permanence of the work. By the way, if you know of a good man with brains or money enough to run a first-class daily paper, send him to Atchison. I know of no better opening for such an enterprise than right here.

But in spite of doubts and hindrances the meeting proved a great victory. Atchison had its eyes opened. It has been demonstrated that Christianity is not dead, that the Gospel is still the power of God unto salvation. Five hundred added to the church does not tell the whole story of this meeting. All the churches of Atchison have been benefited and thousands of lives have been made better. The saloon power has been shaken and multitudes of men who did not come into the church have resolved to let whisky alone.

What shall I say of Brother Scoville? Little need be said, for his fame has gone abroad. In persuading men to take a stand for Christ, and do it now, he is without a peer. He is downright in earnest and everybody knows it. He builds up the membership of the church. He strengthens the pastor. The membership of our church love and appreciate me now more than before Brother Scoville came. He never lost an opportunity both in public and in private to speak well of the pastor.

DeLoss Smith is a great soloist. His songs touch the heart. Often Brother Scoville would call for a song in the midst of a sermon. It seems that Brother Smith was most effective at such a time and many more sung into the kingdom.

We had a great chorus of 100 voices, directed by P. M. Kendall. As a chorus director, Brother Kendall is superb. He is good natured, always sweet, and never sour. He never scolds nor finds fault. The people love him and would like to keep him here all the time.

Mrs. Kendall works with the children, and we appreciate what she did just as much as we appreciate Brother Scoville, or any of the other members. Her work can not be praised too highly. The Bible drills which she gave our children will never be forgotten by them, or by us. She is rejoicing that every member in her class that was not in the church has confessed Christ during the meeting.

We have no regrets over this meeting. Everybody is happy and everybody is ready for work.

The Atchison congregation is now the largest in the state. We have a membership of 1,082. Our Bible school is the largest of the Christian churches of the state. Our midweek prayer meeting is so large that we have taken it to the main auditorium. Ever since the close of the meeting we have used new members altogether as ushers and for the handling of the offerings and the Lord's Supper.

W. T. HILTON, pastor.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

The Growth of the Disciples in the Lone Star.

The closing year has been our most prosperous year. Harmony has prevailed and a substantial growth in all directions has been made. 100,000 additions to our ranks in the United States indicate a healthy growth. Texas has supplied one-twentieth of these. Ten per cent of the new churches started in the United States by our missionaries in the past year were planted by our Texas missionaries. For exact figures reporting work done see appended report. Note that this report is only of work done by workers in part supported from our Texas mission fund and does not include the work of the self-sustaining churches.

The rapid growth of Texas in material things calls for increased liberality and effort upon our part. No part of our great country is adding to its population more rapidly than Texas. They are coming from the older states in great numbers. Our cheap, though broad and fertile lands, are inviting. Nowhere except in Texas can there be found such lands and prices, with modern conveniences and advanced civilization. Our stalwart Americanism, our splendid public school fund, with its resultant educational institutions, with churches quite the equal of those found in the older states, are immensely attractive, and that to the best class of people in the northern and eastern states. We must enlarge our borders and strengthen our stakes, in order to properly receive and care for our own coming to us.

Foreign immigration is coming—1,026,499, last year—these in a short time, to become citizens, must be trained for Christian citizenship, or become a menace to our peace and happiness, and a powerful force in the demoralization of our sacred religion, the very foundation and bulwark of our American freedom and prosperity. Great herds of foreigners, together with American youth, are gathering in the cities where ignorance and crime grow rampant, and with the saloon added, they become veritable hotbeds, breeding every form of vice, corrupting the main arteries of our civilization, until municipal misgovernment has given our entire country a bad odor abroad. True, we have our Roosevelt, Joe Folk, Hanley and Pattison. The growing popularity of such men is a splendid omen, and the history of the early training of such men, an unmistakable index, pointing us the way to success. Christian homes, schools, and churches must supply us the men and women who will save our country from the inevitable ruin which would follow the rule of the un-American, un-Christian foreigner, with his brewery and beer-joint. We are glad to testify that a large number of foreigners do not belong to this class, but in many communities in Texas, a lower grade, led by vicious men of our own blood, hold the balance of power. We will find it infinitely more economical and better, from every view point, to train these men and their children for a better citizenship than to meet the inevitable clash which must come with their increased numbers and intensified habits, if not tempered by Christian training—aye, if they are not saved by the Christ who has saved our own Anglo-Saxon race from barbarism.

With this object in view, we must give larger endowment to our Christian schools. We should make it possible for every youth in the land to secure a Christian education. We should be looking out from among the children of the foreigner, intelligent boys and girls, who are willing to become the trained teachers of their own people. It has been demonstrated that the sturdy German, already well educated in the German way, can be trained into a splendid American Christian citizenship. The best teacher of the Mexicans is a true, trained and faithful Mexican. Look ye out such youth and furnish the means for their education if you would convert the foreigner at home or abroad. There is a great need for the translation of our best Christian books and tracts. That which has been so potent a power in bringing light and liberty to the Disciples of Christ, will find a responsive chord in the hearts of all as they shall come to appreciate the freedom with which Christ has set us free. We need training schools for ministers and for missionaries, who are not popularly regarded as ministers of the Gospel—though we are all ministers if we serve. "Let him that would be great among you, become your servant," said the Master to His wrangling disciples.

A genuine conversion to Christ is the first and greatest essential to efficient service in the salvation of men. This will stop our quibbling about plans, and give impetus to a forward movement that will find us succeeding in the Lord's work. In the presence of the enemy of souls, and with opportunities all about us, imploring us forward, we must not stop to split hairs about far-fetched questions, and allow the prizes almost within our grasp to pass us by never more to return.

J. C. Mason.

One result of a thorough conversion to Christ must be united brotherhood, not in opinion or doctrine, as men count doctrine, but united in an effort to so preach Christ as to win men to him. This is the union for which Christ prayed, John, 17th chapter, "That the world may believe that thou has sent me." Faith comes by hearing the word of God. Let us then preach Christ crucified and rejoice that we may be partakers of his sufferings, that the burden of the world's ignorance and sin may be borne by us while we lean upon his promise. "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the ages." Genuine conversion will lead to larger liberality. A Spirit-filled man counts naught that he possesses his own.

We should give especial attention to the call of the weak churches. To that end the annual offering should be made much of. City evangelism demands larger liberality and consecration. United effort, concert of action all point the way to success.

We have a very few who are doing nobly. The number must be increased by ten fold. Sunday-schools are the greatest factors in leading to a useful Christian life. We should unite with the Inter-denominational Bible school effort in order to avail ourselves of the benefit of the experience of experts and carefully impart to all our workers the advantages thus gained.

Our Mexican missions in Texas are greatly in need of better support.

Concentration is a lesson that we are slow to learn. These districts which are working in closest harmony with the state board are becoming more systematic and reliable, and therefore more certainly successful in the work.

While pointing with gratitude to the advance we have been able to make, as shown by the figures in the appended report, I cannot forbear repeating that we must enlarge the work. Crying calls are coming to us from every quarter, "Come over and help us." In many instances a very little help to start a mission or aid a weak church will develop unexpected but latent ability. Men of Israel, help! Our pleas must be heard. The old, old story in its purity must be told. Shall we begin now to do, by God's help, the greatest year's work in the history of Texas? Our Master commands us to go forward and assures us that his word shall not return unto him void.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free. F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Illinois Notes.

The comparatively new congregation at St. Elmo has built a splendid house of worship, and when the debt is lifted the church will be in condition to do large service for the Master. They need a good preacher located with them to lead and develop the work.

Made a short call at Vandalia with Judge B. W. Henry, whose father was my father in the Gospel and a charter trustee of Eureka College and a pioneer preacher of great power in Central Illinois. The judge is a true, loyal Disciple of Christ.

The church at Flora, with its splendid new, modern church and good parsonage, is moving forward. The minister, R. G. Ogburn, has resigned, and C. M. Smithson, of Mt. Vernon, will be his successor September 1. This is an unusually strong church, whose enterprise and sacrifice have won for it a leading place. It will soon be ready to fall in line of liberal support of all the great enterprises of the church. Near here E. J. Hart grew to manhood, graduated in Eureka College in '72, devoted himself to the Christian ministry, brought about 4,000 souls into the kingdom of God and has now passed on to his reward. Are there not other such boys, whose life might be full of great results, if they were encouraged to devote themselves to the ministry? Do our preachers and churches realize our great need of more efficient men?

The church at Sumner is without a preacher, but is keeping up regular worship and the Sunday-school.

The Lawrenceville church is one of the strongest on the Wabash. Brother McDonald has been with it only a short time, but is making a good start. The Sunday-school is one of the most active and vigorous of any that I have seen in Illinois. Hot weather seems to have cooled the ardor of many of our schools and churches, but not of this one. If the Lawrenceville church carries out the large influence and power which our good Father has given it, it will truly be a great and shining light for the life of many.

West Salem has one of the oldest churches of Central Illinois. It numbers 160 members, with 100 in Sunday-school and a Young People's Society of 25. G. W. Ford is the efficient minister, dividing his time with the Shiloh and Marion churches. He is a very useful man and fully alive to the cause of the Master.

The church at Carmi, under the leadership of Frank Thompson, is about completing a beautiful modern church, costing about $16,000. It is built entirely of cement blocks, and makes a beautiful house. It will be dedicated in the early fall. I do not know of a more heroic effort in church building than is manifested by the Carmi people. What can not faith and work, with God's blessing, do?

The Enfield church seems to be in good condition under the half-time ministry of B. S. Kello. It numbers 100 members, with nearly as many in Sunday-school and a C. E. of 20.

McLeansboro has about doubled its church membership in the two years' ministry of E. U. Smith. It has a fine company of young people, and we shall be surprised if from among them some do not enter Eureka College to prepare for large and useful lives. I was sorry to hear any intimation looking towards a change of pastorates. Churches and preachers sometimes are not content to let well enough alone. I could see no reason why another two years of good solid work should not be as useful as the past.

Mt. Vernon is one of the cleverest, brightest, best-improved cities of Southern Illinois. Although a city approaching 10,000 people, it has no saloons nor places where liquor is sold. Its only route to drunkenness is by the express companies, and these are not very happy in their debauching business. C. M. Smithson for two years has led the church to almost double membership and a greatly improved property, free from debt. But he has resigned his work to take the pastorate at Flora.

L. D. Hill becomes the minister of the Benton church September 1. This is a fine field, and we shall expect good results from this happy combination. Sister Hill knows well how to tell the story of the cross, and will be happy to cooperate with the women in enlarging the public spirit and larger usefulness of the church. "Enlargement" is a splendid watchword for us all until missions home and abroad and Christian education shall all feel the warm blood of our liberality.

Metropolis, on the banks of the Ohio, is growing in spirit and numbers under the energetic leadership of T. F. Hall. This is one of the good old churches that is always heard from when the Macedonian call comes. The minister here who does not preach missions holds a very uncertain tenure to his pulpit. Jesus preached "Go"; why should any preacher hold a ministry who does not preach "Go"? This is the home of J. B. McCarteney, a sterling business man whose heart is large enough to retain interest and to make investments in the King's business as well as in stocks and bonds. This church has just royally entertained the Eighth District convention. It is composed of 14 counties in the south end of the state. There are in it 71 churches, 31 preachers and nearly 6,000 members. The C. W. B. M. had an excellent program. Miss Osteene, of Herrin, is district secretary, and presided over the C. W. B. M. sessions and was re-elected to serve another year. There are but nine auxiliaries and one Young Ladies' Circle in the district. Miss Osteene will try very hard to increase the number, and if she meets proper co-operation she will succeed. The spiritual interest and enterprise that comes into the church far outweighs the few dollars that go to the world-wide of the C. W. B. M. W. W. Weeden gave a strong C. W. B. M. sermon. Miss Clara Griffin gave an excellent address on "Children's Work." Mrs. John Duncan's paper on "Ambassadors for Christ" stirred all hearts. Miss Anna E. Davidson, state president, gave the leading address in her happy, clear and powerful way.

The program in the other departments was strong and vigorous. The patriarch of the convention was W. L. Crim, who gave a great address on the "Attractions of the Cross." A district with such men in it as W. W. Weeden, J. J. Harris, A. M. Growden, T. F. Hall, R. H. Roberson, E. C. Stark, T. J. Holloman, F. L. Davis, D. A. Hunter and others whose names are well worthy of mention will surely do some business for the Master. Already R. L. Cartwright has labored five months in the district as evangelist. His services are continued, and give promise of large usefulness. He deserves the cordial support of every preacher and church in the district.

J. F. Alsup, L. D. Hill and R. L. Beshers grew to manhood in this district. A. L. Huff, H. G. Burgess and S. T. Fanon, now in Eureka College, are from this district. We expect others when college opens September 18. Any of our young friends wanting to know more of the college please write us. J. G. Waggoner.

Important Notice to Illinois Sunday-Schools.

Illinois Sunday-schools are requested to observe Children's Day for Home Missions on September 30 this year, and not November 25.

Last year only 83 of our schools gave the boys and girls a chance to have fellowship in home missions as they had in foreign missions. Four hundred and twenty-six schools observed Children's Day for Foreign Missions. At least the same number ought to put the home mission opportunity within reach of the children who are to grow up to possess this country.

The reason most frequently given for the non-observance of home mission day in November was, "It is too near Christmas. Impossible to

In conversation with Secretary W. J. Wright, I suggested that our Illinois schools be permitted to observe September 30 as Children's Day for Home Missions. He agreed heartily. Let us redeem Illinois from the reproach of only 83 schools.

Union Work in China.

I want to let you know how I appreciate THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It is indeed a welcome visitor in this land, or rather a friend that I should miss very much if it failed to come each week.

Please permit me personally to express my joy and thankfulness for the stand you have taken in the various discussions that have claimed attention, especially in regard to "Christian union" and "federation" and the receiving of the Holy Spirit. My heart echoes a cordial "amen" to what I have read from your pen in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. While I have not yet seen a copy of your book on the Holy Spirit, I praise God for what has been read in your paper. I am glad to know from experience what it means to have the Holy Spirit dwelling within, as Comforter, Guide, Teacher, Keeper. He is very real to me, and since receiving him the Word has become wonderfully living, precious, helpful to me. Oh, if I only had words to tell what he has done for me! And of the marvelous way in which Jesus has led and kept and answered prayer, especially since I came to China. If there are any of our people who do not know what it is to be "filled with the Spirit" in "all his fulness" (and there are many lukewarm and lifeless professing Christians who are in that condition), my prayer is that their eyes may be opened and that they may see their blessed privilege, and "go up" and "take possession" of their full inheritance in Christ Jesus.

The "federation" movement is being watched with deep interest. Dr. Mullins' excellent paper gave me much joy. How we praise God for this spirit of union that is in the air everywhere. I always feel at home among the Baptists; I worked in a Baptist mission in Louisville, Ky., for several years. Brother Haley's paper caused another "halleluiah" (May 17, 24). If the homeland people only realized what union would mean to our work among the heathen! We have tried it here in a way no other mission has ever tried it. We have in our mission missionaries from 13 different denominations, and—would you believe it?—without a word being said by any one. Every one of the pedobaptist brethren, one by one, asked to be immersed, some before leaving Los Angeles, some after arriving in China, the last one being immersed about seven months after arriving here. And there are 42 missionaries in our mission. It is so blessed to see all of us together, partaking of the Lord's Supper—Friends, Baptists, Presbyterians, Methodists, Moravians, and all. Really, if we represented these different denominations, these heathen would think we were representing that many different gods.

To Brother Colby I should like to say: "Yes, the Word of God is more powerful than any two-edged sword, and God has promised that his Word shall not return void, but accomplish his purpose, but we here have seen the quickening power of the Spirit in converting heathen and strengthening or raising up these weak, stumbling, tempted babes in Christ."

Fifty-two applicants for one pulpit! Oh, my Father, how can these things be when thousands are dying in this land not having so much as heard that there is such a being as Jesus or the true God? Lord, open the eyes of thy people, give them a glimpse of our waiting Jesus, who can not return until we have witnessed in every nation; give them a vision of souls, lost souls, all over this world, going to a Christless grave and a hopeless eternity! Pray! He will answer.

In his glad service, "till he come," your sister in Jesus, DRUSIE R. MALOTT.

Texas Notes.

Your Texas Notes man has been too busy since the Waxahachie convention to make many notes. At the state convention a special campaign fund was subscribed and a stirring campaign has been on since. We have engaged such earnest and successful workers as A. D. Rogers, W. A. Boggess, V. L. Graves, E. C. Boynton, J. W. Marshall, E. O. Beyer, G. H. Morrison, B. F. Hall, S. D. Perkinson, J. R. Hodges, J. P. Holmes, J. C. Eubank, R. V. Small, J. R. Kelley, A. M. Shelton, C. C. Scitern and others, and no less than 40 "mission revivals" have been held. Success of the permanent kind has attended these efforts, for our evangelists are encouraged to "set in order the things that are wanting in the churches" where they labor; also to provide for regular teaching where churches are planted. This has been done by our workers wherever possible.

This has been a summer of camp meetings. At Fentress, Spicer and Douthitt were the evangelists. In Northwest Texas, Haddock and Minton, with Talmage Stanley leading the song service, at Leaday, A. J. Bush, the writer, Jake Hodges and Fred F. Grim. It was the writer's privilege also to have part in the Panhandle camp meeting, which was held in the cleanest town in the state. Not a joint of any kind is allowed; not a tough character as men count toughness, in all the 2,500 citizens; not a saloon within 50 miles, and it is safe to say that 95 per cent. of the citizens are unalterably opposed to the sale of the intoxicating stuff. The jail is empty, but it is the only empty house in town. And this is in West Texas, where the cattlemen still reign. They are a splendid, law-abiding, big-hearted set of men. The Panhandle Christian College flourishes there. Farmers from every section of our country are settling in that region, where they can buy splendid prairie land at from $15 to $40 per acre—that is, these prices prevailed two weeks ago, but we can not vouch for them now, as land is advancing in price rapidly.

Now, my home is 400 miles from Hereford, and I have not a dollar's interest there. But I

REGIMENTAL REUNIONS AND FORTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY BATTLE CHICKAMAUGA,

CHATTANOOGA, SEPTEMBER 18-20, 1906.

On September 18, 1906, will occur the forty-third anniversary of the Battle of Chickamauga. It is proposed to celebrate this memorable event with a reunion of the various regiments that participated in this memorable battle and the various battles fought around Chattanooga. This reunion will be held at Chickamauga National Park, September 18, 19 and 20, and the present indications are that it will be the largest and most notable gathering ever held in the South. On the above dates, the remnants from the armies of twelve states, comprising the following: Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas and Kentucky, will assemble, many for the first and last time since they marched from its blood-stained fields, forty-three years ago.

Here is one of the great opportunities for the education of the youth. Don't fail to take your children and show them historic Chattanooga, with all its historical connections. It is the opportunity of a lifetime. Go and see the old war generals and other officers; point out the places of interest on the battlefield; let them show you and explain, in person, the markers erected on the battlefield showing the positions of the opposing armies at the time of battle. It will not be long until none will be left to do this noble work.

It will be many years, if ever again, that such an opportunity will present itself. See that your tickets read via the Louisville & Nashville R. R., the Battlefield Route. Call on your nearest railroad agent for rates and advertising matter pertaining to the reunion, or write nearest representative of the Louisville & Nashville R. R.

SIN AND THE WAY FROM IT.—1 John 1:7-10.

"God of mercy, God of love,
  Hear our sad, repentant songs;
Listen to thy suppliant ones,
  Thou to whom all grace belongs.

"Deep regret for follies past,
  Talents wasted, time misspent;
Hearts debased by worldly cares,
  Thankless for the blessings sent."

The "new thought," the "later evangelism," nor anything else can supplant the old Gospel formula of escaping the practice and doom of sin, to-wit: Learning of Christ, faith, repentance, confession, baptism, and then to faith adding virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, charity, love, and all the graces inculcated in the Bible.

We may differ in race, fortune, learning, ambition, ideals and character, but in one particular we are all alike—we all have sinned and come short of the glory of God. We may expect to be regarded as rich, learned or popular men who happen to be sinners, but he with whom we all have to do will treat us all alike—just as sinners who happen to be rich or poor, popular or obscure.

The sun-lit side of the planet is righteousness, the reverse side is sin. From this figure we must not infer we are of necessity half sinful and half righteous, for if we will have Father, Son and Holy Spirit come and abide in us they will, and our nature becomes changed from satellite to star, and we need be in no darkness at all, but altogether in the light of the glory of God as seen in the face of Jesus.

Not in restitution, penances, conformation to human codes of ethics, or the most approved asceticism is there forgiveness of sin or atonement for the transgressor. Either of these and all of them are inadequate without the addition of Jesus' blood. There could be no general remission of sin without the shedding of the blood of the Lamb of God, and there can be no special instance of it save by the application of the blood of Christ by the individual sinner and to his own needs.

Appeals to family love, pride of name, to avarice or ambition, are not the strongest inducement to one to enter upon the "white life." If all these have failed, then tell and retell of Jesus and his love for sinners so intense that even the death dew on Golgotha could not extinguish it. Tell and illustrate the beauty and joy and helpfulness of a close walk with him, and soon love for Christ born in the heart of the sinner will expel the love of sin from the transgressor's heart and stay its practice.

Boys will rarely eat green apples if ripe ones are at hand. Few would be continually reaping the wages of sin if familiar with the peaceable fruits of righteousness. We may each keep multitudes from sin by illustrating in our lives the joy and contentment and power that comes from the daily exercise of faith and practice of Christianity. One uncured patient will deter many from the hospital, and halting disciples keep many from the Great Physician. One sensational cure will fill the doctor's waiting rooms, and a notable triumph of grace wrought in us will effect the release of many from the thrall of sin.

JESUS ENTERS IN TRIUMPH.—Matt. 21:1-17.

Memory verses, 9-11.

Golden Text.—Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.—Matt. 21:9.

Passing through Jericho, where the incidents of the healing of blind Bartimaeus and the visit of Zacchaeus occurred, Jesus came at once into the vicinity of Jerusalem and stopped over the Sabbath at Bethany, where he had warm friends. This was the last Sabbath before the crucifixion. On that day he dined at the house of Simon "the leper"—perhaps a man whom Jesus had cured of leprosy and who had, therefore, like his fellow-townsman Lazarus, a lively sense of friendship and gratitude toward him. And it was at that dinner that Judas Iscariot protested agains the wicked waste of good ointment which was poured out upon the head of Jesus.

Lazarus also was present at this feast and John notes the fact that he was an object of great interest to the other guests, and that the priests planned to put him out of the way because his very existence, after his known death, was a piece of evidence which led many Jews to believe on Jesus. (Read Browning's poem entitled, "An Epistle Containing the Strange Medical Experience of Karshish the Arab Physician." It is an account of the supposed impression produced by Lazarus and his story upon a wandering physician many years after).

We come now to Passion Week. Before taking up the opening incident of it, note how the days of this week were spent—the greatest week of all human history.

Sunday—Triumph, the entry into Jerusalem.
Monday—Authority, cleansing the temple.
Tuesday—Conflict, argument with scribes and warning to disciples.
Wednesday—Retirement, no incidents recorded.
Thursday—The farewell, last supper.
Friday—Suffering, the crucifixion.
Saturday—The day in the tomb.
Sunday—The resurrection.

It was the week of the Passover and multitudes were coming to the feast. John says there was much speculation as to whether Jesus would come to the feast. People were eager to see him. Perhaps, too, they suspected the enmity of the priests and wondered whether he would dare to come.

The entry into Jerusalem was not an organized triumphal procession. It was a wholly spontaneous and impromptu demonstration. Jesus sent two disciples to bring an ass from a neighboring village. Probably the owner was a follower or a friend of Jesus, and the phrase "The Lord hath need of them" was meant for an explanation which would be entirely satisfactory to him and not as any magic to silence his objection.

It was no lapse into human vanity when Jesus consented for an hour to receive the acclamations of the populace. The day of his humiliation was at hand. The faith of his followers would be sorely tried. He wanted to give them every possible memory and association which would help them to be faithful through the dark hours. To have heard their Master hailed as king, to have seen the crowds spreading garments and garlands in his way as he entered Jerusalem—this surely would be a comfort and a stay to them when the strong temptation came.

The next day (following the indications of time given in Mark's Gospel) Jesus entered the temple and cast out those who made merchandise there. (Compare the account of the first cleansing of the temple, John 2:13-22, with the record of this second cleansing, given in the other three gospels and not in John. The same events are often recorded in different order by the different evangelists. What are the reasons for and against considering that the first and second cleansing of the temple were really one incident?)

The merchandise in doves and money-changing was an inevitable outgrowth of the system of temple sacrifice. The business of selling material for sacrifice had grown into a "vested interest" which the authorities protected even at the expense of the sanctity of the temple itself. It was a typical case in which the machinery of worship became the foe to worship.

The cleansing of the temple shows Jesus in his militant aspect. The mild and unassuming character which we have given to Jesus in our thoughts—and which was really his in many phases of his work, would never have overthrown the tables and cast out the traders. But Jesus was capable of a splendid indignation. It was one of the perfections of his character. And it was backed by so much moral force, by that reserve of energy accumulated during his milder moods in his years of self-restraint that, single-handed and unopposed, he could put to flight all the pollutors of the temple.

THE TRIUMPH OF CHRISTIANITY.

John 12:32; 1 Cor. 15:20-28.

DAILY READINGS.

M.	Triumphs of Grace.	Eph. 2:1-9.
T.	Triumph Over Death.	John 10:17, 18.
W.	Triumph Over Enemies.	Psa. 110:1-7.
T.	The Crowning Triumph.	Zech. 14:3-11.
F.	The Glory of God.	Phil. 1:19-30.
S.	The World's Homage.	Isa. 45:20-25.
S.	Triumph of Christianity.	John 12:32.

"Hearken to him as he comes in his might,
Monarch of monarchs, victorious in fight;
Speaks he in anger, the sinner to blame?
Speaks he in sorrow, the dastard to shame?
With no reproach for blindness
He meets his own to-day,
In perfect loving-kindness
Thus only will he say."

When one given to equivocation and exaggeration becomes truthful, when the impatient becomes forbearing, and the bibulous and gluttonous, temperate, and the miser generous, and the casuist charitable, we witness a triumph of Christianity more pleasing to the King than when a parliament adopts a resolution declaring a nation is no longer heathen, but Christian.

Seventy years ago John Williams was killed and eaten by New Hebrides cannibals. The recent religious conference held at Erromanga was opened with prayer by his murderer's son, who for years has been an elder in a Presbyterian church in that locality. Romance can not exceed in sensationalism these daily events in the conquest of this world by the Son of God.

The world's admiration for the man who in the rounds of humble usefulness is too pure to think evil, too kind to injure another, too honest to covet, too truthful to doubt that the golden age of man is in the future, even though he is sans wealth, learning, official ancestry, or social prestige, is a triumph of Christianity over worldliness great as that won by the sun over Boreas when genial rays unlock the frozen streams, fashion foliage in the trees, and cover the earth with verdure.

Christianity never won greater victories over heathenism in ancient times than the Associated Press dispatches report to us almost daily. The governor of Hunan recently gave $13,000 to the Christian Mission Hospital at Changsha. The first missionary entered the city 19 years ago, and was driven out by officials and priests. The change in this conservative people implied in this gift is almost incredible save by those who realize that it is in Christ's program to win this world to himself.

When Jesus triumphantly declared, "The gates of hades shall never prevail against my kingdom," perhaps he knew there would be 500,000 Christians in the world he came to redeem by the end of the first century, and 15,000,000 by the fifth, and 50,000,000 by the tenth, and 100,000,000 by the fifteenth, and 200,000,000 at the close of the eighteenth, and 350,000,000 now who have crowned him "Lord of all." Skepticism may never have blustered more than now, but it has never been more ineffectual.

One whose thoughts dwell constantly upon the humiliations in the palace of Caiaphas, of the Praetorium, and Golgotha, is apt to become spiritually as they are physically who dwell in darkness and whose only light is that of a lamp. To be strong, buoyant and conquering we must also breathe the sunny atmosphere of victory. We must pursue the stricken temple traders, shout with those strewing garments and olive branches for the triumphal entry into Jerusalem, and above the tumult of the crucifixion hear the dying thief say, "Remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom"; and the Centurion's "Surely this is a son of the gods."

Concerning Preparation for the Ministry.

The following correspondence has come into our hands, and we venture to publish it in the interest both of our Bible colleges and of young men who are seeking to prepare themselves for the ministry of the Word:

W. J. Lhamon, Columbia, Mo.

DEAR BROTHER:—Will you please send to my address one of your catalogs? I am contemplating going to school somewhere next September. I am undecided yet as to where I shall attend. I will continue my preaching. I will have to have a position with a salary of $800. And I am going to investigate the matter. I have done fine work at this place. My regular pastoral work has added 25 to our church roll, besides those taken in at the time of our meeting. I have been here 10 months. Hope to gain others before the close of the year. Trusting that I may be able to hear from you soon, I am yours in his name. Yours fraternally,

X. Y. Z.

REPLY TO THE ABOVE.

DEAR BROTHER X. Y. Z.:—Your favor is in hand and noted. I am sending you a catalog and some circulars.

As to position, allow me to say that a number of churches within reach of Columbia are in need of good men, but I fear it would be some time before you could reach $800 as a student. If you go to these churches and take care of them they will, as a rule, I believe, support you as well as they can, and that is all a man ought to ask while he is in school. A young man in the ministry who has the spirit of the Master will not rate himself by the salary he gets. If you are unmarried you can get through a year in Columbia on $200 to $300. Many get through on much less than $200. We have more than a thousand men in Columbia preparing for law and medicine and engineering and agriculture, etc., who do not dream of earning a cent in their professions till they have graduated and are really ready for work. Why, then, should a young minister expect to go to school and receive practically a full salary at the same time? If you really want an education more than you want money, we have from four to twenty years of work for you in Columbia. Meanwhile, if you are worth anything to the surrounding churches, you can live while you are studying, and if you are unusually able and fortunate you can save something. In either case you will be better off than hundreds of men who are preparing for other lines of work. That you have succeeded in your present work is to your credit, and I rejoice with you. But it argues nothing with respect to your accomplishments in academic and Biblical studies. Many a man succeeds in spite of his limitations. If so it is one of the best reasons why he should seek to be a "finished" man, and scholar, and preacher. I have spoken plainly but kindly, and I am sure you will appreciate it. I shall hope to hear from you again, and we shall rejoice if you decide to come to Columbia in the spirit of an earnest and self-sacrificing man of God. Very truly and fraternally, started to tell your readers about the camp meeting. The meeting was held under the district tent, seating comfortably 800 people, and it was often crowded to overflowing. J. N. Wooten is pastor of the Christian Church. J. W. Marshall and E. O. Beyer were the evangelists. H. E. Luck and the writer took part of the burden of teaching and preaching. Three of the ministers of Hereford preached each one or more times. No agreement was entered into. We invited the ministers of the denominations to preach, and feel at liberty to choose their own way. The best of feeling prevailed; not an adverse criticism was heard. All worked and prayed for the salvation of souls. It was clearly demonstrated that brethren with widely differing views can work harmoniously together; also that the one-man pull on the congregation is not essential to success. It was universally conceded that this was the most successful meeting held here for years.

DEAN W. J. LHAMON.

Bro. B. B. Sanders, former corresponding secretary of Texas, is in constant demand as an evangelist, and seldom fails of a successful meeting. At our state convention 25 new preachers were introduced to the convention, and half as many more have come into the state within the last year. Still there is room for faithful, God-fearing, industrious ministers who have succeeded elsewhere and can afford to do hard work for $600 to $1,000 per annum. The large places are easily filled. We need some ordinary men.

Our receipts for Texas missions so far this summer are above the receipts for the same time last summer. We want our people to do their duty by church extension, and then get ready for the largest offering for state missions in November ever made in Texas, or for that matter in any other state. We confidently expect this to be the case. Our people are unusually prosperous. There is no finer field for the old Gospel than Texas. Now is the time to meet the great growth of the state and give newcomers a Gospel welcome.

Quite a number of Texas people are expecting to go to Buffalo. We leave Texas via the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, and hope to go out of St. Louis on THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special over the Wabash route. The writer will take pleasure in securing accommodations en route, if the request is made in time. The churches should each send a delegate, and if your pastor is a married man, send two. Write me to-day if you think of going.

Northeast Arkansas Calls You.

Still we need men for giving the Gospel to this part of our great state. How many? Well, we have four county-seats where we have lots paid for, and a faithful band needing a capable leader; there are two places where men are needed for full time where we have good buildings; there are several towns where we have good buildings, that need a minister for part time, with other good towns near them that ought to co-operate that they may mutually assist each other in the support of a preacher so that no congregation be left without care and time and money be not wasted by unnecessary traveling. In our Northeast Arkansas Missionary district of twenty-one counties, we have but eight preachers of the co-operative class that give themselves wholly to this holy ministry. We need so much men who come determined by his grace and the forbearance of the faithful to stay. We need princely men; men who can endure hardness, as a good stoldier of our Christ. Brothers Browning, State Cor. Sec., Jessup of Little Rock, Ballard at Texarkana, Ragland at Fayettesville, Edmondson, of Fort Smith—these all came years ago, and they have remained, and the work is established in their towns. By faithful continuance in well-doing in hope Brothers Creel, Crank, Pedrick, Kincaid, Ellis, Cross and others in the State may do similar work and accomplish the same kind of results. There is no co-operative minister now laboring in this district that has been in his present charge quite one year. I have been in the state over six years, and during that time no preacher has continued in one charge as long as two years. We need permanency in the ministerial supply in this country. Arkansas is not educating her young men for the ministry, and so we have to look to other places for our supply. Salaries for our work here are not large. Perhaps if we had better preaching we might have better pay. The "laborer is worthy of his hire;" but his salary often needs to be higher than it is. This state is one of wonderful natural resources, the most resourceful, I think, in the Union. Land that sold for $5 or $10 per acre a few years ago, this season will net from $25 to $45 per acre; and this mainly on raw prairie sod. Corn will yield 50 to 75 bushels per acre. Cotton on bottom land produces from three-fourths to one and a half bales per acre. The ground that grows it rents for from $5 to $7 per acre, cash. Market-gardening, dairying, fruit and berry raising, can all be made very profitable. Live stock, such as cattle, sheep, Angora goats are profitable investments. Our summers are pleasant, the winters are mild, and the health of all temperate people is good. I have been here over six years, and our health is as good as it ever was back in our dear "old Kentucky home." Everything considered, good homes can be had cheap. This is a land of fine timber. The mills have helped to make it easy to clear up a good farm for cultivation. Much overcut lands are for sale; partially improved lands are easily obtained; well improved farms can be bought at fair prices. The country is settling up rapidly. Homeseekers and investors come chiefly from Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Iowa, Kentucky and Tennessee.

Stock Ranch

1285 ACRES IN COLORADO

ONLY $21 AN ACRE.

Miles of wire fencing and 10,000 acres of adjacent wild grazing land (5,000 acres additional can be bought—good colony proposition). Great opportunity for a stockman. Occupied as a CATTLE AND HAY RANCH the past seven years by the owner. By reason of health of family must be sold for less than value. 300 ACRES UNDER IRRIGATION (own ditch); grows all sorts of grain, alfalfa, sugar beets, vegetables. Well improved, residence, reservoir, stables; 800 acres fenced pasture. For whole land and improvements only $27,000. Two and four miles from railway stations; 500 miles from Kansas City. Other improved small farms and large ranches—20 acres to 2,000 acres—at $10 to $100 an acre; both irrigated and grazing land. Settled neighborhood, with schools, churches, etc. Address R. A. MATHEWS, 134 Monroe street, Chicago.

What we need and are longing for now are pastor-evangelists to help us take this district for our Christ, and to enlarge our population from a good class of citizens to strengthen our present membership, and to share in the rapidly increasing prosperity now on.

Preaching brethren who want to consider this call, will please get a letter from their home congregation, and also from their state or district corresponding secretary, or board, and sent to me or bring along with them any time they decide to come to look the country over. Any who write me, will please send stamp for reply.—James H. Brooks, Cor. Sec., Blytheville, Ark., Box 24.

Some Missouri Notes.

The Pettis county convention was held at Green Ridge, August 20-21. It was a grand good convention, well attended, good work done, and a brighter future for us.

We preached at Atlantic, Ia., August 19. They have a beautiful new house in which to worship. They are still without a pastor. They extended me a call, but we have not yet decided to accept. They are a grand people there. We enjoyed our visit with them.

B. F. Hill, as preacher, with L. D. Sprague as singer, both of California, Mo., have been engaged to hold us a meeting in October. We are praying for and expecting a great meeting.

D. L. Ammons, of Plattsburg, Mo., preached at Lamonte, Mo., August 19, and attended the county convention at Green Ridge. Brother Ammons can be secured as pastor of some good church in Missouri. Write him.

Revival meetings at Houstonia in progress now. Brother Briney, of Lexington, is doing the preaching.

W. A. Fite delivered a masterly address on Federation at our county convention. We wish all Missouri could have heard it. I hope he will publish it.

Word has reached us that Brother Abbott, our corresponding secretary, is very ill. We pray God to bless and restore him to health, and to us.

Hope to secure a number of new subscribers for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST soon as I can get around to see the parties. The hope is to place a good paper in every home. I have THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, "The Standard" and "The Century," also "The Union" of Des Moines. I would sooner have them than four preachers, for they do not eat, nor sleep, and they speak so many good things to us. Try one or two and see.—I. H. Fuller, Lamonte, Mo.

LIVING IN THE SUNSHINE. By Hannah Whitall Smith. (Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. Price, $1 net. Pages, 254.)

The silver-haired author of this book has made a study and a practice of the Christian's secret of a happy life. The object of her new book is to help those who have, as D. L. Moody used to say, "just enough religion to make them miserable." Mrs. Smith has for years lived close to God. She has had a wide experience of the world and its people. She has been a worker on behalf of her sex and in the temperance cause. Her own assurance can not but be helpful to one in doubt, and we therefore cordially commend this book.

FAULTY DICTION; or Errors in the Use of the English Language and How to Correct Them. By Thomas H. Russell, LL. B. (George W. Ogilvie & Co., publishers. Price, 25c, cloth bound; 50c Russia leather.)

The best of us make occasional slips in the use of the English language. Some of us who know better constantly make errors that have perhaps been acquired by mere habit or environment. "If I were her"; 'Was it him?"; "Who was it by?"; "Let you and I go"; "You are younger than me"; "Between you and I," and such phrases are heard constantly and are passed as slips of the tongue, and yet so common are they that many people look upon these improper forms as being the correct ones. Mr. Russell has done a needed service in producing this little book. It can be carried in the vest pocket, and will help the best educated of us to a better knowledge of a language which is, at its easiest, difficult in its grammatical construction and hopeless in its spelling. There are over a thousand headings treated in the book, under some of which—plurals, for instance—over 50 errors that are not at all unusual will be found illustrated and corrected.

THE PAROCHIAL SCHOOL: A CURSE TO THE CHURCH, A MENACE TO THE NATION. By Rev. Jeremiah H. Crowley, author and publisher, 1113 Shiller Building, 103-109 East Randolph street, Chicago, Ill.

This is the fourth edition of this most remarkable work—remarkable from the fact that it is not written by an "ex-priest," but by one who maintains his position in the Roman Catholic Church and declares himself as a thorough believer in the divine mission of that church. He writes as "a Catholic priest and an American citizen," warning the people of the United States against the dangerous encroachments of Roman Catholics on our public schools, and warning the church especially against the immorality, not to say the moral rottenness, of a part of the Catholic priesthood of America. The revelations in this volume would be incredible did they not come from one whose character and aim are vouched for by men of high rank and standing in the Roman Catholic Church. The information contained in this volume ought to be in possession of the American people, and yet it is difficult to see how it is to get there except through the circulation of this volume, for the daily press and public officials, generally, are very chary about any public utterance that antagonizes so powerful a political force in this country as the Roman Catholic Church. And yet why should this be so, in the case of a book of this kind, which is not antagonizing the church, in which the author thoroughly believes, but is opposing its flagrant corruptions and abuses? Referring to his charges, he says: "If I have falsified, why do they not investigate and prove me false? But I have not. My charges are supplemented by willing and credible witnesses, names and dates. I am not fighting my church, and never will. I am fighting the evil men who, in this diocese at least, are sapping her power, dishonoring her sanctuaries, and blaspheming the God of all Christians. If that be a crime I do not understand what loyalty, decency, and virtue mean." But Father Crowley has had no trial, and will not be given an opportunity of proving the truth of his charges. His efforts in exposing these abuses in the Roman Church, especially as they relate to our public school system and free government, should receive the sympathy and aid of all good American citizens, regardless of creed or party.

JESUS: AN UNFINISHED PORTRAIT. By Charles Van Norden. (Funk & Wagnalls, publishers. Pages, 295. Price, $1 net.)

We find ourselves unable to agree with this Unitarian author in some of his conclusions, but we must readily accord to him the gift of a pleasant style, a simple treatment and a high ideal. Dr. Van Norden has produced a readable book, and we are glad that he has called his picture an unfinished one. This makes us hopeful that he may some day come to see in the Man of Nazareth the real divinity that is of the Father. He accepts almost all that the trinitarian might say of Jesus, except that he was the Son of God. This book is the summing up of 35 years of study, and is an effort to present the real Man—his actual teachings and the bearing of his life upon present religious problems. He explains the miraculous on the modern ground of telepathy, hypnotism, clairvoyance and other psychic powers which he believes Jesus had to an unusual degree. Of course this necessitates attributing many of the wonderful things that are associated with Christ to a combination of credulity and devotion on the part of his followers. The spirit of the writer may be seen in the following paragraphs from his last chapter:

"It is easy to cut the Gordian knot by saying that he was God incarnate; that would begin and end the matter, and there would be nothing to wonder at and nothing to explain; then, superlative qualities of mind and heart would be matter of course, quite to have been expected, and this book an impertinence, a folly stupendous, and nothing short of blasphemy.

"But assuming him to be a veritable man, inbreathed of the Spirit of God, yet still himself, humanity appears in him expanding in sublime possibilities, and in our very failure satisfactorily to analyze, we take courage, aspire and strive."

Oh, Hush-a-bye Land is a beautiful place
For sleepy small people to go,
And the Rock-a-bye Route is the favorite one
With a certain wee laddie I know.

The track lies on sleepers of feathers and down,
No accidents ever take place;
Though there's only one track, and there's only one train,
But it runs at a wonderful pace.

There are beautiful things to be seen on this route,
If you're good you may take just a peep;
But strange as it seems, they are seen best in dreams;
Be sure that you soon go to sleep.

Say good-night to the Sun, for he's off to bed, too—
He can't hear you, so just wave your hand;
The Moon and the Stars they will light up the cars
As you travel to Hush-a-bye Land.

So, quck, jump aboard, it is time to be off,
You have nothing to pay, you young elf;
Just think of the luxury, laddie, you'll have—
A whole sleeping-car to yourself!

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

PART III.

CHAPTER IX.

It was the first rain since the covered wagon had left Kansas City. It had begun heavily in Jefferson City, and the respite of a few hours only emphasized its renewed attack. As the horses plodded eastward, the wheels began to sink in the yielding earth. The air grew chilly—cold enough for Mrs. Weed to have a fire, but not cold enough for the others to enjoy the heated coal stove. Darkness came early, but Wizzen drove on; he knew the way. Night came. At last several lights were to be seen far away to their left. "The river's over there," said Wizzen to Raymund, who sat beside him; "that there's the town that them which lives in it call it Frog Bend, though that ain't its proper name. It's a nickname, that's what I call it; that's my expression for it, a nickname." Wizzen almost chuckled as if he had just invented a word; but the chuckle did not come to perfection because he was so unusually despondent. Wizzen had so arranged the canvas that it projected over the front seat and kept the rain out at the sides, and Raymond felt that if it didn't matter about Wizzen's legs, it didn't about his own. He called to Rhoda that over yonder were the lights of Frog Bend. "The place where Mr. Willby lives?" said Rhoda. "I wonder if we will ever go there?"

"Mr. Willby meant it when he invited us," said Raymund. "If uncle William won't let us stay with him, we'll try Frog Bend and see how we like it."

Wizzen spoke up, trying to be cheerful; " that's what I love in moving about. You have the pick of the hull earth, and if you don't like one locality, you kin hike out—which I am taking for granted that you have some way of doing your hiking—and go to another place. That's what I like about the old lady. She don't keer where I take her, her mind is a regular variety, just like mine." Rhoda might have told him of Mrs. Weed's longing for a spot she could call home, but the girl was too loyal to the old lady to betray her confidence. She stared hard at the distant lights of Frog Bend, and when they were out of sight, drew back into the wagon. When they stopped at last, it was still raining and all four were obliged to sleep in the wagon. Wizzen showed great skill in piling up the many objects in the wagon to get them out of the way. He made a partition dividing the wagon into two chambers; the partition was formed of the goods boxes, the gasoline stove, the tables and the spring wagon seat. The tank was taken off the gasoline stove and put in the end box of the wagon, for the coal stove threatened a conflagration. Then Wizzen and Raymund curled up in their clothes in the end next the front, and Rhoda and Mrs. Weed lay at the back end. Mrs. Weed had put too much coal in the stove (Wizzen remarked that her eyes had been too big for her stomach) and all four lay sweltering in torrid heat, while the rain beat upon their canvas-ceiling. Occasionally Wizzen would cautiously raise a flap for air, whereupon Mrs. Weed would sneeze just as if a spring had been touched. Rhoda, unable to sleep, lay thinking about Mrs. Weed's having a daughter in the penitentiary, and about Wizzen being the husband of that confined lady. The penitentiary had never entered Rhoda's life before in the most remote manner, and it made her think that she had fallen in with very low people, indeed. While she appreciated Wizzen's kindness, and Mrs. Weed's good heart, it seemed very pathetic that she and Raymund so far removed from the other two in training and experience, should be thus spending their days in such intimate proximity. To Raymund it was different. because he looked upon the "overland voyage" as a sort of camping out expedition, a species of adventure. To Rhoda it seemed a piece of their real lives. Wizzen could not sleep, and in his tossings, rendered more violent because he lay quite still as long as he could, then plunged for relief, he endangered the barricade. More than once his foot rattled the gasoline stove and made the tables threaten to fall down upon somebody. Rhoda thought, "No doubt he's thinking about his wife in prison!" and the very thought made her shrink from the nearness of Wizzen.

Suddenly Mrs. Weed grasped Rhoda's arm and said, "Light the lantern!" Rhoda was frightened, but there was no use asking the deaf old lady for a reason, so she hastened to obey. Mrs. Weed sat up in her night cap, then sank down and said hurriedly, "Rhoda, go over there to the bureau and get me that—" She paused for the word. Of course there was no bureau, and Rhoda looked about blankly.

"That—that—" Mrs. Weed was still struggling for the word, and it was evident to the girl that she was suffering greatly. Mrs. Weed nodded her night-cap faintly toward the spot where one of the goods boxes had stood. "That—that—" she said feebly. "Oh, what do you call it—the colorless liquid that smells—in the little box-bottle—Rhoda, call Wizzen—he will know what I want!"

"Camphor!" cried Wizzen, who was already upon his feet. "Mrs. Weed has one of her sinking spells," he went on in a hurried voice. "She gits powerful low, and the camphor is in this lowest box." He indicated one of the goods boxes at the bottom of the temporary partition. "Here, Raymond, git ready to ketch the table if it starts to fall! Rhoda, put on some water to heat, as quick as you kin, and the flat iron, too. Make up the fire!" Wizzen tugged at the big box and the table fell. Raymund caught it and that turned over the other table, and smashed into the gasoline stove. Wizzen plunged over the demolished partition and applied the camphor to Mrs. Weed's nose. Mrs. Weed said in a faint voice, "It is the dinner that gentleman sent us to-day." She referred to Mr. Willby. She whispered, "I feel as if I were going to die. Let in the air, quick. Oh, Wizzen, put some camphor on a rag and hold it to my face—Wizzen, you've been mighty good to me!"

"Shuck!" said Wizzen, almost angrily. "Here, Rhoda, you sit by her a spell." Rhoda, frightened and trembling, sank down beside the pallet and Wizzen sprang to the stove and felt the flat iron. It was not hot enough. He shook the little stove, then darted to another box. Almost instantly he returned, saying, "Rhoda, do you know how to clap on mustard plasters?" Rhoda shook her head. "Then you get out of the way. I'm the fellow that knows how to be a lady or a gentleman, according as circumstances requires either gender. It can't stay on but a minute, the old lady is so tender and pore, but something has to be did—" all the time he was talking, Wizzen was rapidly at work. Mrs. Weed, as pale as death, lay quite motionless. "I know where to put my finger right on the heart of the trouble," muttered Wizzen, never stopping an instant, "which it is only fair to say there is that in her stomach which had of rights best be elsewhere, but strength will not always permit a discarding of what is not necessary. Now, we'll take off the plaster, and if the iron is het—" He had plunged the iron into the burning coals. As it gave forth a grateful little sigh when tested by moisture Wizzen wrapped it up in newspapers and applied it to Mrs. Weed's person.

"If we only had a doctor!" murmured Raymund.

"Don't be wishing the old lady no harm," said Wizzen. "When the water's het it will bring her round. This is one of her worst spells and we'll have to use it inside and outside. You say water is just a part of nature. Well, what of it? They is no doctor like nature. Nature never had to go to school, for what is knowed, it knowed." Wizzen was excited and seemed disposed to be quarrelsome, but that was only because he was uneasy. When the iron grew cool the water was "ready," so he saturated a cloth in it and having wrapped it in a newspaper, brought it to bear upon the afflicted portion of Mrs. Weed. At last the old lady sighed and said, "I am just a speck better, Wizzen—dear Wizzen! I am so much trouble to you."

"Trouble nothing!" said Wizzen rudely. "Got that pain?"

"Awful—it's awful," said Mrs. Weed, who could not hear, but who understood well enough what he had said.

"I'll fix you," muttered Wizzen, and darting to the medicine chest, as such the goods box was proving to be, he brought forth a small pill box. He held up his mother-in-law's head and the pill was swallowed by means of the hot water. "Get down as much of this water as you can," said Wizzen, as he held the cup to the blue lips. It was not long after that before color stole to the shriveled cheeks, and Mrs. Weed became strong and began to talk. Her eyes were very bright, and seeing Rhoda beside her, she took the girl's hand in a hot clasp saying, "Why, Lizzie! It's you, Lizzie, it's you! I didn't know it was Lizzie!" Her voice sounded indescribably pathetic, it was so joyous, yet, afraid. "Can it be Lizzie? I know it is Lizzie!" Rhoda sat quite still.

"You won't go away again, will you, Lizzie?" said Mrs. Weed, beseechingly. "Tell me you won't go away again! We've looked for you day after day. The police have hunted. The newspapers have advertised. Oh, we don't care where you've been, if you'll only stay. Won't you stay?" The large, beseeching eyes turned upon Rhoda, made her chill with fear.

"Don't you mind," Wizzen muttered. "She'll go to sleep pretty soon, and if you move it'll spoil her chances. Nod your head to her."

"Lizzie, he's the best man that ever lived," the eager voice went on. "He hasn't ever said a word against you, not a word. He just hunts, hunts, his face looking so full of pain—"

Wizzen muttered, "She's talking about one of her old neighbors. Simmons, his name is. Mighty active he was, when Lizzie run off.'

"If you knew him like I do, Lizzie," said Mrs. Weed, still grasping Rhoda's hand, "you wouldn't ever want to go anywhere but to kneel at his feet to be forgiven. But he would lift you up. He loves you so much that he has taken me in as if I were his own mother."

"Yes," muttered Wizzen, "Simmons was a mighty fine sort of chap."

"Won't you stay, Lizzie?" Rhoda nodded her head emphatically. "God bless you, my child! There's not another man in th world would treat you as he will. I used to think you had married out of your station, but although he isn't educated, his heart is pure gold, and I want you to say with me, 'May the good Lord bless Wizzen!' Won't you say that, darling?"

Rhoda looked over at the man, tears shining in her blue eyes, and she said softly, "May the good Lord bless Wizzen!" Wizzen turned hastily away and rummaged in the boxes. Mrs. Weed had seen the movement of Rhoda's lips, and quite content, she fell asleep. They watched beside her through the night, taking turn about. At break of day she woke up, and her pain and fever were gone. Wizzen hovered over her, the ear-trumpet in his hand.

"Ah, Wizzen," sighed the old lady, "I am as good as new now, but I have been dreadful trouble to you-all!"

Wizzen put the trumpet to her ear and said, "Well, mother, it's trouble taking care of you, but it's just as it would be trouble taking care of a gold mine if I had it. I ain't got one, which I needn't say, but I've got you, which I would rather!"

The old lady's eyes filled with grateful tears, and she patted the puckered and dry, stubby face of Wizzen. It was the first time Rhoda or Raymund had ever heard him call her "mother," and it was evident that he had worked hard in stringing himself up to the necessary tension in order to sound out that note of tenderness, for he immediately, as it were, let go of the peg, and unslacked. "We'll lay by here a day," he said through the trumpet, "till you are completely fixed over which the horses is almost as tuckered out as you, and then we'll travel. And I want to say right now, old lady, that as long as I live and have strength, I'll keep a-moving and a-carrying you from place to place, and giving you variety continual and everlasting." And he slapped his blue-trowsered leg with the air of a man who means every word he says.

June in India.

BY ADELAIDE GAIL FROST.

The standard coin of India is a silver piece called the rupee; it is worth about one-third of our dollar. There are sixteen annas in a rupee and proportionate comparisons are generally expressed in terms of this coin, for instance "an eight anna crop" is a half crop, a "twelve anna" one, a yield of three-fourths. Kipling says: "No man can toil eighteen annas in the rupee in June without suffering,'" which is to say a man should not overwork in the last hot days before the rains and the first stressful ones waiting for the clouds to come with refreshing for "the used up, over handled earth under foot." We long for the days when "the rain among the trees says, 'Hush, hush, hush,'" and now the clouds are rolling up and we hope and hope. Our epidemic of smallpox is over in the Orphanage with only one death and that of a weak little child, measles reign in the place of smallpox and one of our dear, young girls has "slipped away" with that disease and the sick room is full. One of our best girls was laid away day before yesterday after a struggle of less than six hours with the dread cholera. She was taken sick on the morning side of midnight and was unconscious and dying before six o'clock. This disease is epidemic in the town, of an unusually fatal type it seems, but we pray it may not spread in our large family and with one good doctor and unusually good sanitation—for India—we try to "trust and not be afraid." We had a June wedding on the first anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon's wedding far away in Des Moines. Jangi, one of the first graduates from the Bible College in Jubbulpore and Biti, one of our girls whom he has known a long time as he is a Mahoba boy, were the happy pair." Mr. and Mrs. Gordon gave a dinner on the floor of our dining room to the grown Christians. White table cloths were spread upon the carpet and we sat about and partook of good Indian dishes with our respectable fingers, sitting on our own respectable feet, if not occasionally on the same members of others, for space was limited, but it was a merry dinner and the "fragments" fed the hungrier afterwards. The bride was a fashionable Hindu bride to the extent of partaking of nothing whatever; she simply sat and looked pretty and shy in her soft white mull draperies.

We had a singing practice in our dining room last night and there were three "dhols," or native drums and Mr. Gordon's concertina upon which he plays the native airs very well. They sang with spirit enough to almost increase the vibration of the punkah swinging overhead. This is an attempt at translating one of the songs with a tune that is very popular with both us and the natives. It has such a thrilling swing, and spite of its plain talk does not seem to be offensive to native audiences.

Refrain: My heart falls at the feet of Jesus.

Some wear the rosaries of prayer,
 Some in their foreheads place the sacred sign,
Some wind about them ropes of hair,
 And some, the cord of Brahman line.

Some smear with ashes all their limbs,
 Some are with deer skin ever found,
Some wear the blanket coarse and black,
 Some crawl as snakes do on the ground.

Some worship gods and goddesses,
 Some bathe where Ganges' water flows,
Some sprinkle water by the peepul tree,
 Some call and feed the hungry crows.

Some wander in the jungles wild,
 Some hold their arms as sticks held out,
Some sit where burn five fires,
 I flee, I flee, from things of doubt.

The servants of the Lord beseech,
 Hear men and women, young and old,
Jesus Christ has saved us all,
 No longer shall doubt's dreams enfold!

I will try to explain some of the references. The prayer beads, usually of wood, are used to count the "vain repetitions" of the names of their gods. What habit does it suggest which now exists in Christian lands in the Church of Rome? The "sacred signs," or tilak, in the forehead of idolaters indicates the special god chosen as patron; there are different symbols for different gods. Some of these "marks of the beast" are brilliantly red and sanguinary looking, giving a ferocious cast to the face. The ropes of hair, called the seli (sa-lie) are usually made from the tail of the sacred cow, and are repulsive looking. The Brahminical cord is worn by that caste, and at the time of the investiture of a Brahman lad there are special ceremonies. It is worn next the skin and is often the only clothing of the upper part of the body of that sacred (?) caste. How ghastly the holy (?) men look, smeared with ashes. Thousands of men are wandering over India in this hideous state, their bodies quite naked, except for the loin cloth, and rubbed in ashes. The deer skin is a sure sign of a Hindu devotee, and they sit upon them while worshiping. The black blanket adds to the terrible appearance of the ash-covered sadhus. Sometimes in the cool season we often see men measuring their length in the dust en route to some place of idolatry. This snake-like movement is often seen in Deogarh.

The first two lines of the third stanza are plain. The peepul tree, my teacher explained to me, is the Brahman among trees! It is worshiped by circumambulation. They usually go around it seven times, sprinkling water from a brass jar. Brass and gold are sacred metals.

Many sadhus, or holy men, live in wild, jungley places, on rocky hills and in the desert. I have seen devotees who have held their arms straight up until they are quite stiff and can not be changed; the nails are allowed to grow. Often up on our lake front I see some pilgrim sadhu sitting surrounded by his five smoky fires in the burning heat of the day! This is to "mortify the flesh." Through a hideous wilderness of lies and corruption so many of our brothers are crawling like dumb beasts, and the day hastes away in which we may help them. You will be glad to know that a young man who had started to be a sadhu is now a member of the church in Mahoba. He became a Christian only a few months ago, since Mr. Gordan came, and seems to have very thoroughly left old things behind him.

Forgive Me, Dear.

BY MARY HEWITT STURDEVANT.

If ever I were cold to you
(Sometimes I think you thought me so),
Or if in all you tried to do
Full sympathy I did not show;
If quick to blame and slow to praise,
Or if I caused one bitter tear,
Oh, in these clearer visioned days,
My heart cries out, "Forgive me, dear."

Life's lesson learning year by year
My soul has gained a wider view
Of what I might have been to you,
The tenderer words I did not say,
The smiles you looked for but in vain—
They haunt me with regretful pain,
And from a contrite heart I pray
"Forgive me, dear! Forgive me, dear!"

Happiness.

BY J. M. LOWE.

Her house was little and old. It was innocent of paint or style or ornament. The surroundings were unattractive. But within, neatness and order reigned supreme. Her face was bright, her person neatly gowned and her laugh was natural and free. Her two children were bright and well behaved. She was a good mother. She was a child with them. It was refreshing to hear her prattle as she told them of the pictures and provoked them to wild and happy laughter by her cute and childish antics. She loved them and showed her love by kindly word and helpful deed. They were in her heart.

She was industrious and cheerful. Her well papered walls, well swept floors and tidy kitchen, told how well she used the broom and scrub brush. Her industry kept the cobwebs out of her house and her cheerfulness kept them out of her mind.

It was a singular example of overcoming conditions. It showed clearly that happiness is from within, not without, and may reign everywhere. I wondered how many people of mansion and palace might learn from this busy little woman the lesson of joy and contentment. Not all the joy is behind palace walls nor all the misery in the cot. Both are from within and come at the bidding of the glad or gloomy soul. It all depends upon whether we are slaves to conditions or masters of them.

The secret of her happiness was her love which forgot self in the service of others. I am afraid those who are pining for better conditions will still be pining when the better conditions have come. Be happy now or never.

An Incomplete Story.

"Goin' far, mister?"

They were in a third-class compartment of one of the expresses running from London to Liverpool. The question was asked by a long-nosed, thin-lipped man with pointed chin, scanty whiskers, a slouch hat, and a hungry expression of countenance. He was resting his feet on the opposite seat of the carriage, which seat was partly occupied by a passenger in a gray check suit. The passenger addressed turned partly round, and took a look at his questioner.

"Yes, I am going to Crewe," he replied. "My business there is to sell four shares of bank stock, dispose of my interest in a farm of 80 acres, 10 miles from the town, and invest the proceeds in a clothing establishment. I am from St. Albans, in Hertfordshire. I got into the train there at 9:32 o'clock this morning. It was 49 minutes behind time. My ticket from Euston cost me 13s 2d. Had my breakfast about an hour ago. Paid 1s 6d for it. This cigar cost me 3d, or five a shilling. I have been a smoker for about 13 years. My name is Thomas Williams. I am 39 years old, have a wife and four children, and am a member of the Congregational Church. I was formerly a chemist, but sold out to a man named Treadway, and I am not in business now. I am worth perhaps 2,000 pounds. My father was a cooper, and my grandfather was a sea-captain. My wife's name was Carr before I married her. Her father was a surveyor. The children have all had the mumps, chicken-pox and measles. When I reach Crewe I expect to put up at a hotel."

He stopped. The long-nosed man regarded him a moment with interest, and then asked in a dissatisfied way:

"What did your great-grandfather do for a livin'?"

The most beautiful object in Windsor Castle is the thumb-worn and marked Bible which General Gordon had used for years, and was with him when he was killed at Khartoum, and has been presented by his sister to the queen. It now rests in a little cabinet in a hall through which every visitor to the castle must pass, and is a perpetual reminder of the value of one copy of the Bible to the devout Christian.—J. M. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and a fountain pen to a new subscriber for $1.75. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and a $2.50 self-filling fountain pen guaranteed for ten years for $2.75.

A new volume—The History of Christian Unity—will soon be added to the famous "Garrison Library." This will be uniform in size with the "Helps to Faith" and "Holy Spirit" series. Advance orders for the first edition will be received at any time.

It used to be contemptuously asked, "Who reads an American book?" and that spirit hurts American literature. Many of our preachers as unreasonably seem to be soliloquizing, who reads a book written by a Disciple. That spirit hurts this Restoration.

One of our representatives took 24 new subscriptions at $1.50 each in a five hours' canvass of a small Missouri town last week. The people are glad to subscribe when told of the merits of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. One thousand other friends can do as well in 1000 other towns. Volunteers, write us for samples and blanks.

Desiring something better than your present Sunday-school supplies? Send to us for samples of the W. W. Dowling series and price lists. It is a mistake to use the insipid and colorless interdenominational publications. The children should be taught the plan of salvation as it is understood by the leaders of this Restoration movement. This and other vital truths are taught by Brother Dowling and so impressed on the minds of the young as never to be forgotten.

Make good use of the pink subscription blank found in your last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Religious papers depend for their life and augmented power upon the personal work of their readers as much as churches do on that of their members. Secure the subscription of a friend, and a quarter of a century later some man trembling on the brink of ruin may be saved by the reawakening of religious sentiment fostered by this paper in his old home. Thus may you have a part in the salvation of an immortal soul.

August is not usually considered a very favorable month for church paper subscriptions yet we have recorded a handsome net increase. Aside from the many subscriptions coming in by ones and twos, we are pleased to report the following clubs taken at the uniform price of $1.50 each, to-wit: Billings, Mont., 3; Farmington, Mo., 3, Edward Owers, minister; Greenville, O., 5, Alcinus Baker, pastor; Montpelier, Ind., 5, D. F. Harris, minister; Hartford City, Ind., 16, W. E. Payne, pastor; Marion, Ind., 23, Milo Atkinson, minister; Macon, Mo., 23, Irvin T. Le Baron, minister; Barger's Springs, W. Va., 3; Newport, Ark., 7; Callao, Mo., 5; Bevier, Mo., 28, W. E. Reavis, minister.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S Special to Buffalo goes over the Wabash. It leaves St. Louis at noon, October 11. There will be standard Pullmans, also new tourist and reclining chair cars. The rates are one fare plus $1 for round trip from all points east of the Mississippi. One fare plus $2 for all points west of the river. We are arranging for the best train service en route and hotel accommodations after reaching the convention city. As soon as you determine to go with us, advise us, that we may engage enough cars. A great many preachers and other Disciples will earn transportation to the Buffalo convention by securing subscribers for The Christian-Evangelist. Other things being equal, they will enjoy the convention more than others because of the great blessings they are bringing into multitudes of homes while making possible this trip to themselves at very little expense.

A woman hurried up to a policeman at the corner of Twenty-third street.

"Does the crosstown car take you down to the bridge toward Brooklyn?" she demanded.

"Why, madam," returned the policeman, "do you want to go to Brooklyn?"

"No, I don't want to," the woman replied, "but I have to."—New York Sun.

A New York woman tells of an experience which she had recently in one of the large department stores. She was looking for some house furnishings, and, walking up to one of the floor-walkers, asked where she could see the candelabra.

"All canned goods two counters to the left," answered the official guide, briefly.—Harper's Weekly.

A CONQUERING FAITH

William H. Bathurst.

O FOR a faith that will not shrink,
  Though pressed by every foe,
That will not tremble on the brink
  Of any earthly woe!

That will not murmur nor complain
  Beneath the chastening rod,
But, in the hour of grief or pain,
  Will lean upon its God,

A faith that shines more bright and clear
  When tempests rage without,
That when in danger knows no fear,
  In darkness feels no doubt;

Lord, give me such a faith as this,
  And then, whate'er may come,
I'll taste, e'en now, the hallowed bliss
  Of an eternal home.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

Church Extension still has the right-of-way and should have all through September unless every Disciple has earlier fellowship in this great ministry.

For this reason, and also because of the intrinsic merits of the piece, we give our Centennial Secretary's following article publication on this page and bespeak for it a careful reading. Doubtless many of our Centennial aspirations will not be realized, but we can have "$1,000,000 in our Church Extension fund by 1909" if we all faithfully strive to place it there.

How glorious it is that our people are thinking in the higher denominations now! Two weeks ago this page was freighted with Sister Harrison's report of a gift of $25,000 for a missionary training school in Indianapolis, and here comes Chancellor Aylsworth with the glad tidings of $20,000 having been given by the saintly A. B. Teachout for the enlargement of Cotner University's usefulness to this Restoration.

Our larger liberty in Christ, our passing beyond the distinctively controversial stage of our existence, our seeking earnestly after the best gifts of the grace of God is bearing this precious fruitage, in which we shall more and more abound. How others of greater fortunes than are possessed by these generous donors can pass by on the other side of imperial opportunities for doing good we know not.

Meanwhile our hopes of a great centennial are not centered upon the few large gifts the rich will make to our church interests, but rather upon the almost countless offerings of the poor and middle classes.

Universal Relief.

BY W. R. WARREN.

A great Centennial Church Extension Fund of a million dollars will minister relief in one way or another, or both, to every church in the brotherhood. A place of meeting is a church's prime necessity. Universal recognition of this truth is found in the fact that more money can be raised for a church building than for any other purpose. Every member reaches his highest standard of single offerings when giving to the meeting house. Members of other churches and of no church will help in this when they will ignore every other appeal. When its members and neighbors are together unequal to the undertaking, it has a recognized claim upon other congregations to the end of the land. But if its minister is sent out to present its appeal, the loss of his time from his proper work and the dead waste in traveling expenses work a double injury to the cause. So the Church Extension Board was constituted to serve as a clearing house between needy churches and those that should help them.

It effects universal relief. It relieves the minister from heart-breaking, peripatetic soliciting; it relieves all the churches of frequent and unseasonable appeals; it relieves both the needy and the strong of imposition from unwise and unworthy enterprises; it relieves the homeless church in a self-respecting way with funds that it will send back as it is able, to go out again to the relief of other churches in like helpless state. And the helped church, when the day of its strength arrives, is relieved of numerous appeals for assistance.

There is not a church in the brotherhood that can not be reached by the direst appeal of some needy point. Surely, then, all should make common cause in responding to all these calls through this common agency that has proved its efficiency in over a thousand cases. Let every church become a partner in its beneficent service. It does not speak well for our sense, for our humanity or our consecration when the churches contributing outnumber only slightly those that have been helped. Universal relief should have universal support.

OUR CENTENNIAL PROGRAM FOR CHURCH EXTENSION.

First—To have every minister, that believes in organized missionary work, enlisted to secure an offering from his congregation, or congregations, during the next four years, that the churches may have their part in raising the Million Dollar Church Extension Fund by October, 1909. We had $565,399.22 in the Fund August 1, 1906.

Second—To have every Endeavor Society contribute something each year in order to the creation of a large "Y. P. S. C. E. Named Loan Fund for Church Extension." All Endeavor offerings from societies, as such, will go into this special fund.

Third—To increase our Annuity Fund to at least $300,000 by October, 1909. It is now $186,704.

Fourth—To increase the number of our Named Loan Funds tc at least fifty. We now have fifteen.

Fifth—To secure at least $100,000 by individual gifts, aside from annuities.

Sixth—To house every homeless mission by October, 1909.

A Magnificent Gift.

BY CHANCELLOR W. P. AYLSWORTH.

It will be a pleasure to the readers of The Evangelist, so many of whom are interested in our work at Cotner, to know that we have recently received from Bro. Abram Teachout, of Cleveland, Ohio, a contribution to the endowment of Cotner University of productive securities of $20,000. By his consent this splendid gift has been devoted to the establishment of a department of education and a chair at the head of this department will be known as the Teachout Chair of Education. Prof. J. A. Beattie, for four years head of the State Normal School of Nebraska, and a specialist in this department of education, has been chosen to fill this important place. This opens new avenues of influence and usefulness heretofore impossible to reach. It is all the more appreciated as the gift came almost as a surprise, and was accompanied by expressions of encouragement and good will.

It is our wish, as never before, to press on to greater things in the enlargement of the possibilities of our work in this center of education. I bespeak the prayers and aid of The Evangelist family in this effort to place the institution upon a larger foundation.

Our Centennial Helpers.

The Christian-Evangelist is increasingly newsy which, with its desirable Christian spirit, will make friends wherever read.—Earl P. Kempher, Hebron, Ohio.

Enclosed find $1.50 that moves my date up to July, 1907. I can not do without The Christian-Evangelist, wish it were in every home.—Mrs. Jessie W. Pierce, Belton, Texas.

I am glad to see the signs of prosperity on the weekly issues of The Christian-Evangelist. I have had it from the beginning and am glad to renew my allegiance to it.—F. M. Green, Akron, Ohio.

Enclosed find $1.50 for my Christian-Evangelist. I have only taken it one year but expect to continue it as long as I live. May God bless you in your work.—Mrs. W. R. Thompson, Bluefield, Va.

I will do what I can for The Christian-Evangelist. I am very anxious for its success. I know it is right on federation. Brother Garrison is a grand, good man. I wish every member of the Church of Christ had more of his spirit.—Wm. Irelan, Monterey, Mex.

Sickness and death compelled me to give up The Christian-Evagelist, but when the dear old paper came to me to-day it seemed like the face of a dear friend and I must again receive it into my home. It gives me such great comfort to read its messages of love and hope.—Mrs. W. P. Boyd, New York City.

I feel I could not get along without The Christian-Evangelist. It is a great help to me in every way and I hope it will continue to reach out and get into every home in the brotherhood, and may its noble editor be spared many years to carry out the grand work he is doing.—T. R. Shawlian, Morelos, Mexico.

I have been a subscriber to The Christian-Evangelist back in the '60s even before it was merged into your hands. I have watched its progress with much interest and read its pages with pleasure, benefit and comfort. It has helped me grow strong spiritually. I want it to abide with me still.—Mrs. M. E. Craig, Anacortis, Wash.

I bid our grand, veteran editor God speed in delivering his messages of Christian fellowship and brotherly love. I regard The Christian-Evangelist as one of the Master's finger-boards pointing out the way leading to the fulfillment of his prayer that all may be one. I have been a constant reader of the paper since 1874. It grows better every week.—J. N. Springer, Los Angeles, Cal.

I have long wanted to express my high appreciation of the Easy Chair. Your words on "Prayer" three weeks ago fitted me exactly. I know from personal experiene your deductions are correct. I also fully agree with you in your attitude on higher criticism and church union. I have lately hoped I might be in the vicinity of your "lodge" on Lake Michigan, when I would certainly invite myself to meet you and tell you personally my appreciation of the comfort your writings give the son of the man (Daniel Bates) that established The Christian-Evangelist in January, 1850, and at the same time "wet a line" with you.—W. H. Bates, Memphis, Tenn.

Current Events

Mr. Bryan's Home-Coming.

The home-coming of Mr. Bryan was the great event of last week. Welcomed by Democrats who had gathered from all parts of the country—a reception committee that looked more like a mass meeting—he appeared Thursday evening before an audience of nearly 20,000 people in Madison Square Garden and delivered his long-anticipated address. The speech covered almost as many topics as a president's message to congress usually does. Perhaps he was practicing. He spoke of the growth of the sentiment and practice of international arbitration; declared that our experiment in "colonial government" was a failure and had lowered our national prestige; said his observations in the Philippines confirmed him in the belief that we should give them immediate independence; urged election of senators by popular vote; defended the income tax; encouraged arbitration in disputes between capital and labor; criticized government by injunction; upheld the eight-hour working day; renewed his declaration of allegiance to bi-metallism, though admitting that the increased production of gold had removed the urgent necessity for bimetallism by increasing the quantity of money; denounced the practice of receiving campaign contributions from corporations; declared the trusts to be the paramount issue; asserted that tariff reform was an essential part of the anti-trust program; and defended public ownership of railroads, trunk lines to be owned by the federal government, local lines by the several states. This is a good deal of ground to get over in one speech. From New York Mr. Bryan starts immediately on a circuitous tour which will occupy about three weeks, terminating at his home at Lincoln, Neb. This period will be crowded as full of speeches as possible.

The Illinois Democratic convention endorsed Mr. Bryan for president and refused to endorse his demand for Roger Sullivan's retirement, without which Mr. Bryan said he did not want Illinois' endorsement.

Millions in Fines.

One hundred and thirty-one million and eighty thousand dollars is the sum which the Standard Oil Company will be called upon to pay in fines if it is found guilty on all the counts for which it is now under indictment and is given the maximum penalty in each case. The federal grand jury in Chicago last week returned indictments against it on 6,424 counts, each of which represents a tank-car on which a freight rebate was received. Add to this 126 counts from the Jamestown (N. Y.) grand jury. The fine is fixed by law at not less than $1,000 and not more than $20,000 on each count. Even at the minimum the fine would be something more than six and a half millions. But it is one thing to get an indictment and another thing to get a conviction. We await the latter with interest. And there is a good deal more chance of it than anybody supposed a year or two ago. Meanwhile the Standard continues to do business, however. It is said to have gotten control of the new oil fields in eastern Illinois in the vicinity of Casey and Robinson, where a tremendous oil boom is in progress and scenes not unlike those at Beaumont are being enacted.

The gubernatorial fight in Georgia between Hoke Smith and Clark Howell, of the "Atlanta Constitution," is virtually ended by the endorsement of Smith at the Democratic primaries. It was a lively fight while it lasted. Smith accused Howell of being a railroad candidate, and Howell accused Smith of favoring negro education. Smith explained this serious charge away, however, by showing how unalterably opposed he was to negro suffrage, whatever the educational status of the negro might be. This explanation seemed to be satisfactory to the people.

Moral or Economic.

Senator Beveridge, in a political speech in Maine, says that the issue of the present congressional campaign is not economic but moral. It is a long way from Maine to Danville, Ill., but not farther than from this sentiment to the one which prevailed in Speaker Cannon's recent keynote speech. The speaker's position is that Republican rule is right because it is profitable. The senator's is that it is desirable because it is right—and incidentally profitable. The president's letter to Mr. Watson leans apparently to the former doctrine. It is a very poor exposition of his policy as he has been actually working it out. As a campaign document the president's record is much better than his letter.

The failure of the Milwaukee Republicans to endorse Speaker Cannon's candidacy is an indication, says the Chicago "Tribune," that the speaker's boom does not extend quite from Danville to Beersheba.

The street car strike in San Francisco has become so serious that strike-breakers are being imported from New York by the train load.

The Use of Alcohol.

A representative of the internal revenue service has just returned after two months spent in studying the manufacture and use of denaturized alcohol in Europe. He finds that it is much used for fuel but not to any extent for the production of power. Apparently not even a beginning has been made in running automobiles by alcohol. It has almost entirely displaced wood alcohol but has not made any serious inroads upon the field of gasoline. He believes, however, that it can be used economically in place of gasoline when the proper appliances are perfected. In many parts of Germany he found farmers co-operating in the manufacture of alcohol for their own use from unmarketable potatoes and other waste products of their farms. This fact of the ease and economy of manufacture on a small scale gives hope that the product can not be controlled by monopoly.

The new railroad rate law went into effect August 29. It is announced that the enforcement of it will be complete but not sudden. A machine is sometimes injured by starting it too suddenly. The rate law is not intended as a punishment to the railroads and if there is good reason for enforcing it gradually the public should not object. But the way to resume is to resume.

Rebellion in Cuba.

The insurrection in Cuba refuses to down when President Palma tells it to. From the beginning of active and overt rebellion, a couple of weeks ago, it has shown itself surprisingly well manned, well armed and well supplied with money. Many influential men are involved in it and some high officers of the government are said to be secretly in sympathy with the movement. It is an attack upon the administration rather than upon the republic. The disaffected element has not yet learned the important political lesson that the thing to do with an unsatisfactory administration is to wait for its term to expire and then elect a new one. A new election immediately to elect a successor to Palma is suggested. Failing in that the rebels want to overthrow the government by force. The strength of the movement and its equipments suggests that it may have European aid. The question of the duty of the United States in the case may become urgent if the government is unable to restore peace. We have certain treaty obligations toward Cuba. These, however, do not include rendering service as policeman to put down all rebellions. So long as the lives and property of foreigners are not seriously threatened and European governments keep their hands off, we may safely leave Cuba to settle her our internal quarrels. It is part of her necessary political education. The troubles, disaffections and even armed rebellion (shays) with which our fathers had to deal in the years immediately following the revolution helped them to lay the foundations of enduring government.

Mr. Hearst's repudiation of Tammany's support, which is being tentatively offered to him, is quite as heroic as Mr. Bryan's repudiation of Sullivan. Mr. Jerome, by way of replying to Hearst's criticism of him, says that Hearst is "intellectually sterile, socially vulgar and morally obtuse."

Where Jesus Placed the Emphasis.—III.

The Nature and Consequences of Sin.

When Jesus came into the world He found sin to be a universal fact. It is one of the most obvious facts in human experience. Death itself is not more universal and scarcely less manifest than the prevalence of sin among men. If the existence of sin be thus obvious to ordinary eyes, much more so must it have been to the pure eyes of the only sinless One who has entered into and shared the lot of our common humanity. Indeed it was this moral disorder that brought Jesus into the world. Sin was the one dark blot on the fair face of God's creation which He came to remove. He saw it as a dark shadow projecting itself across all the pages of human history and as a foul pestilential breath scattering the seeds of disease and death everywhere. It is a remarkable fact that Jesus propounded no theory of the origin of sin, nor of its relation to the Adamic fall. He concerned himself rather with its nature, its source in the human heart, and its remedy.

Jesus taught no theory of sin that interfered with human responsibility. He said nothing about "total hereditary depravity." He taught rather that every man born into the world possessed a moral nature capable of distinguishing between right and wrong. "The lamp of the body is the eye; if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is the darkness!" (Matt. 6:22, 23). As the eye is the lamp of the body, so the human conscience is the light of the soul, lighted by Him who "lighteth every man, coming into the world." If this light be obscured through fleshly desires and lusts, until it ceases to shine, how great is the darkness! In the view of Jesus sin is abnormal; it is a disease. "They that are whole," He taught, "need not a physician but they that are sick." He was the great Physician of souls. Holiness with Jesus is wholeness; it is moral sanity. To recover man from sin is to bring him back into his normal relation to God.

This idea of the abnormality of sin in the teaching of Jesus is shown by His speaking of the sinner as one that is "lost." The parables of the lost sheep, the lost coin, and the lost son, show that He conceived of the sinner as one who had gotten out of his rightful place, had wandered from the Father's house, and as such was subject to privations and perils. He "came to seek and to save the lost"—those who had wandered from the path of right and truth, and were straying and stumbling upon the dark mountains of sin and disobedience. Nothing is more tender and touching than His picture of the good shepherd bringing back on his shoulder the lost sheep that had strayed from the fold. So, He tells us, He came to seek "the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

"But none of the ransomed ever knew
How deep were the waters crossed,
Nor how dark was the night that the Lord passed through Ere He found His sheep that was lost."

With Jesus sin had its origin in the human heart. When He told the Pharisees and Scribes who came from Jerusalem that "Not that which entereth into the mouth defileth a man; but that which proceedeth out of the mouth this defileth the man," even his disciples were astonished at His teaching, while the Pharisees were greatly offended at it. But Jesus had to explain to His disciples that "the things which proceed out of the mouth come forth out of the heart, and they defile the man. For out of the heart come forth evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornication, thefts, false witness, railings: these are the things which defile the man." (Matt. 15:17-19.) This teaching was in marked contrast with that of the Scribes and Pharisees. It located sin within the heart and shows that purification of the heart is the only cure for sin. To His disciples He said, "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 5:20.)

This is where Jesus placed the emphasis on sin. No external remedy can cure it. Those who think a change in environment will cure sin, need to sit at the feet of Jesus and learn that it is too deep-seated to be eradicated by a change of surroundings. Nothing is more characteristic of the teaching of Jesus than this view of sin as having its seat in the heart in the form of evil thoughts, desires and purposes, and proceeding thence in the form of evil words and deeds. This fact underlies all His teaching about sin, and indeed underlies His sacrificial death for sin. Sin, with Jesus, is not a mistake of the intellect; it is vastly more fundamental than that. It is a wrong purpose of the heart, a yielding to the lower and baser motives against the moral sense and in violation of conscience.

Jesus' estimate of the awful consequences of sin may be seen also from such passages as the following: "And if thy right eye causeth thee to stumble, pluck it out and cast it from thee; for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish and not thy whole body be cast into hell. And if thy right hand causeth thee to stumble, cut it off and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish and not thy whole body go into hell." (Matt. 5:29, 30). No matter how highly cherished may be the thing that causes thee to sin, put it away, for nothing can compensate for the loss of one's soul by sin. Again, He taught His disciples to "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." (Matt. 10:28.) In what more graphic way could our divine Teacher indicate the awful consequences of sin than He has done in this language?

Since sin is the great disturbing force in the world producing all the disorder and conflict which exist among men, poisoning the fountains of our individual, domestic, social and political life, how important it is that we emphasize the teaching of Jesus on this subject, locate sin where He locates it, regard it as He regarded it, as the one thing to be feared and avoided, if we would carry forward successfully the great work of redeeming the world from sin! If the sinner is, indeed, lost, alienated from God—the source of life and all peace—and, therefore, morally dead, subject to all the destructive ravages of sin, ending in everlasting "banishment from the presence of God and from the glory of His power," what sacrifice is too great on our part to effect the recovery of men from sin for whom Christ laid down his life?

The Country Church Problem.

Just now the perennial country church problem is to the fore. While the matter is being discussed it may be well to consider some of the features which are not usually regarded as factors of the problem. Very few well-informed men among us will seriously contend that our country churches, taken as a whole, are in a healthy condition. A few of them are doing fairly well, but it is perhaps true that the majority are far from prosperous, and not a few are practically dying or are already dead. This surely ought not to be the case. Much of our prosperity in the past, as a religious people, was owing to the vigorous life of our country churches. There are no insuperable reasons why this same kind of life should not be manifested at the present time. It is freely granted that conditions have somewhat changed since the early days of our religious movement, and that these conditions require a change in our methods in some respects. Still it remains true that some of the changes that have been made have not been productive of the best results. At any rate it will not be unprofitable if we look candidly at some of the causes which seem, at least, to operate against the success of our country churches. But in taking a candid look at the present situation it is not our purpose to find fault with any one for the state of things which really exists. It is probably true that in most cases every one has tried to do the very best that could be done under the circumstances. However, some general statements may be helpful at particular points where we think improvement might be made.

In some instances, at least, the management of our country churches is entirely too autocratic. Everything seems to be in the hands of two or three men. These men are generally men of excellent character and are most anxious for the church to succeed. They do everything in their power to make success. They are, for the most part, liberal with their means, and in some cases they are practically the main reliance in sustaining the cause. But we fear they do not always act wisely. It is well known that very many of our country churches are so entirely managed by a few men that even the calling of a preacher is done without consulting the church as a whole. The preacher is "hired" by the elders, and then the congregation is informed as to what has been done, but in no real sense have the people been consulted in the matter. As a result many of the members will feel little sympathy with the preacher and less perhaps with the work which is to be done. Apart entirely from this unscriptural way of doing things, it is well to consider the matter from a practical point of view. This is emphatically the day of the people. Any method of church government which ignores this fact will probably come to grief. It may succeed for a time, but it is certain to finally end in failure. This is especially true where the financial question is involved. There is always a financial element in the calling of the preacher, and yet in many of our country churches the preacher is hired (to use the term usually employed) without consulting the congregation at all; and yet the congregation is expected to contribute largely to the financial support of the man who has been "hired" by the elders, or by those who are specially managing things. This, in our judgment, is an unwise way of meeting the case. Doubtless it is generally better that the elders should do the preliminary correspondence with men whose services are being sought, but there comes a time when the church itself should be informed as to the facts of the case and asked to participate in the invitation which is to be extended; and the final decision with respect to the matter should be the act of the church at a meeting specially called for that purpose. Then if things do not turn out satisfactorily the church can not lay the blame upon a few men who would certainly be blamed if the whole church should not be consulted. Taxation without representation is un-American.

Not the least advantage of taking the course suggested would be the united sympathy which it would secure for the man who comes to minister to the people. The church would regard him as their own minister and not simply the minister of a few men who had hired him without the consent of the church. It is readily conceded that the problem of church management everywhere has its difficulties and these difficulties are perhaps greater in our country churches than anywhere else; and yet this problem is certainly not simplified by placing the whole management in the hands of a few men, however well qualified they may be for their difficult task. But it happens sometimes that these men have very few qualifications for the work, though they may be worthy of all praise for the sacrifices which they make. Even the highest Christian character and the noblest consecration can not always compensate for a lack of wisdom in the management of a church. In any case it must be emphatically affirmed that no permanent success can be assured in the present day without recognizing the democratic element which is so prominently characteristic of the age. At another sitting we may take a look at some other features of the problem under consideration.

Notes and Comments.

Bro. T. P. Haley, of Kansas City, is not a prophet without honor in his own city. His recent call to another year's pastorate of the South Side Church in that city was made the occasion by the local press of most honorable mention of his long and useful service in the cause of the Master. "The Kansas City Journal" gives quite a lengthy account of his life and labors, and a highly complimentary editorial notice, found elsewhere, which shows the high place which our distinguished brother holds among the people of the city in which he has so long lived and labored. So far as the brotherhood itself is concerned, Brother Haley's place has long been secure as one of the ablest of our ministers and pastors, as among the manliest of men, the truest of friends, and a Christian gentleman without reproach. In honoring such a man the city of his adoption honors itself.

It was kind of the president to issue his spelling reform order just in the middle of August, when the newspapers were needing a new topic interesting enough and light enough for the hot weather. The substance of the order was that the public printer, in printing executive messages, should follow the spelling recommended by the spelling reform committee, of which Professor Brander Matthews, of Columbia University, is chairman, in a list of 300 words which that committee has put forth. The president's stenographers have received a similar order. Many of the comments which this action has elicited are based on a misunderstanding of it. Two facts are to be remembered. First, the order relates only to the spelling of the president's own messages and correspondence. It is not an attempt to reform the spelling of the world. Doubtless the president would be glad to see other people, including publishers and school teachers, take the same action that he has taken, but he is exercising no authority in the matter. In the second place, the order has reference to the spelling of only 300 words, more than half of which are already commonly spelled in the new way. The following include all the changes in the list: e for œ, as in esthetic; o for ou, as in honor; er for re, as in theater; t for final ed, as in dropt; single for double letters in a few cases, as in fulfil; the dropping of final silent letters as in program; dropping silent medial e, as in judgment; dropping silent gh or ugh, as in tho, thru, and thoro. The only changes which can be considered at all radical are the last mentioned group and the final t in place of ed. Of these, the former was adopted years ago by one great publishing house, and the latter is directly in line with the natural development of the language as illustrated by such universally recognized words as blest, burnt, gilt (for gilded) and many others. A well-known literary man comments that "it serves us right" to have our spelling reform undertaken by energetic but amateur hands since the experts will not undertake it. But the experts have undertaken it. This list of 300 revised words is their work. The president is not reforming the English language, but is simply reforming his own English according to recommendations made by a committee of experts headed by Professor Matthews.

Current Religious Thought.

Let us not think we alone are advocating Christian unity The following taken from the "Central Christian Advocate" (Methodist), is evidence that others are also longing for the day in which all God's people shall be one.

> Without a doubt union is in the air. That which was apparently insolvable a few years ago is now being gradually brought to a point of convergence. It will be conceded by every thoughtful mind that the union of two or more churches is a splendid thing when no principle is sacrificed for the good of humanity and the glory of God. This question of church federation is probably the most vexed and yet the most important problem in the ecclesiastical world. Whether men wish it or no, the question will be discussed and thoroughly aired. There are those who earnestly desire organic union of all the branches of the Christian Church, while, on the other hand, there are those who stringently oppose any such movement. In all the unions that have ever taken place, there has been considerable opposition. The union of the new school and old school branches of the Presbyterian Church in the United States was consummated only after years of discussion and negotiation.
> Then the union of the Presbyterian bodies in Canada in 1875 was not completed until a great deal of opposition had been given. The union of the Methodist Churches in 1884 met with similar opposition, a number of both ministers and laymen feeling very keenly the position into which they were thrown. The opposition in Scotland to the amalgamation of the Free and United Presbyterian Churches is still fresh in our memory. When we consider the opposition which marked almost every union in the past, we are surprised to find how little antagonism has accompanied this prospective union thus far. This condition of things indicates a very general conviction that union is not only desirable but practicable and should be reached as soon as possible. It is one of the signs of the times that the old spirit of rivalry is passing away and that the churches are thinking more about the great fundamentals of Christianity and the problem of saving souls than about doctrinal differences or even ecclesiastical polity. If the mind of the church is fixed upon the great central truths of Christianity, the outlook for evangelism is infinitely brighter than though the denominations were wrangling over theological doctrines or hurling deadly catapults at one another in the battle for supremacy.

PENTWATER MUSINGS.

The half-full moon has turned the night into a softer day, and its beams of light have converted the lake into a silver sea. The sun went to his rest, this evening, in a cloudless sky from which the quiet stars are now shedding their mild radiance. The wind did not lay with the setting sun, as usual, and the lake is sending up its deep monotone, filling the night with its solemn music. The night wind, sighing through the pines and hemlocks, makes a fit accompaniment for the anthem of the waves. Perhaps it was not wholly from fear of the Jews that Nicodemus came to Jesus by night. There is a solemnity in its very stillness, and in the quiet ministry of the stars which look down upon us like angels' eyes, which fits the soul for religious meditation. Perhaps it was in some such mood as this that the Jewish Rabbi sought the great Teacher to hear from him the words of eternal life. Then, as now, the night wind moaned through the trees, and Jesus used it to illustrate the great fact of the birth from above. With what freedom it sweeps to-night across the lake out of the west, and who can tell its starting-place or prophesy its destination? There will always be mystery connected with the movements of the divine Spirit upon the spirit of man, and he who imagines that he has mastered all the secrets of that Spirit, in his method of reaching, convicting, illuminating, comforting, and guiding the human soul, has most to learn of his ways with men. The Jewish doctor learned from the Master that night that his participation in the kingdom of God was not a thing of descent from Abraham, nor yet a matter of the acceptance of John's baptism, but a question of life from the life-giving Spirit. This is the distinctive difference between Judaism and Christianity. To be a Christian is to possess the new life which Jesus came to give to men. "He that hath the Son hath life."

On last Sunday evening just at the going down of the sun, and while all the west was crimson and gold as painted by his farewell beams, a group of more than fifty people gathered on the sand to hold the first beach service of this resort. A brisk wind was blowing from the northwest, the great lake was sending up a resounding anthem, and so the wind and the waves joined their music with ours as we sang some of the sweet old songs of redeeming love. An Episcopal rector from Chicago, Dr. Gardner, W. F. Richardson of Kansas City, and C. M. Fillmore of Cincinnati, were the ministers present, besides the writer. After a few of the old hymns the little company recited together the twenty-third Psalm and the rector led our hearts in prayer. In a brief introductory talk we stated what the beach meeting seemed to us to stand for: (1) For that conception of religion which connects it with all life, outdoors as well as indoors, and every day of the week as well as Sunday; which makes it the great, regulative principle of all our conduct, and makes all life holier and sweeter. (2) For Christian fraternity and unity. No denominational lines are drawn in these meetings on the sand. We are all of one faith and of one church here, and no sectarianism is allowed to poison or embitter the cup of our common fellowship. No narrow, circumscribed ideas of fellowship would comport with this broad lake on whose sands we meet, nor with the infinite heavens that bend above us. (3) For mutual acquaintanceship and good neighborhood. In these meetings we learn to know each other better and to love each other more, and so to become mutual helpers while we are sojourning together in our summer homes. Brief addresses were also made by Dr. Gardner and W. F. Richardson, and when we had sung "Blest be the tie that binds" and "God be with you till we meet again" and the benediction had been pronounced, the people greeted each other cordially, and said how good it was to have such a service and how much they had enjoyed it.

After an unusually warm spell of weather for this region, we have been favored with copious rains and cooler breezes. One of these culminating down-pours of rain took the form of a terrific thunder-storm which occurred just after we had retired at night. Flash after flash of lightning was followed by peal after peal of detonating thunder, whose reverberations over the lake and through the forest were truly awe-inspiring. The last of these lightning-bolts and thunder-peals were simultaneous, and we knew by the deafening crash that the bolt had descended to the earth not very far from us. It was not until morning, however, while we sat at the breakfast table that it was discovered that the lightning had struck one of the tall pine trees standing not more than twenty feet from the cottage, following its trunk from the very top down to the earth and making its pathway very distinct by the bark which it threw off. Not till then did we realize how near the death-dealing stroke had come to us, and we felt truly grateful for our preservation from danger. Another storm came in the early morning. As we waked and looked out of our west bedroom window the storm was advancing over the lake when suddenly the sun, rising above the hill-top on the east, shot the clouds and rain through with its rosy light, presenting a scene of surpassing beauty. So may the Sun of Righteousness, shining upon our earth-lives make beautiful the clouds which encompass us. For several days the air has been cool, the skies very blue, and the atmosphere so crystal clear that distant objects along the shore or out on the lake seem near by. To-day a stiff breeze blows from the northwest and Neptune is again pasturing his white flocks on the green meadows of the deep. These glorious days have in them a hint of autumn, and the closing, not many days hence, of our sojourn by the lakeside for the present season.

Already the population of "Garrison Park" and of the Oceana Beach Company is thinning out for the season. The Duncans and the Moores have left us, and the coming week will witness the departure of most of those that remain. These cooler days create a desire in those who can do so to return to their homes and to their work. A few of us are compelled to linger until as near the frost-line as possible to make it safe to return. No season of the year, however, is more enjoyable on this shore than these early autumn days. The club-house here keeps open next week for the coming of the young men of the Campbell Institute, who are coming to enjoy a little fellowship together, and with Nature and with the God of Nature. This, we trust, will be but the beginning of an annual meeting of not less than a week, not limited to the Campbell Institute, but held, perhaps, under its auspices, for devotional Bible study, the deepening of the spiritual life, and the consideration of those things which have to do with the best interests of our cause. A month earlier, perhaps, would be the best time, say the first week in August, for such a meeting. Such a meeting of devout spirits waiting upon God and seeking his spirit of counsel, would be far-reaching in its influence for good. This organization embraces a large number of the most scholarly young men in our ranks, together with a number of middle-aged ministers and a few others that are "older grown and gray," and their aim in thus associating themselves together is their own mutual improvement, and the advancement, in all that is highest and best, of the cause to which they have consecrated their lives.

One of the sweetest things which comes to us in this life of mingled joys and sorrows is our human friendships which have been sanctified by Christian fellowship. For more than a week we have been enjoying here in our summer home the most delightful Christian intercourse with Brother and Sister Richardson of Kansas City. Brother Richardson has been known to the Editor of this paper from his boyhood, when he was associated in the office where "The Christian," as the paper was then called, was published, and we have watched with deepest interest his growth in power and influence until he stands to-day in the foremost rank of our preachers and pastors, seeking not his own advancement, but that of the cause, standing firm on the old truths, with his mind open for whatever new light God may be giving to his church. He has grown in intellectual breadth and in spiritual depth, through all the years of his ministry. Sister Richardson is entirely like-minded with her husband, sharing in his labors and triumphs, an efficient helpmate in his pastoral work as well as in their home, and their two sons and two daughters who have now grown to young manhood and young womanhood are worthy of such parents. It has been a delight to have these two faithful friends and servants of God in our home for a while. Brother Richardson kindly preached for us here at Pentwater last Lord's day and is to do so next Lord's day before they return to their home. They both seem to have greatly enjoyed their visit here, and we are sure their coming has proved a blessing not only to our household but to the church and the people of Pentwater.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

One can never fully see London. Every day there are a thousand new things to look up in the great city and from the top of a bus the vision is kaleidoscopic and never ending. We were near the British Museum and so spent our first day among its treasures. Weeks and even years might be given profitably to these collections alone. A million people visit it yearly. Here is a library of 2,000,000 as one thing. One of the first collections has a most fascinating interest; manuscripts and old books. You read original autograph letters of England's kings and queens: Elizabeth and Victoria, George III, and Cromwell; and of such men as Pitt, Burke and Walpole, Nelson and Wellington, Dickens, Carlyle, Kant, Schiller, Gibbon, manuscripts of Keats, Browning, Burns, Pope, Tasso, Defoe and others; a letter from Tennyson "Penny-post maddened;" a letter from John Wesley saying "I still think when the Methodists leave the church of England God will leave them," and exhorting brother Jackson to "advise Ridel not to please the devil by preaching himself to death." One sees the Bible in the earlier English version of Wiclif and the Codex Alexandrinus which with the Vaticanus and Sinaiticus ranks as the oldest, the original bull of Leo X conferring on Henry VIII the title of "Defender of the Faith;" and first editions of "Paradise Lost" and "Pilgrim's Progress" and Shakespeare's first folios, 1623. Here are the great Elgin marbles from Athens, figures executed by Phidias, the greatest sculptor the world has known; and fragments of the Temple of Diana at Ephesus; and remains of the magnificent Mausoleum of Halicarnassus; and Assyrian and Egyptian, Etruscan and Babylonian antiquities of untold value and interest. Here are ancient gold ornaments and gems, the finest collection in the world, with the celebrated Portland vase and a single gold enameled cup 550 years old that cost the museum $40,000. Here is the famous Rosetta stone, a slab of black basalt with three inscriptions in Greek, Demotic and Egyptian, a decree of the priests of Memphis conferring divine honors on Ptolemy Epiphanes, which furnished the key to the decipherment of the Egytian hieroglyphs.

From the museum it is an easy stroll to the national gallery. First one gets among the portraits, twelve hundred of them, representing eminent men and women of all ranks and ages, from 1134 down to 1906, kings, statesmen, poets, judges, writers, warriors, actors, scientists, divines, pictures by all the great artists from Van Dyck, Kneller, Gainsborough, Reynolds and Watts down, of all the great people, that have made England great. I saw here Washington, a Stuart portrait, Franklin, and "Charles, first Marquess Cornwallis, who distinguished himself bravely in the American war." The national gallery proper has many great pictures. Here first of all are the Turners; his "Sun Rising in a Mist," and "Dido Building Carthage" compared with Claude Lorraine's "Isaac and Rebecca," and "Embarkation of the Queen of Sheba"; his "Death of Nelson," "Childe Harold's Pilgrimage," and "Burial at Sea." Gorgeous dreams they are by the greatest landscape painter that ever lived. Here are Raphael's "Vision of a Knight" and his "Virgin and Child," known as the "Ansidei Madonna," which cost $350,000; and Titian's "Bacchus and Ariadne" one of the best of the works of the old man who lived to be 99 and painted and worked to the end; and Paul Veronese's great picture, "The Family of Darius at the Feet of Alexander the Great,"—"the most precious Veronese in the world," said John Ruskin, and "The Money Changers," and Murillo's "Holy Family," and Reni's "Holy Family" with John playing with the cat, and Landseer's "Shoeing" and "Dignity and Impudence" and "Sleeping Hound," and Reynolds' "Age of Innocence" and "Heads of Angels" and "Dr. Samuel Johnson," the best conception of the philosopher in the brown coat and metal buttons, and hundreds of others in the twenty-two rooms under the "pepper box turret."

There are other collections in London that one greatly enjoys. The Tate gallery has the modern pictures, twenty-five by Watts, for example, the most impressive being his "Dray Horses"; then "Her Mother's Voice," "The Doctor," "Uncle Tom and His Wife for Sale," and "Life's Illusions," and "The Equestrian Portrait," by different masters specially pleased me. The Wallace is another choice collection. Pictures, furniture, porcelain, minatures, enamels and arms and armour worth twenty millions are brought together in the old Hartford House. Wonderful portraits by Rembrandt; canvasses by Meissonier that may be examined with a microscope; perfect heads by Greuze, such as "Innocence," "Sorrow," "Fidelity"; portraits by Gainsborough and Reynolds, works of Rubens and Murillo and Velasquez that are things of beauty and a joy forever are here. One wearies of the embarrassment of riches.

I strolled about this neighborhood and found Henry Hallam's home and the house where Gibbon lived and wrote the "Decline and Fall," and the home of Mrs. Browning and Barry Cornwall and Adelaide Proctor; where Turner painted and Wilkie Collins and Anthony Trollope died and Herschel lived and where Dickens wrote from 1839-51 "The Old Curiosity Shop," "Martin Chuzzlewit," "Dombey and Son" and "David Copperfield." All these are near Cavendish square, and where I roomed, Russell square, both Thackeray and Dickens lived and F. D. Maurice and Justice Mansfield, Thomas Hughes, author of "Tom Brown's School-days," Henry Cavendish and Isaac D'Israeli. The square figures in "Vanity Fair." So all over London one can find such associations: Fleet street and the Strand, Picadilly and Whitehall, Chelsea and Pall Mall, Paddington and Hampstead.

An easy walk brought me to Trafalgar square, the finest place in Europe; and then past the "Horse Guards," where the big soldiers in red plumes, white breeches, and high top boots are exhibited; and Downing street, where England's biggest brained men govern the empire, to the parliament buildings. The splendid gothic pile cost $15,000,000, but it does not impress one like the capitol at Washington. The rooms of the lords and commons, while beautifully decorated, are painfully small, the latter having 476 seats while there are 670 members; and the house of lords has a membership of 550 noble personalities entitled to sittings, and the throne and the "woolsack." The galleries are very restricted and ladies are admitted behind a screen called "the Grille": grilled women as we have grilled mutton chops. There is little of the liberty of our houses of congress. Most interesting feature of the parliament buildings is old Westminster hall. Begun in 1097 it is associated with seven centuries of English history. It was the scene of the trial and condemnation of Charles I, and the proclamation of Cromwell as Lord Protector, whose body eight years later was rudely dragged from Westminster Abbey and thrust into the pit of Tyburn while his head was stuck on one of the pinnacles of the tower for twenty-five years until blown down by the wind. Here many of England's greatest were condemned to die, William Wallace the brave Scot, Sir Thomas More, the Earl of Essex and the Earl of Strafford, and here after a seven years' trial Warren Hastings was acquitted.

Across the way is St. Margaret's Church, where Sir Walter Raleigh's body was buried after they had cut off his head in the old Palace yard; and adjoining is Westminster Abbey. Edward the confessor was the founder of this church and crowned here, as was every British monarch down to Edward VII, save Edward VI, and he died uncrowned. One stumbles here among the ashes of kings and queens. As Washington Irving says: "We feel that we are surrounded by the congregated bones of the great men of past times who have filled the earth with their renown." Here rest Elizabeth and Mary Queen of Scots, and Bloody Mary close together, and Addison and Bulwer and William Pitt and Gladstone, Rare Ben Johnson buried at his request in an upright position; George Peabody and David Livingstone, Chaucer, Tennyson and Browning, old Parr, who died in 1635, at 152 years of age, and many others well known or little known. One loves to linger here. "When I look upon the tombs of the great every emotion of envy dies within me.

When I read the epitaphs of the beautiful every inordinate desire goes out. When I see kings lying by those who deposed them; when I consider rival wits placed side by side, or the holy men who divided the world with their contests and disputes I reflect with sorrow and astonishment on the little competitions, factions and debates of mankind," said one who sleeps here with crowned heads.

Walking on, I came to St. Paul's, colossal and majestic, completed by Wren in 1710, who was building at the same time thirty other city churches, no two of which are alike, and all of which are to-day the pride of London, and for which he was receiving the princely salary of a thousand dollars a year! When an old man he was taken once every year to a spot beneath the dome where he could contemplate the work of his hands. He died at 91, and we read here on his tombstone the famous words, "Lector, Si monumentum requiris, Circumspice"—"Reader, if thou seekest his monument, look around"— and it is declared, "Non sibi, sed pro bono publico"—"he lived not for himself but for the public good." Nelson and Wellington are both buried here, but John Howard's tomb and Chinese Gordon's most impressed me. The inscription on the latter reads: "At all times and everywhere he gave his strength to the weak, his substance to the poor, his sympathy to the suffering, his heart to God," and on the former, "He trod an open but unfrequented path in the ardent and unintermitted exercise of Christian charity and from the throne to the dungeon his name was mentioned with great respect, gratitude and admiration."

Modern Religious Persecution---A Defense

By B. L. Chase

8. Advice to the Disciples.

First of all I would advise the Disciples to put the glorious institution of persecution upon a solid basis, by officially organizing it, and commending it to the favor of the brotherhood. Unless something of this sort is done it is likely to languish in the atmosphere of this truth-seeking and liberty-loving age. We have fallen upon degenerate days. Every one thinks that it is his duty to find the truth and be made free; whereas there are only one or two who can find the truth, or who know it when they find it, and be made free. We ought to put these men in charge of our faith and practice to keep them sound and pure. Only a few men in a religious body can be safe judges of what is true and right. We must have our judges in the church as in the state. Only a few men, not all citizens, are elected to be judges over us.

Nothing would so completely distinguish the Disciples as a "peculiar people" as the revival of that ancient office of Inquisitor, called the "Holy Office." It has been in more or less successful operation among the Disciples for 15 years, but it has never received the official sanction as a body. A few learned and peculiarly endowed men among us have carried it on as a purely personal enterprise. One editor and one professor have been the most active in its operation. They have given their time and strength to the work without compensation except what resulted in the way of increased circulation of the newspaper and Sunday-school supplies in the one case, and increased endowment and attendance in the college in the other case. It is not fair that a few men should bear the brunt of this work, and be responsible for it.

We forget what they have had to do. They have defined and fixed the faith and practice of the Disciples. Think what that means for one or two men to do for a million people. No other religious body, except the Roman Catholic Church, permits one man to fix its faith and practice. But the Pope is handsomely paid for it. What have the Disciples ever paid these men? Has the American Christian Missionary Society, or Church Extension, or Foreign Society, or any other society ever paid these men anything for keeping them straight? Think of the trouble they have had to keep the home society out of trouble. They have saved to the home board treasury thousands of dollars that would have gone to pay the salaries of heretics. How much more would have been saved if our other newspapers had been as zealous to expose heresy. They might also have doubled the circulation of their papers in five years if they had been as active. If other college presidents had come out openly and declared that they would have nothing to do with the "higher criticism," they might also have increased their student attendance and endowment.

It ought to be perfectly apparent to the Disciples that here is a rich gold mine for their development. If they would just enter heartily upon a crusade of persecution they could double the attendance and endowment of their colleges, the circulation of their other newspapers and the income of their missionary societies.

Since the Disciples have so much to gain or lose by carrying on persecutions it is time that a board was organized to take care of the work. It would be a worthy celebration of the first hundred years of our history to inaugurate the "Holy Office" at Pittsburg in 1909. The work has been left too long to private initiative. It is a matter that concerns the Disciples as a body. By taking it out of private hands we can rescue it from certain evils and weaknesses that are likely to afflict it. It has been carried on in a desultory and half-hearted way in the past, and only one heretic a year, on an average, has been tried and convicted in the newspapers. The Disciples have enough heretics to furnish a trial every week. What a magnificent stimulus to our educational and missionary work to try one heretic a week. Our people are famishing for the spiritual nourishment and inspiration that it would afford. Why do our colleges and missionary societies have such a struggle for money to carry on their work? Because we have so few heresy trials. Why are there so few conversions in some of the churches? Because there are no heresy trials to refresh the souls of the lukewarm and wavering. If every church in the brotherhood could have a heresy trial once a year in the dull season, it would be as good as a protracted meeting. Evangelism and persecution go together. Did not the church thrive and grow in the days of the great Roman persecutions? Did not one of the great fathers of the church say that the "blood of martyrs is the seed of the church"? Do we not read that the Apostle Paul "took pleasure in persecutions and distresses," and was made strong by them? The church grows lazy, luxurious and self-satisfied in times of peace and prosperity. She needs seasons of persecution

BODY BUILDING

Right Food Makes Fine Boys.

Many people have questioned the truthfulness of the statement that the brain can be readily nourished and built up from some particular kind of food.

Experience is better than any kind of theory.

The wife of a prominent legislator in Kentucky says: "A woman of my acquaintance was in a badly run down condition at the time she became a mother, and at three months of age the child was a mite of humanity pitiful to look upon, with no more brain development than a monkey.

"About the time I speak of when the child was three months old the mother began feeding him Grape-Nuts.

"In ten days it was plain that a change was taking place and in a few weeks the boy became rosy, healthy and rounded out.

"He is now five years old and his food this entire time has been Grape-Nuts and cream. He seldom ever takes any other kind of food.

"It is a splendid illustration of the fact that selected food can produce results, for this boy is perfectly formed, has a beautiful body and arms and legs of a young athlete, while his head and brain development appears perfect, and he is as bright and intelligent as can be.

"I cannot comprehend a better illustration of the truth of the claim made for Grape-Nuts, that it is a brain and body builder." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

to arouse her from her sleep of contentment, to purify her from dross and error. Did not Jesus say he came to send, not peace, but a sword, and to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother"? When have we so nearly fulfilled the promise of Christ as when the organ and anti-organ parties were at each other's throats; as when the brotherhood was divided between the critics and the anti-critics, the federationists and the anti-federationists? The largest protracted meeting in the history of the Disciples was held during the last winter, when the discussion of federation was at its height. If the church at Anderson could have had a splendid heresy trial just before or just after the great meeting the number of converts would have been 2,500 instead of 1,250. What we need is more persecutions. We are going to stagnate and disappear as a brotherhood if we do not have more heresy trials. Every pastor ought to start one in his church, and get all the members stirred up. They would come to church, to the prayer-meeting and even the Sunday-school. They would talk about the church, religion and their brethren in their homes, upon the streets, and in the shops. We need a revival of interest in religious things. Persecution is the way to have it. It would double the membership of our churches, as it doubled the circulation of a newspaper in five years.

Then again a board of persecution would furnish employment to a great many men. Men are walking the streets of our cities looking for employment. We could give many of our unemployed preachers work to do. It has been demonstrated that preachers who have not been acceptable to the churches, and have failed in everything else, can succeed as spies and informers on their brethren. Many of them enjoy it and find it congenial. We would need a great many spies, informers and evidence hunters. We would require one for each of our schools to live incognito upon the ground to watch the professors. A level headed student might sometimes be obtained more economically for the place. We would also want a spotter for each of our missionary societies and state boards. It would be a good thing to place a spy with each of our mission stations on the foreign field to see that the missionaries did not betray our plea by fraternizing or co-operating with the Presbyterians and Baptists on the field. The board of persecution could be made self-supporting by levying the expenses of each heresy trial upon the college or church that furnished the heretic. That alone would make the colleges careful in their selection of men.

Another reason why the Disciples should officially take charge of persecution of heretics is because of the abuses to which it is liable in the hands of men. As it stands now anybody who thinks he scents heresy can start a persecution. It is possible to-day as in mediaeval times for designing men to make use of it to satisfy private ambitions or personal grudges. Men who desired to wreak vengeance upon their enemies, husbands who wanted to get rid of their wives, or suitors who desired to put their rivals out of their way, denounced them as heretics to the Inquisition. So to-day when a newspaper editor desires to cripple a competitor newspaper, or when a college president desires to build up his school at the expense of another school he makes out a case of heresy and lodges it against a teacher in the rival school, that furnishes a chance for all private enemies of the accused to join together to injure him. This has never happened among the Disciples, for our persecutors are above human weaknesses and debasements of that sort.

Back to the Great Apostasy

By William Durban

Prelude.

Home again! After three months of further observation and experience in America I have once more touched my native shore. I find that European history is being rapidly made. The religious kaleidoscope especially is quickly shifting. The people of London have been watching the sessions of the International Parliamentary Conference, have been hearing the utterances of seven men from the Russian Duma, and have been undoubtedly charmed by the various speeches on tour of Mr. W. J. Bryan. I am always impressed by the fact that an eminent man from America who visits Britain is the subject of much greater attention than is a noted Britisher presenting himself in the United States. The American papers afford scanty space to what an English visitor may say, even if he is a really celebrated character. The London papers have reported every word that Mr. Bryan has publicly uttered, together with various interviews with the famous Nebraskan. I am of opinion that this somewhat airy and supercilious treatment of Europeans who deserve a display of real interest involves intellectual loss to the national American mind. In reading many of the best American papers I have noticed a tendency to narrowness of outlook and an accent of contempt for the doings of the vast world outside the United States. Should not the British empire, with its enormous area, its colossal possibilities, and its rapidly growing power in every portion of the globe, count for something? America is, of course, a very great country, but, after all, it is not the whole universe. I hope that the topic which this article will treat may secure the interest of my kind American readers, even though it relates primarily to British affairs. Before I finish it may be apparent that this subject indirectly concerns Americans most seriously.

The Real Enemy.

"Voila l'ennemi," exclaimed a popular Frenchman, pointing to a priest. And the Gallican republic has recently dealt drastically with the Gallican church, French disestablishment and disendowment being entirely caused by the attitude of the church, which posed as the enemy of the liberties of the nation. In like manner the English people are just now realizing very vividly that the priest is the enemy. For priestcraft has been preparing ambuscades on a vast scale from which to assail the constitution. The two most sensational events of July in England have been the passing through the house of commons of the famous education bill and the report of the royal commission on ecclesiastical discipline.

Unfortunately, although the house of commons has splendidly fulfilled its duty, passing the liberal education bill by the entire progressive majority at the command of the prime minister, the real danger will be encountered at the autumn session, in the house of lords, during the committee stage of the third reading. It is always during this stage that every great measure of legislative reform is imperiled. The lords, especially the bishops, those lordliest of the lords, will find their opportunity in committee of mutilating and mangling the bill. The religious hotheads amongst the Tories may be curbed by more prudent statesmen of their party, or they may prove infatuated. Should the lords attempt to defy the commons over this matter, and to force sectarian education on the nation, the cry of disestablishment will at once be raised in multitudinous volume.

Traitors to the Reformation.

An immense sensation is being created by the publication of the report of the royal commission, for it affords a most lurid picture of the extent to which ritualists in the Church of England are endeavoring to teach practices condemned by the commissioners. Two noble ladies, the Countess of Lindsey and Lady Wimborne, who are ardent Protestants and devoted members of the Anglican church, made it their duty to investigate matters and give evidence before the commission. And many other highly competent and intelligent persons gave their testimony, all in the same direction. Lady Wimborne has been visiting various churches. She emphatically described the children's mass celebrated in several different sanctuaries, and some of the clergy who added their testimony dwelt indignantly on this children's eucharist. A priest leads the boys and girls in acts of adoration of the sacrament. Thousands of children in different parts of the land are being taught the doctrine of trans-substantiation and the adoration of the Virgin. Such teaching in professedly Protestant churches is naturally considered by true Protestants an intolerable abomination. The great aim of the Pseudo-Protestants otherwise styled Anglo-Catholics, is to capture the young people, and to a large extent they are succeeding. But the most audacious moves are being made in other directions. The "Monks of Plaistow" are an illustration. These are Anglican clergymen who have established an order which is in all essential characteristics really Romanist. They call their organization, planted on the edge of London, not far from my own suburb, "The Society of the Divine Compassion." Now, these Romanizing priests are all members of the Church of England, the Church of the Reformation and the boasted bulwark of the nation against popery; nevertheless, they defy all the regulations and enactments of the church as an evangelical institution, and go coolly on their insidious course, wearing vestments fearfully and wonderfully made, burning lights on the altar, reserving the sacrament for the sick, hearing the confessions, while performing devout work amongst the very poor. The members of this order wear black monastic habits, with cowls and girdles, and their bare feet are shod in sandals. These remarkable men gain their living by watchmaking and printing.

Cradled at Oxford.

This curious order sprang up at that "nidus" of ritualism, the University of Oxford. It was founded twelve years ago at Oxford by three young men of good family—Father Adderley, Father Chappell and Father Andrew. Such an order grows slowly. The bishop of St. Albans "professed" the members and blessed their habits. His successor, the present bishop, is known sternly to disapprove the ways of these Romanizers in the Anglican church, but they laugh at the thought of his interference, and have been openly deriding the condemnation passed on the ritualists by the report. The order to-day consists of five fathers, all of whom are priests of the Church of England, three brothers, and ten novices—one of whom, a parish clergyman with a good appointment, gave up his living to join the society.

The Joy of Soul Winning*

By R. H. Crossfield

"If a man is unhappy, this must be his own fault; for God intended all men to be happy." Thus spake Epictetus, the Roman slave philosopher, and he spake the truth.

The reason that we are not happy frequently lies in the fact that we are not looking for happiness in the right place. The rich man sought it in great accumulation, and when he thought he had found great joy his soul took wings and flew down to hell. The younger son sought it in riotous living with courtesans, and the moment he drained the cup of dissipation to the lees, he found the direst shame and destitution awaiting him. Napoleon sought joy on the field of glory, but when about to stride three continents like a mighty colossus, he found his sun that arose in marvelous splendor at Austerlitz ingloriously setting at Waterloo. Mark Anthony sought this summum bonum in love, but when Cleopatra became the goddess of his idolatry, when "content with her to live, content with her to die," he discovered that human love lasts but a day, and he paid the price of his blood for thus loving.

God wants you to have the joy that Christ experienced in the three dimensions. Have you been in the habit of looking on Christ as the man of sorrow and acquainted with grief? True, his babyhood and manhood were hotly pursued by malice and hatred. His friends were few, means he had none, and, what was worse, he was despised and rejected of men. Yet, these were but the incidents of his life. His real life from beginning to end was full of joy—a gladness not dependent on the thermometer, appetite, property, friends, home or social standing, but derived from serving his Father by doing good. This is his meaning when he says, "I have meat to eat ye know not of." Again, he rejoices because God had revealed his plan of redemption to the ignorant, poor and burdened, through him.

Do you want the most characteristic portraiture of Christ? Go not to Raphael's Transfiguration, or Rubens' Descent From the Cross or Munkacsy's Christ Before Pilate, or Hoffman's Christ in Gethsemane, or Titian's Redeemer, or Holman Hunt's Light of The World, but turn to his own delineation of himself in the parable of the Shepherd and the Lost Sheep. The ninety and nine were safe in the fold, but one had wandered "out on the mountains wild and bare, far from the tender shepherd's care," and immediately he goes to seek the lost. When he finds it he lays it on his shoulder, rejoicing. When he returns home he calls his friends and neighbors to rejoice with him, saying, "I have found the lost sheep."

Did Christ ever rejoice? I answer, did he ever find the lost? Passing by the custom house one day, he found a publican, Matthew by name, and Christ rejoiced for a lost sheep was found. In a sycamore tree he found Zacchaeus, in the land of Zarepta he found the widow, at Capernaum he found the woman with an issue of blood and the Centurion, at Bethany, the family of Lazarus, and in the Sanhedrim at Jerusalem, Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea. Great rejoicing always, for in the short period of his ministry he found at least five hundred men and women who were lost.

Now Christ came to give that joy to you and to me, the happiness that comes to the redeemed as a result of being saved and of saving others. Any man may very seriously question his claim to Christianity whose life is barren of the joys of the gospel. However genuine may have been your conversion, you should know that the joyless life is not now Christian. Such should pray to God, "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation."

The joys of a saved life do not depend upon physical or moral environment. The Christian is not exempt from suffering, trouble and death. The hot breath of disease may consume the body. Pale death may knock at your door and take away the idol of your home. Temptation may aim his arrows at your heart. To render the Christian incapable of suffering, trouble and death would be to render him incapable of joy. But these things are merely on the surface and do not extend to the deep things of life. In a mighty storm at sea one thinks that the whole ocean must be troubled to its bottom by Neptune's trident. But not so; the great ocean never knows a storm. The waves do not extend more than 40 or 50 feet below the surface. Go down 100 feet and the disturbance is not enough to break a rope of sand. At the bottom, no evidence is found of recent or even remote fury, save the wrecks that have quietly taken their place with the dead. So Christ prayed that his disciples might have a joy that this world can

GOOD AND HARD

Results of Excessive Coffee Drinking.

It is remarkable what suffering some persons put up with just to satisfy an appetite for something.

A Mich. woman says: "I had been using coffee since I was old enough to have a cup of my own at the table, and from it I have suffered agony hundreds of times in the years past.

"My trouble first began in the form of bilious colic, coming on every few weeks and almost ending my life. At every attack for 8 years I suffered in this way. I used to pray for death to relieve me from my suffering. I had also attacks of sick headache, and began to suffer from catarrh of the stomach, and of course awful dyspepsia.

"For about a year I lived on crackers and water. Believing that coffee was the cause of all this suffering, I finally quit it and began to use Postum Food Coffee. It agreed with my stomach, my troubles have left me and I am fast gaining my health under its use.

"No wonder I condemn coffee and tea. No one could be in a much more critical condition than I was from the use of coffee. Some doctors pronounced it cancer, others ulceration, but none gave me any relief. But since I stopped coffee and began Postum I am getting well so fast I can heartily recommend it for all who suffer as I did." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek., Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville." "There's a reason."

not take away. If you are a genuine Christian to-day, you have a joy in your life.

When the seventy returned to Jesus they came rejoicing because of the overthrow of Satan's plans and the grace manifested to sinners. After the beginning of the revival in Samaria, Luke observes, "And there was much joy in that city." When the Gentiles believed at Antioch the disciples were filled with joy, and when the news reached Jerusalem there was great joy among the brethren. Paul addresses the Philippians as "my joy and my crown." The Thessalonians are likewise praised as "our glory and joy."

When the mother of the Gracchi was asked about her jewels she answered, pointing to her boys, "These are my jewels." When we stand before the throne of grace we shall not point to wealth, fame or realized ambition, but to those we have brought to Christ, saying, "These are my jewels, my joy and crown."

"Every soul we have brought to the foot of the cross,
Every lamb we have lead to the fold,
Will be kept as bright jewels, our crown to adorn,
In that beautiful city of gold."

My friends, do not pray for joy. It is a matter of cause and effect rather than prayer. Mix two parts of hydrogen and one part of oxygen and the result will be water. This is invariably the result in all worlds and eras. Now, put a Christian and a loving effort to save souls together and the result will be just as invariably, a joy-filled life. You need not have the accessories of wealth, influence, environment, learning, friends—this is a sure recipe for joy.

Hear Theodore Cuyler after forty-four years' experience as a preacher: "To serve Him in saving men gives me so much delight that I would not stoop down to pick up a monarch's crown."

Sunday-school teachers, if your life is more or less cheerless and disconsolate, go to work in dead earnest to save that bad boy or uninterested girl in your class. Such work will transfigure your present life.

"Would you know earth's highest happiness,
Would you know its greatest blessedness,
Would you know its truest joyfulness,
Make some other heart rejoice."

I often wonder why it is that Sunday-school teachers do not bring more of their pupils to Christ without the assistance of the evangelist. May I venture to give some reasons for this condition? First of all, frequently Christ is obscured in our lives. Men and women do not read the Bible from the cold page of the canon. They read it as translated by our words and deeds. They do not know Christ as Matthew, Mark, Luke and John have characterized him, but as you have reproduced him in your professed Christian life. This is pre-eminently true of the child. To such especially are we unwritten epistles, yet known and read accurately.

The second cause of the failure to save the boy or girl of accountable age is due to a lack of zeal. Why not adopt Paul's plan? At Corinth, Ephesus and in all Asia he persuaded both Jews and Gentiles. In heathen Rome. "He persuaded them concerning Jesus." In the presence of one single opportunity he persuaded Agrippa to become a Christian. Writing to the Church of Corinth he said, "Knowing the fear of the Lord we persuade men." Why not become so zealous for the salvation of our boys and girls that we will make them the burden of our hearts and prayers—persuade them to accept Christ?

Finally, we fail frequently for lack of faith. Blessed is the Sunday-school teacher that expects the salvation of his pupils! Never give up. Sink self, exalt Christ, believe that God will give you the victory in the lives of those he has set you to teach, and sooner or later the victory will be won.

Covet earnestly the joy of seeing the unsaved come to salvation. Pray, labor, trust, to this end, and God will give thee the desire of thy heart and a joy plenteous and exquisite!

African Missions and the Uncompleted Chain*

(Concluded from Last Week.)

It should be stated that gifts have been presented to the English B. M. S. and preliminary attempts put forth, chiefly by Mr. Grenfel, the veteran missionary of that society, for the express purpose of one day connecting the eastern and western chains of stations, and thus giving Africa one great trans-continental chain of missionary activity.

This dark intervening gap lies quite wholly in the territory of the Congo Free State in its great eastern section.

This sad arrest of missionary progress in this as well as in other tracts, which is most unpardonable and criminal, is "free" only in pushing the dastardly work of self-enrichment and native enslavement. This state has no more use for the Gospel than the devil in hell. How sharp a contrast between the present and actual practices of this State in relation to the Lord's work and its principles, professed and theoretical, at its founding! We should not expect that the requests for mission sites along the Aruwimi, made to the State by the B. M. S. in the hope of lessening the black stretch between the eastern and western chains of stations should be, as it has been, wholly ignored, and now for over three years. The one site that was granted them by the State was withdrawn and a Catholic mission is now located there. The gifts, prayers and efforts of God's children will some day avail with Heaven for the completion of this chain.

The traveler "thanks God and takes courage" as he reaches the chain of mission stations from the west coast, viz, the two English societies, B. M. S. and the C. B. M., and the two American societies, the A. B. M. U. and the F. C. M. S., and stands on Christian soil, is welcomed by a Gospel meeting, and meets and greets not only European workers but native Christians.

The spiritual conditions of the upper Congo River with its mission stations, outposts, schools, native evangelists and Christian workers, is in strong contrast with that of the dark gap which marks the heart of real central Africa.

The genius of the work both at Yakusu on the west and of Toro on the east is that of pushing on and on into Africa's central heart-blackness until together they close in, the gap vanishing, and the work and workers touching heart and hand for God and the native race. In this region the problem of the evangel would at once be that of leading the Mohammedan to the true worship of God and his Christ; for even the heathen is swayed by his influence. Because of other conditions he is not likely to repeat the experience of the C. M. S. at the Mombassa coast and labor on for thirty years without a single convert to Christianity from that rock of Mohammedanism. With a working knowledge of Ki-Swahili (to be obtained from the valuable C. M. S. grammar, and from one's porter carriers as he proceeds westward to and through the forest) one, it is believed, could preach to the hearing and salvation of the Mohammedan-heathen peoples, stretching from the western slopes of Mount Ruwenzori to the Congo River. One can not think that this gap will divide the C. M. S. on the one side and the B. M. S. on the other, or that these missions will have the realization of their prayers and aims long deferred.

The story of Christian missions on the Congo is not a new one. The large and rapid multiplication of schools by the B. M. S. is reaching many out of the vicinity of the mission station.

The Congo Balolo Mission is interdenominational in character and is doing most remarkable work in penetrating the great unevangelized interior along the Lolanga River and its tributaries.

The work of the American Baptist Missionary Union, formerly the Livingstone Inland Mission, is for the most part confined to the Lower Congo; the two stations on the Upper Congo are Bwemba and Ikoko. Bwemba Station is now taking up work among the long-neglected Bateke. The Ikoko Station founded by those pioneers, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Clark, is the one missionary post on Lake Mantumba, which is some fifty miles south from the main river. The training and teaching of girls, together with industrial work, are the striking features of the Ikoko Station. Perhaps the largest churches of Congoland are in the A. B. M. U. work. Banzamanteka and the name of that veteran worker, Henry Richards, at once bring to mind the large and sweeping work of the Holy Spirit in that revival there, which to-day is an outstanding fact in missionary history.

After the refreshing Christmas week at Stanley Falls with the Yakusu workers, the traveler, happily exchanging his weary land journey for the restful steamer descent on the great Congo waterway, calls on the ninth day of the trip at Bolengi, the American F. C. M. S. station on the equator, the existence of which work he had not even learned until reaching the Congo River.

The traveler's purpose was, if God willed, to proceed up the Megangi River and traverse in the interest of the Lord's work the great unevangelized tract extending into the Soudan and on to Lake Chad. But the certain Providence attending the traveler, and the welcome at this Christian settlement, in a great wilderness of woe and sin, mark a vital point in his own life. The sense of the accompanying Providence, and also a sense that greater fruitfulness might attend a settled work, and then the wide reaches of Bolengi's back country, and the traveler's own condition and feeling, all combined together with the home-like, hospitable welcome and the warm, generous invitation of Dr. and Mrs. Dye, to induce the missionary traveler, stranger that he was, to stay on at Bolengi and help if he may in the work of the Lord, for which this mission station stands.

The youngest work of all, that of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, is conducted by the Disciples of Christ and is located at Bolengi, at the place where the equator crosses the Congo on the west. This work, with a native church of 126 members, supporting itself and 13 native evangelists, is placing the emphasis where is found Africa's greatest need, and the chief returns in missionary labor, viz., on having numbers of itinerating evangelists traversing the back and unevangelized tracts. Thousands of square miles of unevangelized territory to the east and south await the labor of the F. C. M. S.

*As seen by Eben Creighton on a journey through South and Central Africa.

Friends at home who have not already done so, may be interested in tracing upon the map the outline of the parish of the Bolengi station. You will not forget that this one mission station of the F. C. M. S. in Africa is located close to the place where the great Congo River crosses the equator on the west.

The spacious parish which looks to Bolengi for the Gospel forms an immense triangle, whose apex falls upon the basis station itself. Practically all of this vast country lies either on or south of this line. But first let us look at the one section of the parish in which lies the upper side of the Congo River. From the Mobangi River stretching eastward on to the main river is a "V"-shaped section of territory. This entire district is untouched by the Gospel save as the Bolengi evangelists visit it. This section is inhabited by the fierce cannibal "Balois." It is a fact for thanksgiving that Bolengi's native evangelists have already opened up the work in this needy country. It is the plan and purpose of the mission that a periodical itinerary of the missionary himself be made in these countries, and thus enforce, supplement and superintend the work of the native evangelists. The presence of the white teacher is necessary to the influence, growth and stability of the work in every section, however often the visits of the native worker may be.

Returning to the field which lies on the lower side of the river, we take our position at Bolengi, the apex of the triangular section of country with its thousands of square miles of territory, with its people numbering into the millions. Northwards the parish of Bolengi is limited by the Lolanga River. Eastward the field yet to be evangelized extends to the watershed of the Lemani River, seven degrees east of Bolengi. To the south the parish may be said to extend to the great Kassai River, four degrees south of Bolengi.

In pushing work through this great section of territory the evangelist will follow the waterways, not only of the Ikelemba and Bosira Rivers, but also along the Juapa and Momboyo Rivers, large, navigable branches of the Bosira. Along the Bosira the itinerary of the evangelist lies to the southeast, and along the Juapa his journey will be eastward towards the watershed of the Lemami. The evangelists have made successive preaching trips up the Bosira and the Momboyo for a distance of 150 miles. The country around the Bolengi station to a radius of 50 miles has been thoroughly evangelized.

In the Bosira district the Catholic work is firmly entrenched, having the aid and favor of the state, while the Bolengi evangelists meet with constant difficulty, and recently have been repeatedly sent back to the station with scarce a hearing for the Gospel of life they preached. Bolengi evangelists were compelled to sleep on the sandbars of the river during their last trip, because the natives did not dare to let them stay or land in their towns. Thus a real setback has come to the aggressive work since the place where, formerly, the evangelists of Bolengi were freely received is now closed to them. Yet we are happy to state that three Christian young men, the first fruits of that country, have returned home, and are now holding services in their own and neighboring towns. In spite of concealed interference by the Catholic government to the Protestant mission work, the interest kindled in past days is not entirely dying out, and the spark of Christian faith and life still stays on, and will, we trust, soon be fanned to burning flames.

The white teacher, as the natives love to call him, as soon as he is able to travel, hopes to itinerate in these new closed sections.

Real church unity prevails on the Congo, the natives passing freely by letter from the communion of their own to that of another church. In times of sickness or need, the members of one society hasten to the side of a fellow missionary of another mission and a healthy Scriptural fellowship is thus maintained. Evidently the native Christians know nothing of the denominational divisions of the homelands.

Africa, with the in-rush of new Europeanism, has a peculiar present, pressing need. This should rest heavily upon the heart of the Church. The incoming of government agents, promoters, speculators and traders is affecting already the proverbial native degeneration, the resultant of the contract of complex with primitive peoples. To the moral depravity of heathen degredation, with its witchcraft, polygamy and slavery, is added the rottenness of licentious Europeans; and this is the standard of enlightenment that so-called civilization gives to benighted Africa.

And then to this add the fact that aggressive missionary work has been so curtailed to the present by the refusal of the state to give permanent sites, that the trader and government official, with their baneful influences, are far in advance of the missionary firing line. All the advance work is practically restricted to the few itinerating journeys that the busy missionary and his native evangelists can make. And things have come to such a pass that even the itinerating of the native evangelists is obstructed.

The traveler, in the long, silent marches of Africa's caravan file, often recalls that sure prophetic promise accorded by Scripture to the dark land, viz.: "Ethiopia shall yet stretch forth her hands unto God." This land which sheltered not only the ancient people of God's chosen race, but even the threatened infancy of the Redeemer himself; this land which gave a cross-bearer to the weary Saviour, dropping on his march to the world's redemption, and which received the Christian Ethiopian on his chariot journey from Palestine; this land which has received so choice a cluster of life-offerings—a Livingstone, a Mackay, a Gordon—will one day, the curse lifting, the blessing descending, enter upon that life of fullness, emancipation and victory that our Father in heaven purposes for all his children on earth.

E. L. Frazier's Dilemma

By E. S. MUCKLEY.

In his article in The Christian-Evangelist of August 9, under the question, "Who is a Christian in the Twentieth Century?" E. L. Frazier unconsciously reveals himself in the situation of a dilemma. The fact that there are "pious unimmersed" gets him there. On the one hand he discovers that the people, who honestly, in the spirit of submission to their chosen Master, were sprinkled believing they were obeying him in the ordinance of baptism, seem to manifest a Christian character fully as high in grade, judging by the New Testament requirements of Christian character, as is manifest in those who have been immersed. On the other hand he discovers that the New Testament demands faith, repentance and immersion of those who want to be Christians.

Brother Frazier recognizes that the faith and repentance of those who have honestly thought their sprinkling baptism are as genuine as the faith and repentance of the immersed, and their characters as good; but he hinges their right to be called Christians on the act of immersion. And as they have not been immersed they are not Christians. But he does not want to just deliberately disown them, or intimate that God disowns them, and his Christian courtesy prevents him from wanting to hurt their feelings, so he admits that they have Christian characters. To admit that they are Christians would be to validate sprinkling. To admit that their characters are not Christian would be to invalidate their faith and repentance, for these and not baptism are the steps that determine Christian character. Their bodies have not been immersed, therefore they are not Christians; their characters are all right, therefore they (their characters) are Christian. You dare not call them Christians, but you may call their characters Christian.

Now, it seems to me that it is sufficient to state this position of Brother Frazier's in this extended form to display its fallacy. However, I want to show that his attempt to seize both horns of the dilemma is both illogical and unscriptural. I am sure that neither good logic nor the New Testament will sustain his attempt to show that a man can have a Christian character without being a Christian. He says:

"There is a great difference between a Christian character and a non- or anti-Christian character. All know this and feel drawn to the one showing Christian character. But is he a Christian because he is a Christian in character?"

Now, what I want to show is, that the only way to answer this question logically or Scripturally is in the affirmative.

In the first place Brother Frazier's logic goes limping in the illustrations he uses. The fallacy may not be apparent at first glance. If I did not know Brother Frazier's contempt for trickery in logic, I would accuse him of working off a shrewd bit of sophistry on his brethren. The fallacy is in the double use of the word "character," which implies that there is as much of a change from the non-Masonic to the Masonic character, or from the non-American to the American character, as there is from the non-Christian to the Christian character. Now, Brother Frazier would not admit that the change is as great, or of the same nature, in the one case as in the other. Therefore he will have to admit that his illustrations are not only inapt but fallacious in point of logic.

The change from the non-Christian to a Christian character is essentially a moral and spiritual change, an inward transformation that not only makes one unlike his former self, but also distinguishes him from his fellows who are Christian in character. But no such change, or similar change, is necessary in becoming a Mason or an American. The morals of a man are not supposed to be effected at all in becoming a Mason or an American. If a change of character is necessary at all it must occur before a man becomes a Mason. That is, the process of making a Mason does not

—Our International Convention!—

—Now has the center of the stage and the lime light glow.

—October 12-18 are the magic days, Buffalo the place. Your presence essential to greatest success.

—Sacrifice some where else if need be (not from amounts allotted church and benevolences) and attend this convention. Go in the spirit of ancient Israel ascending to Jerusalem in the days of her glory.

—Matters of infinitely greater moment to the Republic than will come before the great national political conventions will be considered and largely determined at this assembly. You are entitled to a seat in its deliberations. This, like other Christian privileges, ought to be lived up to.

—Our general superintendent was prospecting over the Wabash and in the convention city last week and was greatly pleased with the car service and provisions being made by the Buffalo brethren for the entertainment of the convention. If a 30-day extension of our tickets is secured everything will have been done that could be to prove their hospitality, enterprise and sagacity.

—Every congregation, aye, every Christian household ought to have a delegate in the convention going determined to do and receive good, who will get surcharged with the convention spirit while there, and make an enthusiastic and intelligible report after returning home. There are others than preachers who can do this but churches never invest money more profitably than when sending their ministers up to our great convocations.

—Christian-Evangelist headquarters will be at the Buckingham, within two blocks of convention hall. So long as there is room (but it is limited) we shall welcome our friends there. We have secured the remarkably low rate of $2 per diem, American plan. The hall is not in the hotel district, so we have secured hundreds of rooms in nearby homes having all modern conveniences, at the rate of $1 per room and breakfast. Other meals may be taken at the Buckingham or with the convention caterer. This will be found a considerable saving in time and car fare. Friends will be assigned rapidly as their names are sent us. Our services freely and gladly accorded our patrons.

—A. M. Hooton, of Lowell, Ind., resigned his pastorate there August 27 to take effect at once.

—B. S. Edwards is in a meeting at Amen Chapel, Ralls county, Mo., with four added at last report and growing interest.

—W. J. Dodge, of Jackson, is in Minnesota on account of his health. His friends are hoping he will soon be restored to his Kentucky ministry and with renewed strength.

—Wren J. Grinstead closed his work at Jellico, Ky., September 1, and has accepted a position in the State Normal at Richmond. R. G. Sherer succeeds him at once at Jellico.

—Churches needing an educated and experienced minister after next December will be placed in communication with one by addressing J. F. King, Box 75, R. R. No. 2, Albion, Ill.

—The churches at Canton and Galva, Kan., are in need of a pastor, each being a "half-time" point. Salary $700. Fay Finkle, Galva, Kan., will advise with applicants for the position.

—The affable H. R. Murphy, of the Soldier, Kan., church, visited us Tuesday, returning to his work from vacation visits at Fulton, Ky., and Jackson, Tenn., and other haunts of his earlier days.

—G. W. Terrell, of Stanberry, is in a meeting at Amity, Mo. Neighboring preachers are earnestly invited to attend the meeting when possible and assist in the strengthening of our cause at Amity.

—Secretary J. H. Mohorter was most enthusiastically received by the Indian Territory convention and received three life memberships for the organization to which he is giving such splendid service.

—We were favored Thursday with visits from E. M. Smith, of Centralia, Mo., and Daniel Stewart, of Selma, Cal. These are two of the ablest young men from their respective states. Their kindling enthusiasm for the Master is infectious and helpful.

—Remember that the reason for a great offering for Church Extension lies in the great need. The ambition of our Board of Church Extension is to house every one of our homeless missions by October, 1909. That is one feature of the Centennial program.

—C. F. Trimble, assisted by F. M. O'Neal and wife, of Springfield, Mo., closed a two weeks' meeting at Seiling, Okla., August 12, with 26 additions. Thence they went to Carney, Okla., and are now in meeting at Ada, I. T.

—L. C. Howe, of New Castle, Ind., advises us that Charles Schults and wife, of that city, are ready to hold evangelistic meetings. He writes that Brother Schults holds very successful meetings and preaches a strong, clear and pure gospel, and that his wife is an excellent singer and leader.

—E. W. Allen's welcome to the Central Church at Wichita has been most cordial and whole-hearted. While Brother Allen relinquished a great church in Indiana, he has found material for one equally great among his new people. There were six additions at his first Lord's day service and two since.

—D. G. Combs, in a recent brief evangelistic tour through Carter, Mercer and Madison counties, Kentucky, added 61 to the membership of the churches. He was in the midst of a promising meeting when compelled to conclude on account of the serious illness of his daughter.

—E. J. Meacham is in a meeting at Murfreesboro, Tenn. This means our church there will be greatly strengthened numerically, educationally and spiritually. J. H. Mohorter, secretary of our National Benevolent Association, will preach in Brother Meacham's Wilmington (Ohio) church September 9.

—The yearly meeting of the Fredericksburg (Ohio) church, recently held, was a great success. C. C. Maple, minister, writes that "the preaching was of the old order, and was well received, even by the denominations, who gave us the best of attention." The meeting will be held next year in October.

—R. H. Lampkin, of Dexter, preached in Charleston, Mo., August 29. He found four tithers there and five others pledged themselves to the tithing system after hearing his sermon. The church is without regular preaching, but is building a substantial brick house at a cost of $3,200 on a $1,400 lot.

—W. B. Crewdson, of Salida, Col., expresses himself as greatly in love with his new congregation. During his two months' association with the church there have been 15 additions. The church has been painted and otherwise beautified, and the membership is enthusiastic and abounding in good works.

—King Stark's meeting at Dover, Mo., closed August 27 with 57 additions; 51 were by confession and baptism, 36 were men. All the additions were adults but one. The meeting lasted but 18 days. R. T. McRae, of Warrensburg, had charge of the music. Brother Stark commends him very highly to the churches.

—H. D. Self, of Waddy, Ky., has accepted a call from the Owensboro church to become assistant to the pastor, R H. Crossfield. James Small and LeRoy St. John will assist these pastors in a revival beginning September 23. Brother Crossfield reports the work most hopeful in every department of his great church.

—T. F. Weaver is devoting great ability and enthusiasm to the securing of funds for the enlargement of Carlton college at Bonham, Texas. This school has never before asked the brotherhood for help, but has done this Restoration movement a vast amount of good. We wish Brother Weaver and his colleagues great success in this attempt for larger things.

—W. F. Shearer, of Angola, Ind., will begin a meeting with the Fayette (Mo.) church October 7. The pastor, R. B. Helser, is taking a much needed vacation. August 27 he opened the Howard county convention and officiated at the opening services of the Randolph county convention August 29. His home church is in excellent condition.

—August 26, J. A. Wharton closed the sixth year of his ministry with the Niagara Falls brethren. The day was made one of special service; large congregations being present morning and evening. After a brief vacation in Ohio, his work will be resumed with new zeal. During his absence his pulpit will be supplied by E. T. Edmonds, of Fort Smith, Ark.

—Last Sunday was the beginning of our Church Extension offering. It should by all means be the largest in our history because now there are 121 churches pleading for aid from this fund. Your congregation should postpone the offering until those who are away from home return so that the offering may be made a creditable one.

—F. D. Pratt, clerk of the church at Moweaqua, Ill., reports a four-weeks' meeting just concluded there with 63 additions, 40 of whom were by confession and baptism. H. A. Davis began the meeting, but on account of ill health was compelled to relinquish it in its early stages. E. A. Gilliland and Gertrude Maxwell concluded the meeting.

—Oscar W. Riley, of Lone Pine Church, Pa., sends us a very interesting program to be rendered at the all-day basket meeting with his congregation September 7. Among the speakers we note E. A. Cole, Washington, Pa.; Wallace Tharp and C. L. Thurgood, of Pittsburg, and F. A. Bright, of Waynesburg—a strong array of talent, but Lone Pine has an appreciation of the best.

—J. M. Philputt, of the Union Avenue Church, and F. N. Calvin, of Compton Heights, this city, have just returned from their vacations spent at Pemaquid Point, Me., and Piasa Bluffs, Ill., respectively. Both are earnest, popular and successful preachers. We are confident the cause of Christ in this great city will be greatly helped by them through the fall and winter campaigns.

—J. W. Masters has been evangelizing in Clay county, Mo., during August. He organized a new country congregation of 23 members.

—H. H. Hubbell, of Lewiston, Idaho, has resigned the pastorate of the church there to accept the work at Grangeville, same state.

—G. L. Bush, formerly of McKinney, Texas, has begun his new pastorate at Gainesville under most favorable omens. McKinney has not yet called his successor.

—The Martin family have concluded their meeting at Sturgis, Ky., with eighteen additions, and are now assisting C. A. Donelson in a meeting at Muncie, Ind.

—A. P. Aten, one of our able Indian Territory preachers, has resigned his pastorate at Holdenville and accepted a position as teacher in the high school at Oklahoma City.

—Any congregation desiring the services of a young man of wide experience, whose character and reputation are O. K., will hear something to their advantage by addressing B. B. Tyler, 156 South Pennsylvania avenue Denver.

—B. W. Rice, of Caldwell, Ida., has just launched "The Actual Doer" on the sea of journalism. It is in advocacy of the Gospel of a kind heart and helping hand. We wish our brother great success in preaching through its columns.

—The books of the American Christian Missionary Society close September 30. Let all remittances designed to enter into this year's reports be forwarded immediately to the society at the Y. M. C. A. building, Cincinnati, O.

—The fifth annual meeting of the West Virginia Ministerial Association will be held at Sistersville, W. Va., September 12-16. A very interesting and helpful program has been arranged and which it is hoped a host of attendants will enjoy.

—J. C. Mullens, of Hartshorne, I. T., has begun his new pastorate at South McAlester. He was delayed in making the change several weeks on account of the serious illness of Sister Mullens. We are glad to report she is now greatly improved in health.

—O. C. Smith, San Bernardino, Cal., informs us that after a "pastorless summer," E. E. Lowe, of Arkansas City, Kan., has begun his ministry with that church. Great results with Brother Lowe as pastor are anticipated by the San Bernardino congregation, " as he knows no other than success."

—C. W. Comstock, of Miami, Mo., closed a twenty-day meeting at Orrick, Friday, with fifteen additions, eleven by confession and baptism. He was assisted by Prof. J. A. Butler and wife, of Mound City, Mo. Brother Comstock adds, "It is a great thing to win souls."

—Professor Zollars has been in Oklahoma and the Indian Territory for the past 30 days in the interest of a new college. Disciples are thoroughly aroused as to the needs of such an institution. The recent South McAlester convention voted to act in co-operation with Oklahoma in establishing a Bible school. The present indications are that the enterprise will soon be launched.

For the Nursery—For the Table.

Whether as an ideal food for infants or for general household use, Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk has no equal; of no other food product can this be truthfully said.

—Following the example set by numerous other congregations of late, the Sturgis, Ky., church has purchased a beautiful parsonage costing $1,400. One of our Centennial efforts should be complementing every possible church building with a home for the minister.

—A. H. Mulkey, of Brownsville, Ore., is the recipient of two surprises; one was a two-weeks' vacation, granted by his board, and the second was to find his church house beautifully painted on his return. Such amenities are among the delights of Christian fellowship.

—Wilford Field, of Effingham, Ill., writes that D. K. Bebout will soon remove from that city. Brother Bebout is a graduate of Bethany College and a post-graduate student of Butler. Not only has he splendid educational training but an untarnished Christian character.

—John N. Talley, of Manor, Texas, recently concluded a meeting with home forces with fifteen added by confession and baptism. He will resume the meeting in November. Brother Talley's Mississippi ministry was crowned with great success, as his work in Texas will also doubtless be.

—J. V. Coombs has again heard "the cry of the wild." He has resigned at San Jose, Cal., and enters the evangelistic field, beginning at Kent, O., September 9. J. Walter Wilson will conduct the singing. Brother Coombs' permanent address will be 413 Majestic building, Indianapolis, Ind.

—We call attention to the dedication of the new building at Kimberlin Heights, Tenn. President Johnson is doing a noble, self-sacrificing work in behalf of indigent young Disciples who would become preachers of the Word. We wish for him the help of the brotherhood and bright visions of achievements growing more splendid with the flight of years.

—The New England Christian Missionary Society will hold its September convention at Marion, R. I., October 4-7. In the printed program confidence is expressed in the early establishment of a prosperous church at Manchester as a result of Brother Yeuell's evangelistic campaign, followed as it is by W. C. Crerie's faithful pastoral work.

—J. I. Orrison, of Sedalia, recently concluded two good meetings, one at Montrose, Mo., resulting in sixteen additions; the other at Sheldon with twenty additions. He reports eighteen additions in his regular work since last report. What a proselyter Brother Orrison is getting to be; seventeen of these fifty-four were from the denominations.

—F. F. Walters preached the concluding sermon of the summer Sunday evening union meetings at Neosho, Mo. It is described as a masterful review of Acts 2: 1-40. One of the city school teachers made the good confession at the conclusion of the sermon. There have been 103 additions to the church during Brother Walters' nine months' pastorate. He begins meeting with W. F. Turner at the First Church, Joplin, next Lord's day.

—F. E. Blanchard, our able minister at Smith Centre, Kan., is in a meeting with the nearby Stuart church. He writes that the Dewey Christian Endeavor Society has recently issued a unique and beautiful souvenir of their church. He will supply Endeavorers with samples for 15 cents, and suggests they can not only be used as beautiful souvenirs but also as a source of profit to any Endeavor society or church.

—G Lyle Smith, whose pastorate at Waco, Texas, has been successful beyond most sanguine expectations, has been called to Texarkana to succeed W. S. Bullard. It seemed Brother Bullard's enforced abandonment would prove almost ruinous to our Texarkana church, but under Brother Smith's leadership it will have a bright future. A host of friends hope for Brother Bullard's early restoration to health.

"Help us to get into our own church home."

DID YOU TAKE

a Church Extension Offering the first Sunday of September?

The Offering began then but it should not end until every church sends an Offering. Select the best Sunday to suit local conditions, but to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

SEND AN OFFERING

The Annuity feature of Church Extension is profitable to you and the Board. You receive 6 per cent and the Board builds churches with your money.

—Secretary J. H. Mohorter reports the Indian Territory convention at South McAlester was the greatest in the history of territorial co-operation. The largest offerings were made during the year of any preceding 12 months. There were more additions to the churches and the largest number of new churches established. We may rest assured the east end of the new state of Oklahoma will lose none of its enthusiasm for Christ and the missions after the merger.

—I. L. Burgess, of the Grayville, Ill., Christian church begins a revival meeting next Lord's day. After the 16th he will be assisted by Evangelist T. J. Head, of Missouri. Brother Burgess wishes to "colonize" Disciples around his work in Grayville. He writes there is a good opening for general merchandising, also for one who would care to purchase a printing establishment, together with a weekly paper having a circulation of 1,000.

—E. S. Allhands, of Arkadelphia, Ark., has just concluded a sixteen-day meeting with his brother, Charles A., with the Bethesda church, near Amity, Ark. Visible results were eighteen additions, ten being by primary obedience. A Sunday-school was organized and the preliminary steps taken for the formation of an Endeavor society. Our congratulations to every church securing the services of these consecrated and gifted evangelists.

—The twenty-third annual convention of the churches of Christ in Mississippi meets in McComb City September 10-

13. Every church is urged to send representatives to this convention. Those attending must secure certificates from their railroad agents. This will guarantee a return rate of one cent per mile plus 25 cents. The notice is signed by M. F. Harmon, president convention; Will A. Sessions, president board, and W. W. Phares, corresponding secretary.

—A letter from Brother Kokendoffer informs us that the Small-St. John meeting for which such extensive preparations have been made at Mexico, Mo., is started with excellent prospects of great success. The prayer-meeting of the preceding Wednesday evening was intense in prayerful thought and exhortation. One young lady made the good confession and was buried with her Lord in baptism the next morning. On the preceding Lord's day great sermons were preached by W. B. Taylor, former pastor, now of Moberly, Mo., and A. E. Cory, of China. Brother Kokendoffer is relying a great deal on the help of his assistant, P. W. Harding, to whose fidelity and general effectiveness he pays a beautiful tribute. Brother Harding was for a number of years traveling representative of The Christian-Evangelist and is kindly remembered by thousands all over the land. Faithful reports of this meeting will be made in these columns every week. Five hundred Christian-Evangelists each week will aid Brother Kokendoffer and his other assistants through this meeting.

P. W. Harding.

—The annual gathering of the Disciples of DeKalb county, Ind., convened with the Butler church August 25 and 26. The pastor, Robert B. Chapman, writes that the success of the meeting was due to the fact that Bro. Wallace Tharp was the speaker of the occasion, delivering four masterful discourses in his eloquent way. Brother Tharp left a most favorable impression, and the entire community hope for another visit from him.

—Evangelists Spicer and Douthit closed a revival meeting at Troy, Texas, August 9 with thirteen additions; another at Elgin, Texas, August 26, with twenty-two additions. They are now in Johnson City, Texas, with fine prospects for a good meeting with Brother Hardin Welsh's congregation. Brother Welsh has made such excellent preparation for this meeting that the evangelists will gladly attribute to him the largest meed of success.

—George E. Dew, minister of the church at Holden, Mo., reports R. H. Fife's meeting, concluding there August 31, as one of the best in the history of that church for years. It was of 19 days' duration, with 29 additions, 23 by confession and baptism. The church is greatly strengthened and in fine condition for aggressive work for the Master. Brother Dew thus concludes: "Brethren Fife and Saunders are both good men and true, and make a strong Gospel team. May God bless them!"

—J. J. Cole, of Millersburg, Ohio, is unable to accept a pastorate at present that will involve his moving on account of the serious illness of his wife, who will probably have to undergo a second surgical operation. He would, however, like to assist some churches in protracted meetings until November, after which time he hopes to again enter a settled pastorate. Brother Cole is a man of ability and will be of great assistance to any church calling him into a revival meeting.

—J. D. Lawrence, of Muncie, Ind., Living-Link evangelist of this company, recently concluded a brief meeting at the Elm Grove Church, Geneva, Ind. A letter just received from J. L. Aspy, elder, informs us that the congregation tendered a unanimous vote of thanks to this company for sending Brother Lawrence to them. It was very gratifying to this House to know it is helping in the re-establishment of worship in many of our poor congregations. In this work Brother Lawrence has been phenomenally successful.

—The Kentucky state convention is assuming large proportions. Those asking for homes are sending in their names early and everything indicates that fully two thousand persons will attend. The railroads have granted half fare rates from all points, and as the Bible school work in central and southern Kentucky is united, the attendance promises to be good from both sections of the state. All names for entertainment should be sent to R. M. Hopkins, 218 Keller building, Louisville.

—The University of Missouri will hereafter grant credits for specified courses of work done in the Bible college of Missouri. This will enable our young men and women who come to Columbia for university work to take as a part of their work the courses specified in the Bible college. Pastors and parents should encourage them to do this. Dean W. J. Lhamon will consider it a favor if names and addresses are sent to him of young men and women who expect to attend the university the coming semester.

—Thomas Penn Ullom, Traverse City, Mich., sends an account of a visit to Monroe, Wis., where Chas. Reign Scoville is holding a great union revival meeting, to which we would gladly give publication save that Brother Scoville will send an illustrated report of the meeting at its conclusion, and we fear Brother Ullom has anticipated many features that would be duplicated in the evangelist's report. Brother Ullom pays eloquent tribute to Brother Scoville's ability and does some very fine writing in portraying ideal evangelism.

—An excellent article on "Repentance," by J. W. Kilborn, of Mt. Carmel, Ill., will appear next week. Thousands of Christian-Evangelists are now used each week by evangelists, and articles such as this are especially valuable to our readers. No other contributions will be more highly prized by the Christian-Evangelist's constituency than expositions of the great doctrines of faith, repentance and baptism and of the terms of forgiveness, inspiration of the Bible, the divinity of Christ, the laws of holiness and all that prepares us for Zion and helps us on the way.

—D. W. Connor, of Edinburg, Ill., is being helped in what promises to be a very successful meeting by D. Wesley Campbell, the noted Kentucky evangelist. Three hundred Christian-Evangelists per week will also have part in this campaign for righteousness. We are sure that here faith, repentance, confession and baptism, "the one body," "the one church," "the one faith," "the one baptism," growth in grace and knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ will be lovingly and effectually preached.

Lynchburg, Va., Aug., 28, 1906.

Dear Evangelist:

Randolph-Macon Woman's College has added this year, besides four other buildings, a new dormitory to accommodate another hundred students— giving homes for nearly four hundred students in residence. This is the reason that we have now forty places open for engagement. We shall be glad to hear from forty more well prepared students who want the best facilities.

WM. W. SMITH,
President.

—In our comments of Mrs. Maud D. Ferris's gift of $25,000 to our Christian Woman's Board of Missions for the establishment of a missionary training school as a memorial of her mother, Sarah A. Davis, Mrs. J. H. Garrison was reported as president of the Centennial Committee of the C. W. B. M. Sister Garrison's position is that of Centennial Secretary for the Missouri Auxiliaries. She, too, will be pleased to acknowledge the receipt of any sum of money for the realization of the C. W. B. M. Centennial hopes and purposes.

—Geo. A. Meek, secretary of the board of elders, favors us with a copy of the 21st anniversary programme of the Englewood Christian Church, Chicago, which will be rendered September 16-18. Among other interesting features will be a reception tendered to Editor J. H. Garrison at 4 p. m., Tuesday, September 18. Brother Garrison will lecture on Christian Union at eight o'clock that evening. The program is replete with addresses by some of the ablest men and women of our brotherhood. The rapid growth of the Englewood church into a great power for righteousness in that mighty city during the pastorate of Bro. Charles G. Kindred is one of the happiest pages in the history of this Restoration movement in Chicago.

—Evangelist George C. Ritchey has served the South Idaho State Board since May 1, and in thirteen weeks' work has established three new churches, at Meridian, Emmett and Rupert. At Rupert the brethren had gotten together and selected officers, but the meeting added thirty-three to their membership, making forty-six in all. The church at Emmett starts with eighteen and the Meridian church with sixty-three. Rupert and Meridian have good Bible schools and Christian Endeavor societies. Emmett expects to organize a school soon. Brother Ritchey is in a meeting now at Nampa (aided by 300 Christian-Evangelists each week), which will be the last for the Idaho board at present. His time is taken until February 1, 1907. After that date he will have associated with him his brother, Arthur F. Ritchey, a trained singing evangelist. They will accept calls anywhere after February 1, 1907, but prefer the Pacific coast and northwest. Address George C. Ritchey, Monmouth, Ore., box 166.

—There were 172 additions in the recent revival at Latham, Mo., in which H. J. Corwine, of California, Mo., was assisted by evangelists Allen Wilson and W. F. Lintt. Of these additions, 144 were by confession and baptism. The local paper says: "H. J. Corwine, pastor of the California church, was the moving spirit in this great meeting, and to him should be given the credit for the inception and much of the success of the meeting. He planned the organization of the Christian churches of the county, and selected Latham as the most available point for the meeting. For months he has labored, advertising, and organizing for the meetings, and during the services he was the great power behind the wheel and is the happiest man in the county as a result." But Brother Corwine himself writes of the evangelists: "Brother Allen's sermons are replete with thought and enthusiasm. He is noticeably consistent and free from graft and sectarian bigotry. He presents the Christianity of Christ in a strictly modern way. His sermons on Christian evidences are especially strong. There is more of Christ in his sermons than in any other I ever heard. If he preaches you a sermon on baptism, you will see more Christ than water." Of W. F. Lintt he says: "His personality, his ability and disposition to do personal work, his amiable disposition and character will make him a mighty power for God and good in any community." With such a combination of evangelists and pastor, what else can we expect but great meetings like this?

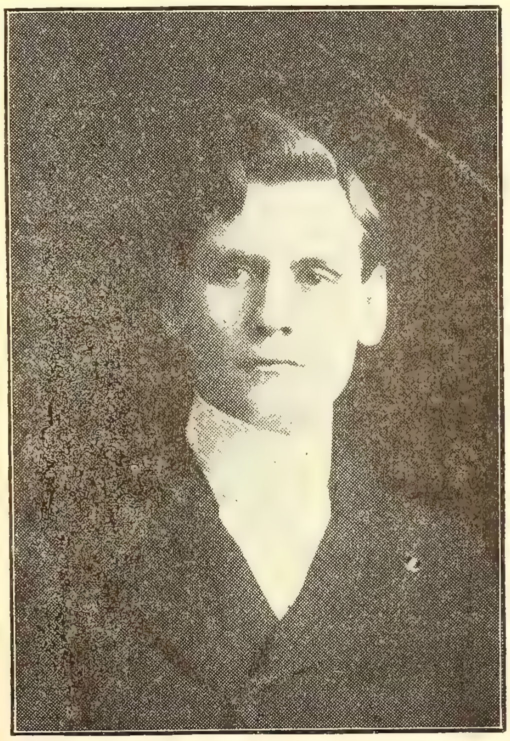
The Maple-Miller Meeting, Gas City, Indiana.

The Maple-Miller evangelistic team begins their meeting with the Christian church, Gas City, Ind., next Monday evening. The first part of August Evangelist Maple was at Gas City preparing the way, organizing, appointing committees, etc., and the membership of the church have worked hard to have a great meeting. A report from there indicates that everything is ready for an ingathering.



O. D. Maple.

Gas City is one of the boom towns, but now has the stability of a permanent, growing city in which we should have a strong church. It will now become a solid growing one. They have a good building paid for and located well, a good Bible school and Endeavor, and the church has a future.

J. Ross Miller, the singer, is one of their own young men. Nothing speaks better for a preacher or singer just entering the work than for his own home congregation not only to endorse him but to employ him. Brother Miller is an exemplary Christian, and sings understandingly from the heart and sings to save souls.

It is to be hoped that in next week's Christian-Evangelist, the report from Gas City will be inspiring. They will be helped by 300 Christian-Evangelists each week. The Maple-Miller team goes from Gas City to Cairo, Ill., where they begin a tent meeting October 1, and then Princeton, Ind., October 29.

There are hundreds of Disciples who would have fellowship in the Manchester church if they knew it would be a success. Brother and Sister, this enterprise is already a success. The degree of success depends upon the contributions of Disciples who desire a church of our own "faith and order" there sufficiently to pay out of their means for it. The people are ready for it, we have evangelists capable of doing their part well, and the Lord's approval of the undertaking is very manifest.

Now, while times are so prosperous nearly any of us can get some money for the church, and while there is so much interest in Manchester let us double the present subscription, maintain Brother Crerie for at least half time during this interim and soon have one of our best evangelists in Manchester to build up a Church of Christ there that will be creditable to us, inspiring to all New England Disciples, and a means unto the salvation of myriads.

Bringing the Children to Jesus.

BY FERD F. SCHULTZ.

Children are sadly neglected by many parents as regards their spiritual training. We underestimate their ability to understand the simple truths of the Word of God. It is often said that under certain ages, children are too young to learn these truths. This is wrong. The sooner the seed is planted, the sooner it will take root and grow, if we will only take the time and patience to properly prepare the ground for the receiving of the precious seed. But this is not all; there must be continued care and patience exercised in the cultivation of this seed that has been planted in the young hearts. It has been truly said that no other form of Christian effort will bring forth such immediate, large and lasting results as the work that is spent for the conversion of children.

Some children understand at an earlier age than others, hence no definite time can be set for the beginning of an understanding of spiritual truths. The writer remembers a boy just past his sxth year who has as clear a conception of the truth as regards his relation to the Savior as many an older person and upon his confession he was admitted into the membership of the church.

Now where shall the children be taught this spiritual truth? I would say, in the Bible school. This is the nursery of the church, and is thus the proper place for the children of the families of the church to be brought up in the knowledge of God and the Scriptures. Early Bible school service is the greatest stimulus in the young life for continuous service and ultimately coming into the kingdom. It is also the best safeguard in keeping children away from places of sin into which those who are neglected so easily fall. Children are more readily led to Christ than adults, hence the parents should redouble their efforts to make these good impressions early. It is important that parents accompany their children to divine services for the influence of their so doing is never forgotten.

A child's mind is very plastic, "like clay to impress and like marble to retain." Again, early conversions stand the test of years better than those made at a later period. Then, too, those who enter the church early have not so much to unlearn as those who have grown old in sin. Dr. Torrey very tritely remarks that "a man converted at sixty is a soul saved plus ten years, but a child saved at ten is a soul saved plus sixty years of service."

Beautifying the Church House.

Nothing can be more fitting, appropriate, helpful in every way or important to a congregation than a good church house built and furnished for both convenience and beauty. Both of these qualities are everywhere evident in the natural world directly ordered and created by the great ruler of the universe. Love for them is a divine attribute that was planted in the very beginning in the heart of man.

As man is gradually brought from the darkness into which sin has led him, into the light where he may gaze upon the things which are pure, good and lovely, his admiration for order, convenience and beauty grows. If it is considered of prime importance for our homes and our cities to be built with these things in view, how very much more important for us to give our most thoughtful attention to the building and furnishing of our church homes in such a manner as will please the properly cultivated taste. This does not necessarily mean an expensive and imposing establishment any more than it can be claimed that only the mansion can be made an attractive home. Cottages may be made both convenient and beautiful—indeed, those are not lacking who will prefer them to the mansion, especially where the show of magnificence is the principal feature of the latter. We have passed our pioneer days and if we are to lead people to higher things spiritually we can not afford to offend against the law of order and beauty which is one of our God's laws. If humanity loves the beauty of the parks, and it does, why not consider it wise and helpful to make of the church lawn a thing of beauty? If the symmetrical lines of a well designed building attract attention and cultivate the artistic in man, why not have this fact in mind when planning the church building?

In this issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST we inaugurate a department of advertising under the head of "Church Architecture, Furniture and Ornamentation," where the cards of houses engaged in the lines indicated will be found. Only such establishments as we can recommend our readers to patronize will be permitted to have a place in this column, and we will be glad to answer any inquiries concerning plans in the direction pointed out by this article.

In this issue we present the following list of reliable houses: The Cincinnati Bell Foundry, Church Bells, Cincinnati, O. The Jacoby Art Glass Co., Art Glass and Memorial Windows, St. Louis. Geo. H. Springer, Individual Communion Service Ware, Boston. Thomas Communion Service Co., Communion Service Ware, Lima, O. Geo. Kilgen & Son, Pipe Organs, St. Louis. Hinners Organ Co., Pipe Organs, Pekin, Ill. Burlington Pipe Organ Co., Pipe Organs, Burlington, Ia.

We expect to add others to this list until it shall contain the names of one or more firms in every branch of this important and helpful line of business. It is earnestly requested that our readers who are commissioned by their congregations to look after such matters of improvement write to the houses represented in this column, and when you write please mention the fact that you saw the announcement in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Fifty Years a Minister.

Such a life as has been lived in this community by Rev. T. P. Haley is noteworthy in many respects. For fifty years he has been a minister of the gospel and for twenty-five years he has been laboring quietly and unostentatiously in Kansas City. So far as we recall there is no other clergyman in this city with such a record, with the exception of Bishop John J. Hogan. It is a happy omen that of the two men with this fine record behind them one should be a Catholic and the other a Protestant, both working toward the same great end in differing ways.

In every community there are men who have accomplished great things and have reflected renown upon the place of their birth or long residence. The world elevates them upon the pedestal of fame and their names are spoken with applause, while vastly more notable contributions to general progress and moral welfare are made by men who are seldom heard of. But the so-called obscurity of the latter is in itself an honor, for it is a testimonial to sincerity of purpose and the insignia of unselfishness. Weighed in the secret balances of the greatest good, the patient and heroic unknown count for infinitely more than many of the great of earth. Those who labor in the limelight are measured by concrete results. The congressman and senator are too often judged by what they "get" for their town or district or state, either in the way of public plums or in the form of the vicarious honor which they reflect. The same is true in other forms of public service. The worth of the philanthropist is gauged by what he gives. People like to be "shown." They want to see what has been done.

This false, or at least unreliable, standard causes many persons to fail to appreciate at its full value all that such a career as Dr. Haley's stand for—fifty years of earnest devotion to the cause, not merely of denominational advancement, but of the moral welfare of the race; fifty years of faithful, consecrated and helpful work in all the tender and and sacred relations of a minister to his people; fifty years of ready co-operation in all things that make for the public good, for a cleaner and better public life; half a century of striving to make the world and the country and the state and the community pay more heed to those things that are of greatest worth and less to those that hinder or do not matter. Such a life as that is of unmeasured value. It is such lives that make all life worth living.—Kansas City Journal.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Illinois Notes.

Few times of greater interest ever come to the young, than when they leave the parental roof, the home, Sunday-school and the old church to go to college. Here and now, by the choice of the college and the conduct in it, is as largely determined the destiny of the individual. It is the hour of crisis, dangers threaten, allure, persist, destroy, possibilities; helpful influences, unfolding powers, lead on and upward with holy inspiration the youth whose face is set in the right direction. Illinois is said to have more schools of higher learning, in proportion to population, than any other state in the Union, except one. The qualities are as wide in range as the number, and the results as various. A state that furnished the nation's president in time of its greatest peril, the army's general in the nation's greatest struggle and the spiritual leader to organize a uniform Bible study for 20,000,000 Sunday-school people will constantly be called upon for great men, leaders in all affairs of human good. Men and communities are constantly being tested. It requires moral and spiritual character as well as intellectual culture to meet the pressure in this day of strenuous life. The preparation, therefore, should be comprehensive, thorough and radical. As the day approaches for the doors of learning to swing open, interests, of both parents and children, center upon the where and with what possible, probable results? Will the son or daughter return home to love it better, to lend to his community a stronger helping hand in all its intellectual, moral and spiritual forces? Is he going to college where these are matters of concern? It is needless to say that hundreds of young people every years lose, rather than gain in the highest elements of character and consequently in chances for larger and more permanent success, because their college surroundings were bad. Every parent and child is therefore deeply and vitally interested in looking into the character, environments, and influences of the college chosen, especially for his earlier years of higher education. Eureka College has been provided and supported by the Church of Christ, as nearly ideal as possi- for the thorough all-round education and culture of well-disposed young people. The eminence attained by a vast company of her students and alumnae in all honorable vocations, shows it to be a college of unsual power and usefulness. The Savior has furnished us the best standard of judgment, "Fruits." It is an honor and high recommendation for any young man or woman to have been a student of Eureka College. Illinois Disciples can do no better than to thoroughly patronize their own great school.——The church at Mt. Zion, three miles from Eureka, where about 150 young ministers have preached among their first sermons, still lives and prospers. It was here that A. P. Cobb, tried to preach his first sermon, utterly failed, broke down and almost vowed to abandon his purpose as a preacher, but kind hearts and the generous church saved him to the ministry. It was in this church that J. T. Stivers, now evangelist of Colorado, grew to manhood and began his ministry. The church has always been a loyal helper to the college and has more members in the Illinois Christian Educational Association in proportion to its members, than any other church in the state. Prof. B. J. Radford preaches for them regularly and is justly very highly esteemed.——The church at Rock Island had many years of hard struggle, but through the long ministry of T. W. Grafton, and the building of the church by Mrs. M. H. Wadsworth, a memorial to her honored father, P. L. Mitchell, in 1894, prosperity and large strength have come. The building is a beautiful, commodious house in the heart of the city, with equipments and rooms for various activities of the church. All our great enterprises are represented, all receive offerings. Paris, Bloomington and Eureka were the only churches in the state that made larger offerings on Education Day, than Rock Island. O. W. Lawrence was away on his vacation at my visit, but I heard only words of appreciation and praise for his efficient work. I had the pleasure of being guest in the delightful home of G. C. Sanderson, whom I had not seen for 20 years, but who was one of my most reliable helpers among the young people during my pastorate at Pittsfield. I was glad to find him a faithful, trusted officer at Rock Island.——The Kewanee church has not gotten through the days of struggle that come as a kind of selection and seasoning in most all churches. It has been about 6 years since a few members were banded together for the Lord's work. They have all the usual auxiliaries to church life, and has an enrolled membership of 280, and a Sunday-school of 150. Its young people have already learned where Eureka College is, and have enjoyed some of its blessings. The state board has done much for this church and made a good investment. As soon as they can get free from debt they expect to plan for a better house. W. A. Green has preached for them since November, 21 have been added to the church and $800 have been paid on debts. Preacher and people seem happy in their struggles and both have bright futures before them.——The Washburn church for 42 years has steadily held up the banner of the cross. It has been especially wise in its selection of ministers, and has now an enrollment of about 325, with 250 in Sunday-school, 35 in Christian Endeavor, 35 in Junior, 63 in C. W. B. M. W. H. Jenner has been here two years and a half; during his ministry 77 have been added to the church. He is a most active and aggressive man in pulpit, church business and pastoral care. The missionary and benevolent offerings the past year were $925 for interests beyond the church's local borders. What a power in the world the church would be if all our congregations would live and give like Washburn! Besides this manner of effort, four preachers have grown up in this congregation, Gilbert Gish, L. B. Pickerill, C. E. Richards, and last but not least, S. E. Fisher, our minister in Champaign.

T. L. Reed, our preacher from South Chicago, has just moved his family to Eureka for educational purposes. A. R. Finnell, from East Side church, Springfield, has moved to Eureka to be in college. Several other good men are coming and by September 18 it appears now that a very fine company of young people will be ready to enter college.

Southern California Convention.

Another annual encampment by the sea by the Disciples of Christ in Southern California has come and gone. From August 9 to 19 Long Beach entertained the largest number of Disciples that ever attended our conventions. For those ten days our brethren enjoyed a "feast of reason and flow of soul." The attendance was by far the largest in our history. The enthusiasm ran at high tide from the first service in the Long Beach church till the last amen was said in the great auditorium where people sat spellbound under the magic powers of Prof. Willett. The reports for last year's work as given by Secretary Lewis were most encouraging. Financial aid was given to 30 mission points. Those missions reported 150 conversions and 432 added otherwise. These 30 mission churches have a membership of 1,375 souls and gave $1,212 for missions. In this bishopic there are 60 churches with 10,000 members and they gave last year for missions $15,000, for current expenses $55,000 and for church property $55,000, making a grand total of $125,000. Their increase in membership was 25 per cent. This was largely due to the large influx of population from the east. The treasurer of the convention reported that $8,042.70 had passed through his hands and had been distributed into the various channels of work carried on by the convention. A number of eastern workers made distinct contributions to our work. The sisters had Mrs. Louise Kelley and Miss Bertha Mason as helpers and they rendered great service. George Ranshaw made a great appeal in behalf of home missions. F. M. Rains overflowed when at the end of a great speech on foreign mission four Living Links for foreign missions were given. It was all an illustration of the wisdom and benefit of keeping well trained men among the churches in behalf of this greatest work of the church. H. L. Willett was the chief speaker of the convention. It is putting it mildly to say that he captured the convention. He is surely a prince among Christian gentlemen, among scholars, lecturers and preachers. Some came to doubt and all went away from his lectures to praise. He is surely one of the sons of genius. One of the unique features of the convention were the steps taken to consolidate our educational interests in Southern California with those of Pomona College. This institution of learning was established by the Congregationalists and is largely under their control at present. They own a plant with a property and endowment worth $500,000. Last June they had 35 graduates in regular college courses. They expended for current expenses last session $50,000. George A. Gates is their president. They recently made an offer to the Baptists and Disciples to merge their educational interests in Southern California. The terms and conditions of this union were so favorable that it was accepted absolutely unanimously by the convention and henceforth Pomona College is to be our college. The Baptists will decide upon their relation to the college at their Southern California convention in December, 1906. We feel this to be a great step in advance not only in the interest of the cause of the Disciples of Christ, but also of the wide fellowship of all the children of God and a very distinct step toward that Christian union for which we so distinctly pray and preach. It is our custom at these conventions to take pledges for our work the following year. This year the pledges were as follows: for Southern California work, $7,500; for church building league, $750; for C. W. B. M. interests, $1,200; four Living Links for Foreign Society, $2,400, and Christian Endeavor $350. Grand total, $12,200. For the 8,000 Disciples in Southern California affiliating with this organized work this makes a commendable showing. It is peculiarly gratifying to the writer to see this great growth in the cause so dear to him. He has seen it grow from infancy, when it was largely the creature of the noble church for which he has ministered these sixteen years, to its present commanding power and influence and finds in its growth and power one of his chief joys. May the Lord nurture and prosper this great work.

Kentucky State Convention Matters.

We are almost at the threshold of the time honored gatherings of our people. Lacking one year we have gone up to these meetings for three quarters of a century.——The writer does not intimate that he has been going that long, but that Kentucky Disciples may in 1907 celebrate the diamond jubilee of state missions.——We are confidently expecting the greatest gathering in the history of our Kentucky people at Louisville, September 24-27, in the First Christian Church. Reduced rates have been granted on all railroads. We are promised a rate of one fare plus 25 cts. You need to buy a round trip ticket from starting point. No certificate. You are thankful for that and so am I. Better ask your ticket agent if he has received instructions and if he has not, tell your troubles at once to R. M. Hopkins, No. 218 Keller Building, Louisville, Ky.——Entertainment—While you are writing to the genial Sunday-school man, if the above matter demands it, tell him that you will be there. If you do not have to write about railroad matters, you must tell him that you expect to go to the convention and that you would like to be provided with a home where you will be furnished lodging and breakfast. You must carry enough money to pay for dinner and supper each day. If you do not tell Hopkins about your intentions you will not expect him to see that you are lodged and breakfasted—will you? Tell him now. The Delinquent List.—If by any means your congregation belongs to this list you want to have it transferred to the list of churches paying their apportionment, or at least making a creditable contribution, for Kentucky missions. Some of the churches on this list now would amaze the brethren; but when the report is read September 26, many of these will be reported as in line. Prompt action is indispensable to avert a defeat and a financial report of which our people will not be proud. Delay invites defeat. Procrastination is not only the thief of time; but the fruitful cause of failure. Prompt, vigorous, hearty, determined action is imperative. Yours in great anxiety. H. W. Elliott, Sec.

North Carolina Notes.

At last meeting your correspondent was visiting his home people at Bellaire, O. August 12, preached for the congregation at Smithfield, O., in the community where I was born. At that church I was received into the fellowship, having been baptized at fourteen years of age by Cyrus McNeeley at Hopedale, O., at the annual meeting the third Lord's day in August. We had no regular preaching at Smithfield then. Nobody gave the invitation, and I had to go away from home to hear much preaching. Smithfield now has a modern house and a resident preacher. Hopedale still continues the annual meeting. I would have been glad to attend after many years' absence from the place of my spiritual birth, but my face was set toward Bethany Beach, Del, the eastern resort of Disciples. If the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist will forsake for one season his park at Pentwater, and come down there to the broad Atlantic's shores, he can enjoy a dip in the ocean that will give as much pleasure as the one he enjoyed in the pool at San Bernardino, Cal., a year ago, and he can go out over the breakers and dip his line in the ocean and catch more than two fish in one forenoon. Then he can enjoy the fellowship of Power and Bagby and Cramblet and Batman and Tharp and many more. Mr. Editor, if you want to have a good time, come to Bethany Beach next year.—There were numerous good things on the program. Mrs. Princess Long and the Nitz sisters delighted the people with their music. The editor of "The Christian Standard" gave an address of breadth and strength on liberty. Brother Power gave an interesting address for the children on "A Night in Palestine.' Brother Batman of Philadelphia, gave a strong sermon on a restatement of the way of salvation, and there were other good things we have not room to mention. The service on Lord's day morning, August 19, was one of the best we ever attended at the beach. The vesper services are enjoyable.——E. B. Bagby, C. M. Watson, of Connellsville, Pa., and Dr. McMains, of Baltimore, and others were displaying their skill on the tennis court.—Ex-Governor Tunnel, of Delaware, who has a cottage at another resort, enjoys the breezes and the fellowship, stopping at "The Sussex." The Atlantic hotels and other cottages were well patronized.——Mrs. B. C. Hagerman, of Lexington, Ky., is building a nice cottage on the beach next to Congressman Graham's.——Brother Drexler and family, of Braddock, Pa., spent last winter on the beach.——August 26, I preached for Brother Power at Vermont avenue, 11 a. m. and for Brother Bagby at Ninth street, 8 p. m.——Ere September 1, Providence permitting, I will be home with my brethren in Winston-Salem, N. C. J. A. Hopkins.

Chicago Letter.

I have now served two months as city evangelist and superintendent of missions in Chicago. I begin to have some fair idea of the general situation. We have in this second city of America 26 churches and missions—a very small representation among her two million souls. Since coming I have spoken in the Jackson Boulevard, Metropolitan, Austin, Harvey, Irving Park, Maywood, and West End churches. Besides I have visited the South Chicago, Monroe Street, and Hyde Park fields. Most of my time has been spent in a tent meeting with the West End Mission. There were 20 in all came forward. About half of them may be counted as additions to our force. The rest went to other churches, or were prevented from being baptized. For two years Bro. E. A. Henry, a student in Chicago University, has been the minister. In that time not one addition has been made. This fact will give some hint of the difficulty of the field. For the present I am to serve them in the hope of adding further to their members, and soon securing a regular and suitable meeting place. We have rented the Presbyterian Church of Sunday afternoons. They will enter their fine new house of worship about October 1. After that we hope to buy their old church. It is offered us at a fair price. It is well located and is a good building, and will serve all our purposes well for some years. Within one year you may expect to learn of a church of at least 100 members—there are 30 now—with a Sunday-school of over 100. Our next pressing work is to provide a meeting for the Maywood and South Chicago Missions, both of which must also have help in getting suitable meeting places before the work can grow or promise permanency. For all this our Church Extension Fund must be our chief reliance. I never realized before as I do since coming to Chicago how essential to our growth and property in the cities this fund is. I am hoping so earnestly that the September offering will be far the largest ever received for this all-important work. Some features of the Chicago situation strike the observer as very strange. Hereafter more than a half century of effort the Disciples have not a single church of the first rank. True the Jackson Boulevard and Metropolitan churches are good, active congregations, but do not rank with our strong churches in many of the smaller cities. I trust that by the time another decade has passed some better things can be said.

Another thing. No one of our Chicago preachers has been long on the field, except Geo. A. Campbell at Austin, and Ed. S. Ames, of Hyde Park. Parker Stockdale has been with the Jackson Boulevard church but a few months. The same is true of Rothenberger at Irving Park, Willett and Handley at the First, Moffett at Ashland, Buckner at Harvey, Lockhart at Chicago Heights, Fortune at Garfield Boulevard, Adlinger at Douglass Park, Campbell at the Metropolitan, Cummings at Logan Square, Hoover at Pullman, Shaw at Sheffield Avenue, Ward at Evanston, and Read at South Chicago. Kindred has been several years with the Englewood church, and Scoville several years with the Metropolitan.

Conditions of religious work are peculiarly difficult in Chicago, and no place calls for more wisdom and consecration. These qualities, happily, are found in the group of noble, educated, cultured, progressive young men in charge of our Chicago churches. If they will stay, growth is certain. Sumner T. Martin.

Harlow Meeting at Ennis, Texas.

Harlow and Harlow have just closed a twenty-four days' meeting at Ennis, Texas, with 98 additions; 69 confessions, 15 by statement, 5 reclaimed and 9 from denomination, among these last was a methodist minister. This is a great meeting for Texas, and when the local conditions are considered it is a very great one. Before this meeting there had been four or five revivals held since February by the other churches. Then only a short time before the meeting a great union revival finished, sweeping the town. People said to us, "Why are you going to have a meeting, there is no one for you to get?" But the Christian Church continued to make preparations though the conditions seemed to give little hope of success. The thought that they had undertaken to do something seemed to infuse the church with new life and during the three or four months preceding the beginning of the meeting there came in at the regular services 38 additions. The Harlows came and began August 5th. A large tent which had been ordered was blown to pieces by a storm and a smaller one was shipped us. During the twenty-four days there were eleven rainy days. But with these discouragements the audiences ranged from 700 to 1500 during the entire four weeks. The expense of the meeting was all paid, the membership is increased to nearly four hundred and our plea for primitive Christianity is before the people as never before. W. E. Harlow is a demonstration of Paul's statement that the gospel is "the power." During the entire meeting he told not one pathetic story save the story of a Savior dying upon the cross. The writer would sometimes almost lose patience with him because he would not give the emotional side at least a gentle touch. Bun when the invitation was given the wisdom of his method and the power of the gospel could always be seen. Brother Harlow is a plain man and preaches the plain gospel. This is the simple secret of a great success. Brother Clyde Harlow in conducting a chorus is unsurpassed by any I have heard. He is a great soloist especially noted for his clear enunciation.—C. B. Buffalo—Where You Are Coming.

BY B. H. HAYDEN.

The Mecca of the Churches of Christ changes annually. This year it is Buffalo, N. Y., October 12-18. The same religious thrill attends every pilgrimage. By request I attempt to delineate some minor attractions. We desire to know about a place to which we are going. Before starting to the Orient I read all I could of places to heighten the joy when there.

"In 1804 Joseph Ellicott surveyed out the village plot of Buffalo." (Records.) In 1809 Thomas Campbell surveyed out the plot of primitive Christianity in his notable "Declaration and Address."

"When we mean to build we first survey the plot." (Shakespeare.) It is fitting that the people of a religious movement meet in a city whose growth has so nearly paralleled it.

Jerusalem is the site of the Salem of King Melchisedec that preceded it, the Salem of the wild tribes of the Jebusites. Buffalo is the site of a village of the Seneca Indians of the Kahkwa nation. Long and painful race wars filled the early years, mingling human cries with the sounds of the troubled waters of Niagara.

But struggles centering in Buffalo, old Fort Erie and Niagara Falls were not all with the "poor Indian," forests primeval or resistless waters. The years circling about 1812 tell their own sad story of near of kin in combat along an imaginary national line out in the middle of river and lake. The Pyramids of Egypt derive part of their interest from the fact that they will never be repeated, human energies being turned now to better purposes; so the three years beginning 1812 derive interest from the fact that the people on different sides of this imaginary line are so on the same side of all right and higher issues and have come so to know and appreciate each other, that busy as the Evil Spirit of War still is, he can never again stir up such strife between such peoples. Hence now in the spirit of peace and fraternity we use the words of a message of those days summoning to War; "Come in companies, half companies, pairs or singly; come any way, but come." The convention thus can be claimed as a victory by the subjects of the crown and states alike, as by some was the battle of Lundy's Lane at Niagara Falls.

Well, now that we have come and have been true to the higher objects of our coming, what about your hundred years old city? Well, first, 375,000 inhabitants—all sorts. Two hundred and fifty daily passenger trains. (Look out to take the right one); a fine harbor that "harbors" 4,000 lake craft annually, some of which are like great ocean steamers. Grain elevators with capacity of 21,140,000 bushels, and 125,000,000 bushels came into the city in 1905. Lumber yards that handle 175,000,000 feet every year. Stock yards of 100 acres and an annual business of $100,000,000, second largest in the world; a pocket which if filled with gold would ruin the world; but it is a coal pocket, the Lackawana, 5,000 feet long.

Then here is the Lackawana Steel Plant that doesn't steal, as so many banks are doing lately, and it has a capital of $60,000,000.

The banks of Buffalo number 16 with an aggregate capital and surplus of $15,245,732 and deposits of $28,259,506.

Buffalo has 237 miles of asphalt pavement, surpassing Washington and Paris in this respect. Many of the business blocks and buildings will compare favorably with those of older and greater cities, one of which, the Ellicott Square building, has a floor area of 9 acres, and 16 elevators distribute the people to heights and directions sought.

But Buffalo has things of higher significance. The Public Library, housed in a fine building, has 220,000 volumes. The University of Buffalo, 60 years old, 3,000 alumni, 150 professors and teachers, and had 700 students the last year.

The Y. M. C. A. of Buffalo has one of the best buildings, if not the best in the world; 10 stories high, with every desirable feauture and equipment. There are 3,200 members, with a very large number of boys. The secretary and assistant join in extending hearty courtesies to the convention comers, not only to look through the building but to make it a rest. The press of Buffalo ranks high in tone and enterprise, and is hospitable to the coming of these great multitudes.

Buffalo is exceptional in its beautiful avenues and streets, pure atmosphere and elegant homes. Delaware avenue is the Euclid avenue of Cleveland or the Michigan avenue of Chicago, and the Delaware Park at its terminus is one of the most delightful. On Delaware avenue is the Milburn residence, where McKinley died, and the Wilcox residence where Roosevelt took the oath of office.

On the west border of Delaware Park, and overlooking lakelets reminding of Como and Lucerne, is the Albright Art Gallery, most elegant architecturally, and containing treasures admired by art critics of the world. In sight of this is the marble building of the historical society, cost $200,000, where one might spend weeks in profitable study. An Indian inscription attracted my attention as a fitting reminder during our coming conventions, reading as follows: "Neh-Ko, Cah-gis-dah-yen-duk," viz.: "Other council fires were here before ours."

A Word to Oregon Disciples.

Our state convention for 1906 is now a matter of history, but its plans and inspiration shall abide as an inspiration for the year upon which we have entered. We are all delighted that the old debt has been provided for, in pledges, some of which are already in, and that all our efforts for this year are to be given advancement in our mission work. This year should be very fruitful in results.

The convention re-districted the state and so adjusted the official representation as to make each district superintendent a vice-president of the state board. This will properly link together the work throughout the state and give a representative on the state board from every section of the state. The minutes of the convention are now in the hands of the printer. We hope to get a copy into each one of our homes that all may know what has been planned for the future. Knowledge concerning the work to be done will beget interest in its advancement.

It is the plan of the convention to send your secretary to every church in the state, to get acquainted with the workers and to interest the entire membership in the great work to be done.

Three of the new districts will hold conventions in October, the northwest, central and southwest. The northeast district already has Bro. N. H. Brooks in the field. The central district is helping the church at Woodburn in the erection of a house of worship. This work is under the able direction of Bro. L. F. Stephens, and will be dedicated next Lord's day. This district will have the services of Bro. J. N. McConnell after October 1.

The outlook for our work is very bright. We should make this the greatest year in our history. The convention adopted the motto: "Two thousand conversions and $6,000 for Oregon missions." This means only one conversion for every five members, and but an average of 57 cents each for Oregon missions. Several churches did better than that last year. One gave $1.25 per member and reported one conversion for every two old members.

Remember, we are to gain 100 per cent, in all lines by 1909. "Oregon for Christ." Let us pray for it, work for it, expect it. Jehovah is our God and Christ Jesus is our Captain, our Saviour, our Strength. Mark November 4 and surprise pastor and the church by the generosity of your provision for this great work.

While you are planning for greater things for Oregon, do not forget children's day for home missions. Every Bible school in Oregon should be enlisted. May we not have it so on September 2?

Yours in his name,

F. E. Billington, Cor. Sec. O. C. M. C.

Small and St. John began with us yesterday. Between 800 and 900 people attended both morning and night services. Everybody delighted with the music and preaching. Lowell C. McPherson spoke in the afternoon on Cuba to a good sized audience, and thus our meeting opened under the most inspiring influences. Two were received into the fellowship of the church at the morning service, but just as the evening sermon was closing thunder and lightning excited the audience and broke the deep feeling that was prevailing, under which some souls might have been won for Christ. The whole church is ready for a great meeting and we are confidently expecting great results.

Redeem West Virginia from Her Reproach.

The reproach of West Virginia must be removed, and the forces now at work are determined to accomplish this result before 1909, when the hosts, gathering during an even hundred years, shall surprise the religious world by their achievements. West Virginia was the nursery of this great movement and through Bethany College has continued that work throughout the years. The Campbells evangelized very little throughout the state, and while the ministerial graduates of Bethany have blessed all nations with the result of their labors, until about ten years ago West Virginia knew none of them. The Mountain State, like the old home place after the children are grown and gone, has been left without up-to-date cultivation, and is overrun with weeds and decay; anti-ism flourished like a green bay tree, till now the tree is brown and sear, bearing no fruit, tossed to and fro by every ism that has ever disturbed our people. Our preachers and churches have even been ready to lend themselves to any leader with mob-leading proclivites. Through it all there has resulted a lack of union that amounts to a divisive spirit, an indifference, a lethargy, that have been hard to overcome. West Virginia like Jerusalem of old gave up her fires to warm other localities, and the world has been profited by the dispersed energy, but coldness and reproach come upon the givers in each case. The reproach of West Virginia consists in this, that instead of being first among the states which carry on this great movement, a position is occupied among those which do the least. This reproach has been intensified by the indifference and division. Has been, yes, but shall be no more, so say the consecrated ministers who now occupy the leading pulpits, and the churches under their influence. The West Virginia Christian Missionary Society is to be the instrument of action. This conviction is not the sentiment of an hour, but is the conviction developed by the history of the last ten years. These years have really been wonderful years, as practically all the larger cities save those in the region of Bethany have been entered during that time. The work has been done with only a struggling state organization, which has been without money and with only a few of the churches backing it up. The work is a monument to A. Linkletter who has struggled to support himself, and who has done that very thing during the twelve years of his ministry as corresponding secretary of the society. His work has largely consisted in keeping the pastoral question before the people and in inducing Bethany men and other college men to locate with the churches. One considers with regret what could have been done during this time if there had been back of him a strong financial support so that there would have been money to revive and strengthen the weak churches and to support missions, as has been done by other state organizations. The time has now come when the churches may be drawn closer together by state and district organizations. To forward this and to find out and to know each other, a simultaneous revival has been inaugurated to begin at once after the convention at Buffalo. To forward the revival and to enlist as many churches as possible in the initial movement the committee, of which Percy H. Wilson of Moundsville, is chairman, secured the services of George F. Crites, of Ohio, from the Ohio Missionary Society for six months, as special field agent. Brother Crites has organized two missions during this time, one for the Huntington church with a membership of sixty-five, and one at Williamson with some fifty members. He has also stirred up many churches to the need of the work and enlisted many in the revival. There never has been the interest we now find in our state work and the coming convention at Sistersville will no doubt strengthen the society, and send us all back to the coming year's work with new plans, new hopes and new zeal for the conquest of West Virginia. The impure preacher and the division maker will soon find that West Virginia is no longer a haven of rest for all who would disturb, nor for those who would propogate ism nor lead mobs against some brother "departed from the faith."

Jesus is coming into West Virginia with his purity and with his peace-making power, while the hosts gather to greet and follow wheresoever He may lead.

REGIMENTAL REUNIONS AND FORTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY BATTLE CHICKAMAUGA,

CHATTANOOGA, SEPTEMBER 18-20, 1906.

On September 18, 1906, will occur the forty-third anniversary of the Battle of Chickamauga. It is proposed to celebrate this memorable event with a reunion of the various regiments that participated in this memorable battle and the various battles fought around Chattanooga. This reunion will be held at Chickamauga National Park, September 18, 19 and 20, and the present indications are that it will be the largest and most notable gathering ever held in the South. On the above dates, the remnants from the armies of twelve states, comprising the following: Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas and Kentucky, will assemble, many for the first and last time since they marched from its blood-stained fields, forty-three years ago.

Here is one of the great opportunities for the education of the youth. Don't fail to take your children and show them historic Chattanooga, with all its historical connections. It is the opportunity of a lifetime. Go and see the old war generals and other officers; point out the places of interest on the battlefield; let them show you and explain, in person, the markers erected on the battlefield showing the positions of the opposing armies at the time of battle. It will not be long until none will be left to do this noble work.

It will be many years, if ever again, that such an opportunity will present itself. See that your tickets read via the Louisville & Nashville R. R., the Battlefield Route. Call on your nearest railroad agent for rates and advertising matter pertaining to the reunion, or write nearest representative of the Louisville & Nashville R. R.

Palmyra, Illinois.

Nearly a score of years ago, when the writer was disentangling himself from the meshes of sectism, a tract of Brother Garrison's did most towards his liberation; but Bro. A. Martin, then of Liverpool, Eng., now of Davenport, Ia., was the man to cut the last strands of inherited error. It was therefore a happy coincidence that timed Brother Martin's vacation just when his friend needed an experienced evangelist to conduct a meeting for him. The "vacation" has been filled with unstinted effort to convert sinners and uplift saints. Fourteen new members may seem a small result to some, but not to those who know the limitations of the field, and the combination of extraordinary hindrances. Storms, heat, picnics (a matter of consequence to rural communities), funerals, etc., but the preacher ever cheery; arousing slumbering "belong-ers," refreshing the faithful, comforting the sorrowing and greatly strengthening the hands of his "auld acquaintance."

CHRIST AS A WORKMAN.—Mark 6:3.

If Christ's enemies could have held before him one imperfect plow-beam that would have been a serious reflection on his divinity. There is a moral obliquity in the slovenly doing of even the humblest tasks that the world is beginning to recognize and that God always has. Another phase of pure religion and undefiled is always doing our best.

Any yardstick Jesus, the carpenter, may have made would be fully thirty-six inches long. For the sake of a wage he would not have debased his skill to assist an employer in defrauding. Indignant rebellion in workshops to-day would help many a haughty employer to repentance.

With toiled-stained and callous hands, Jesus, the workingman, has invested labor with a dignity of which tyranny, oppression, and poverty have never been able to despoil it.

It is encouraging to know Christ's works are always complete. The blind he healed saw perfectly; the lame he cured leaped as a hart; the leprous he cleansed were made every whit whole; the dead he revived were lusty and strong. This gives us assurance that when he forgives our sins, they will be entirely obliterated; that when we are resurrected, we will come forth in beauty and power, and when coronated, we shall be completely endued with all the prerogatives of prophets, priests and kings unto God.

Had Jesus the carpenter made poor gates and chests in Nazareth we might have expected Bartimaeus to have seen men as trees walking, Lazarus, the Ruler's daughter, and the widow's son to have been invalids following their resuscitations, the grave but half robbed of its terrors, and the plan of salvation at the best an uncertain way of escape from sin. In the seeming inconsequentials we should form habits of exactness. They will serve us well when the great works are assigned us.

One can not think of carpenter Jesus hanging a door and leaving it till it swung evenly and fitted exactly. Just to the extent that the farmer throws an uneven furrow, and the maid is untidy, and the tailor's garment is ill-fitting, and the painter's work is defective, and the lawyer's brief is not germane, and the physician's diagnosis is not scientific, do they all fall short of Christlikeness. Not till we attach ethical significance to handiwork and braincraft as well as to thought and worship do we apprehend the mind of the Master.

The microscope reveals that in the pointing of a thorn there is a perfectness unapproachable by human mechanics, and that in the arrangement and tinting of the scales on the butterfly's wing the perfection is the despair of artists. This same painstaking care is manifest not only in the minutiae but also in the magnitudes. Centripetal and centrifugal forces among the stars exactly balance or constellations would be wrecked and the universe changed into chaos. The bee's instinct must build the honey cell with exact precision or all the works of God would not be perfect and human confidence in his omniscience and omnipresence would waver. One test of our godliness is the doing well of all our tasks, great or small, and whether they be public as the door plate or a piece of hidden frieze.

The mandates still apply, "Let not the sun go down on thy wrath." "If thou art offering thy gift on the altar and rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee, leave thy gift beside the altar, go, be reconciled to thy brother, and then return and offer thy gift."

An open enemy is more helpful than most of our friends. An indulgent friend would palliate many wrongs to which we are tempted, while many have been restrained from evil by thoughts of the pitiless exposure enemies would make if the transgression were detected. This may not be a lofty motive to righteousness, but it at least saves us from forming the habit of sin and bringing down upon us the destructiveness of actual commission.

The Pharisees were Christ's recognized foes, but it must not be imagined that as their enemy he pronounced the woes upon them. In love and forgiveness he told them their sins and their accompanying doom. It may require more grace than we have yet attained unto, but sufficient grace we should possess to warn our enemies of a sinner's doom. And we ought to so live that our enemies would know that not in malice but in love we have spoken.

The best possible disposition to make of an enemy is to convert him into a friend.

There will be no enmities in heaven. There are two parties to all animosities on earth, and it is unlikely they will meet in the world of peace beyond. It is certain the gates will be barred against the one most at fault, and possibly against both. In view of this let us be very sure we have our quarrels just. Possibly much of the torment of the lost will be caused by the eternal waging of fierce feuds not amicably settled on earth when they began.

It is not enjoined upon us to supinely submit to the machinations of our enemies. Had David surrendered to Saul Israel had been deprived of her most illustrious reign. Christ's enemies took him to a precipice intending to hurl him headlong down, "but he passing through the midst of them went his way." Likewise with us. We should protect our lives, vindicate our good names, not with vindictiveness, but in simple justice to ourselves and all the good we may do in after years; we must defend ourselves and prevent any curtailment of our prerogatives and power of service. Most of all should we resist Satan even unto blood, for he would terminate a useful career here and fill our eternity with woe.

Jesus met his enemies with the perfect fearlessness of absolute innocency. He was never made nerveless by fear of exposure. Better far in meeting our enemies than chain vesture is the consciousness that we have not sinned against them. That they have wronged us puts cowards' hearts in them. That we have been just with them gives us prevailing might. Innocency will ultimately be vindicated even as in the case of the French Dreyfus who recently received the cross of the Legion of Honor on the exact spot where twelve years before his sword had been broken in dishonor and the buttons torn from his uniform in disgrace.

JESUS SILENCES THE PHARISEES AND SADDUCEES.—Mark 12:13-27.

Memory Verse, 27.

Golden Text.—Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's—Mark 12:17.

Tuesday of Passion Week was marked by arguments and conflicts with the Pharisees and Sadducees. There was a double purpose in these arguments. The members of these two sects were not only trying to entrap Jesus, but were also trying to entrap each other and to draw from Jesus arguments against the other's position. In the three questions which were asked him (Mark 12:13-34) we can see the play of these motives.

"Is it lawful to give tribute to Caesar?" the Pharisees asked. The Sadducees held that it was. They complaisantly accepted Roman rule and tried to get what advantage they could from it. The Pharisees were the party of perpetual protest against the profanation of Judah by Roman domination. They knew that Jesus had been looked to by many people as a possible leader of revolt against Rome. If he said it was not lawful to give tribute to Caesar and give a reason for it, he would be helping them to confute the Sadducees. If he said that it was lawful, he would estrange many of his own followers who were perhaps still expecting him to issue a declaration of independence for Israel.

His reply was not a mere verbal quibble. It was more than a verbal "silencing" of the Pharisees. It was the statement of a great principle. The Jews of Jesus' day thought that their religion could not flourish unless it had a political government back of it. They blamed Rome for the decadence of their religion, just as the Pope blames the French government for the decay of religion in France. Jesus' statement meant that religion is a thing of the Spirit; that it can not be bound by political ties; that under any political conditions it is still possible to serve God. This position transcended the teaching of both Pharisees and Sadducees. It was this principle that rendered possible a non-political Messiahship and which renders possible a church not "established" by the state.

The Sadducees, encouraged perhaps by the appearance of agreement with their position in "render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's," come now with a question directed against the Pharisees' doctrine of the resurrection, which the Sadducees denied. There is almost no doctrine of a future life in the Old Testament, so the Sadducees were not so far from the traditions as it may seem to us.

The question of the Sadducees assumed that if there is a future life its conditions and institutions must be like those of this life—for example, the institution of marriage. Jesus destroyed their argument by destroying this assumption. Exactly what the future life may be like we may not know. But it is a spiritual existence in which marriage plays no part.

The answer to this question was the complete discomfiture of the Sadducees and the assertion of the doctrine of immortality.

One of the novices was a lawyer with a fine practice; another was an accomplished artist. The discipline is strict. Every day in the private chapel in the garden the members say lauds, prime, terce, sext, nones, vespers and compline. They have a church shop in which, habited in their cowls, they supply various goods. One of them works as a tailor, making all the habits. These men in their little band form only one of the different companies of Romanizers who are bewitching large numbers of the people. They are silently and insidiously toiling to undo the Reformation. This could never be done by papist agencies outside, but the enemy is inside the pale of the Protestant church and unless the movement can be effectively checked in a few years the Church of England will be simply the Anglican branch of the Roman church. Large numbers of its clergy are sworn to drag this magnificent, historic communion back to the mediaeval apostasy. They are rapidly becoming the dominant element in the Church of England. The bishops are either in occult sympathy, or are powerless in face of this appalling prospect. But the great body of the nation is soundly Protestant at heart. That is the awkward fact for the ritualists. They know that their great difficulty will be the coming clamor for the disestablishment of the church. And in order to forestall this as a Protestant movement they are themselves declaring in favor of freedom of the church from the state. It is a curious development that we are witnessing in England. The nonconformists and the ultra high churchmen are irreconcilably antagonistic, yet they both favor disestablishment. Thus strangely do extremes meet in the motives of parties hostile to each other. The Romanizing ritualists want to be free to transform the church into an appanage of the Vatican. The free churchmen wish to see the Anglican church set free to purge itself from worldliness and superstition alike. We have lively times ahead. And they are very near at hand.

"Here I Stand"

And see the grand procession go by.

There are some stations where standing is at a premium, others where it is perilous. Then, brethren, have you not observed that frequent standing, even upon good ground, begets a mulishness in us so that we become confused and stand more than go ahead in the luminous future of revealed truths and opening fields of thought and investigation.

I often wanted to cut the breeching in the harness of a valuable horse, when a boy. The very choice blooded Kentucky animal drew the lines (balked) between single and double work. Is it not so, often with us, brethren? And may not some brighter intelligence want to cut the breeching? Let us discriminate and go ahead.

involve at all a change in moral character. More than that, the Masons seek to recruit their ranks from among those who are as good as they are. The better the man before he becomes a Mason the greater the victory. The mark or character of the Mason is external, a badge on the lapel of the coat which in no sense stands for a great moral change.

But it is not so in the making of a Christian. The morals of the man are supposed to be affected. We do not ask that a man's character be changed before we begin to put him through the process that makes him a Christian; but we seek to change it in the process of making him a Christian. The worse a man is before he becomes a Christian the greater the victory. The mark or character of the Christian is internal and stands for a great renovating transformation. Now, what is that mark? The answer to this question brings up to the second point of criticism, namely: That Brother Frazier's position is unscriptural.

The reason "There is a great difference between the Christian character and the non- or anti-Christian character," is because the Holy Spirit plays an important part in producing the marvelous transformation that justifies us in saying a man has a Christian character. But the Holy Spirit has nothing to do with making a man a Mason or an American. The change from the non-Christian to the Christian character is not only a moral change, which in itself would be sufficient to distinguish the change to the Christian character from that to the Masonic character, but it is spiritual as well. The Christian has been Spirit-taught, Spirit-led, Spirit-impressed, Spirit-filled, and because he has received the gift of the Holy Spirit is now a Spirit-led man. This fact and this alone is what gives us a right to affirm that any one has a Christian character. The possession of the Holy Spirit is the distinguishing character of the Christian, or that which gives him his distinguishing character. Paul says in Eph. 1:13, "In whom, having also believed, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise." (Compare Eph. 4:30 and 2 Cor. 1:22). Paul thus clearly teaches that God, by the gift of the Holy Spirit, sets a seal, or mark, or a character upon Christians by which he indicates who are his. Baptism is not the seal. Brother Frazier would almost have us think so. A man is not a Christian because he has been immersed, for that may be a hypocritical act which God alone can discern; but he is a Christian because God has given him the Holy Spirit. Baptism in one phase of it is an overt act of obedience which gives expression to a new disposition which has been planted, and a spirit or character of obedience which is being formed, in the subject requesting baptism. But the final proof that any baptism is genuine is the giving of the Holy Spirit.

Now, how can Brother Frazier or anybody else know that a man possesses the Holy Spirit? By his bearing the fruit of the Spirit and giving expression in service to the new character planted in him. A man is not a Christian in character unless he is giving Christian service and bearing the fruit of the Spirit. He cannot bear the fruit of the Spirit unless he possesses the Spirit. And if he has the Holy Spirit he is a Christian in fact. It is illogical and unscriptural, therefore, to affirm that a man can be a "Christian in character" and not be a "Christian in fact." And as Christ's purpose in the Gospel is to produce Christian character, Brother Frazier's position compels him to acknowledge that the ultimate purpose of Christ to effect the individual's salvation by planting his own character in him, can be accomplished without making a man a Christian in fact. It seems to me that Brother Frazier is either compelled to affirm that those who have been conscientiously sprinkled for baptism are Christians if they have Christian characters, or else deny that they have Christian characters. The readers of The Christian-Evangelist will be glad to know what Brother Frazier will have to say further about this.

CHURCH DEDICATIONS.

Asherville, Kan.

Lord's day, August 26, was a field day for our people. Our church was dedicated by W. S. Lowe, of Topeka, after raising the $200 lacking to meet all bills. After the morning service we went to the groves—God's first temples—and there was provided stacks of good things to eat. They were attended to by a large audience. At 3 p. m. the church was again crowded to its full capacity, and Bro. W. H. Scrivner, pastor of the Christian Church of Beloit, gave us a masterly sermon. After this service we found that Brother Lowe would be unable to preach any more that day, so we arranged for our pastor, Brother Clark, to supply for Brother Scrivner at Beloit, and Brother Scrivner gave us another great sermon at 8 p. m. to a packed house. The Baptist brethren dismissed their services and came with us, their pastor assisting in every service, and we all felt how blessed it was for brethren to dwell together in unity. It was an ideal day—cool and pleasant. The gracious blessing of our dear Lord was all about us, and we greatly rejoiced together.

Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

It is now 22 months since our main building was totally destroyed by fire. About 120 young preachers were turned out on a cold and unresponsive world. It was a sad ending to ten years of toil and sacrifice. We began the work of restoration and enlargements the day after the fire and we have proved one thing sure: God, our Father, still hears and answers the prayer of faith. Thirty-three hundred and fifty (3350) people, congregations and societies have contributed to the building fund. Many of them have given repeatedly. In all we have raised about $30,000 and we need yet about $1,800. We have a magnificent equipment and we hope to dedicate it free from debt. This institution has solved the question of getting an education and keeping out of debt. Thirty dollars ($30) and three half hours a day, and four half hours on Mondays will pay all college fees for one year, including board. We have room for any young man who is free from the tobacco and other bad habits, and who is willing to help himself. The boat will leave Knoxville for Kimberlin Heights September 19, 1906, at 10 o'clock. Bring plenty bedding.

Dedication September 20, 1906.

Huntington, Ind.

The first Lord's day in September was a great day and triumph for the Huntington (Ind.) church. It was the day on which their great new building was dedicated. Z. T. Sweeney did the preaching and securing of pledges masterfully. Although the day was stormy and rainy, there were four great services: great services, great sermons, splendid music, fine fellowships, sweet communion and consecrated giving. During the day $26,000 was raised, and the building dedicated with all the cost—$36,000—provided for. The building is the best church edifice in the city and in Northern Indiana, and one of the best equipped in the entire brotherhood. The church is of the combination type, the auditorium and Sunday-school department being separated by massive sliding doors bearing decorations that conform to the entire walls. The auditorium has cowled floor, amphitheatrical seating, and with a convenient terraced gallery, has a seating capacity of 750. The pews are of golden oak, to correspond with the panel and wood work of the balconies and choir loft and the handsome pipe organ.

The Sunday-school department is a triumph of the skill of the architect, George W. Kramer. It is without question the most modern structure of the kind in Indiana, and is capable of accommodating a completely graded school of 800. There are 16 class rooms. Provision is made for a Sunday-school orchestra, library and secretary's rooms and for stereopticon. The main auditorium and Sunday-school room, when thrown together, form one room with a seating capacity of 1,500.

The basement is arranged for all the social functions and work of the church. A completely equipped kitchen and pantry, dining-room seating 200, lecture hall seating 400, parlors, toilets, robing rooms, choir waiting room, janitor's office and stores.

The decorations are subdued and simple, but rich and artistic, and the windows are of rich stained glass, without figures. The building itself is of modified Gothic architecture in design, and is an exemplification of the modern tendency to get away from the tower, the spire and all useless appendages. This church is built for use and equipped for service; is constructed of white sand-lime brick, with heavy Bedford stone trimmings.

The church dates back in its history to about 1845, when a little band, faithful to the cause they espoused, met from house to house to break bread. At times preaching was heard from visiting preachers, and an occasional evangelist held a week's meeting in the court house. Believers made the good confession and were baptized in the Wabash River and added to the flock. Thus the original 13 grew and multiplied, and in 1851 a plain frame chapel was erected. In 1886 L. Berry Smith was called to the pastorate, and the good man labored with them for 21 years and was followed in a seven-years' pastorate by H. C. Kendrick. A brick church was erected in 1881, greatly added to and remodeled in 1898. Short pastorates were held by O. S. Reed, W. T. Wells, and C. A. Hill. In September, 1902, Cephas Shelburne was called to the work. In a pastorate of four years the work has been greatly strengthened and built up. The best feeling exists between pastor and people, the finest harmony prevails and all departments of the work are growing and prospering. During that time 400 have been added to the membership, the Sunday-school has grown to 500, the C. W. B. M. numbers about 100, there is an excellent ladies' society, and the church is splendidly organized and finely officered and is a power for good in the community. The chief triumph of these four years is the building and dedication to the service of the Master this splendid church edifice. Twelve columns were given to the dedication by each of our daily papers. The church is planning for larger things.

The Creed of Ethan Allen.

By Frank Honeywell.

Beside his daughter's death-bed Ethan Allen sat one day;
He knew that ere another morn her soul must pass away
And leave alone with him a form of stillness and decay.

Upon his brow and in his eyes a hopeless look was set;
He gazed into his daughter's face, and as their gazes met,
Both pairs of eyes were dry, for naught had burst the tear-fount yet.

"O father," said the dying child, "pray tell me, tell me, now—
Shall I reject my mother's God, before him cease to bow?
What did it mean when you to mother made that sacred vow?

"When mother left you vowed to keep me near the faith until
I grew of age to follow my own conscience-governed will.
Oh, tell me, is that vow to mother firm and earnest still?

"Or is there naught in Calvary, no Christ-ruled Heaven-place?
But where the hope in such belief?—I see none in your face:
I see but lines of stern-checked grief, all hopeless to erase."

The father, well-night overcome, braced all the nerve he had;
He felt the tear-fount full to burst, a bursting that makes glad;
And in his inmost soul he screamed, "Mad infidel, you're mad!"

The fountain burst, nor in advance of bursting gave a sign,
And thus he sobbed, a conquered soul, "My daughter, choice is thine:
Keep, if you will, your mother's faith—there is no hope in mine."

Next day he bowed him o'er a form bereft of life and will,
And wondered at the peace that beautified her face, until
He felt an unwarned shudder at the doubt that bound him still.

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

PART III.

CHAPTER X.

When the "overland voyage" was resumed, Mrs. Weed was herself again, and the horses were themselves, too—that is saying more for Mrs. Weed than for the horses. After the night of Mrs. Weed's illness, Rhoda never thought of her or of Wizzen as she had before. Somehow all of their peculiarities were softened and in a way made sacred. Wizzen's grammar was as peculiar as ever, and his devotion to the use of "which" as pronounced; and Mrs. Weed was still groping blindly among the difficult recesses of the English language. But whatever they said or did, Rhoda knew that back of everything were their faithful hearts. As Wizzen once remarked, "I tell you, young folks, in speaking of the old lady, or of anybody else for that matter, when goodness is at the roots of the tongue it ain't of so much signification what trickles off the end of it. You two are digging and delving into them books hour after hour, and that's all right, I reckon. As long as they is books in the world, they ought to be some of a mind for 'em. But books alone makes a mighty pore specimen of humans. As I look at it, if they ain't a foundation, it don't matter what kind of a house you build. You may make it out of a encyclopedia of a hundred volumes, but it won't stick in a big windstorm. But the Bible puts it better than I can, to which I refer you, as to say a house built on rock or sand."

Wizzen's words about the young people studying from hour to hour were not unwarranted. It is true that Raymond's books were far beyond the place of Rhoda's studies. "But that doesn't matter," said Raymond, finding her eager to learn. "Cicero is easier than Caesar anyhow, and one grammar is as much grammar as another. It will do me good to teach you what I know, and it's so fine for us to be together!" And he smiled at her with affectionate enthusiasm. The botany proved one of their keenest delights. Often they walked to ease poor Wizzen's horses, and as they passed along the country roads they were continually calling to each other to look at some weed or wild flower or leaf. They made books of pressed leaves and grasses, and analyzed them with loving care. It was just like a holiday. Before the studies were taken up, Rhoda had found the journey pretty monotonous and tiresome; now it grew delightful. One no longer sat dully counting the mileposts or looking at the figures on the telephone-poles; one learned conjugations and declensions; one dived into intuitions, abstractions and subjectivity; one conned over the words in the dictionaries; one was always busy! And it was all in the open air, with the sunshine about them and the quails darting from the road, and the rabbits frisking their stubs of tails as if they knew they would not be good to eat till cold weather. So they traveled on and on, fitting themselves day by day for future positions of usefulness, and at last the goal of their ambition—St. Louis—smoked before them like one great chimney. The trip from Kansas City had taken them six weeks because the horses had been treated with unusual consideration. "I'm going to sell these beasts before they die," said Wizzen, driving into the straggling suburbs, "and if so, it will have to be did mighty quick! I 'low to git more enterprising beasts than these before I start back with the old lady to Crawley."

"When will you be going back?" asked Raymund, but he was so excited by the entrance into the great city that he hardly heeded the answer.

"Don't know," said Wizzen: "they is no profit in moving when it's all cut and dried beforehand. Where does your uncle live?"

In a chorus Raymund and Rhoda gave the direction. "You'd best walk there," said Wizzen, with decision. "I'll drive along till I hit a vacant lot and we'll take possession and there stay till we are made to get out. But you two will walk to the place, for your uncle will think more of you which he don't see you making your grand entry into the city in a mover's wagon."

"I'm not ashamed of the wagon, or of you," cried Rhoda, her eyes flashing.

"Then you can just be ashamed of human nature," returned Wizzen, unyieldingly, "for such is the case." It ended as Wizzen proposed. Mrs. Weed was left to take care of the wagon in a frowsy vacant lot which was scooped out in the center, presenting somewhat the appearance of an amphitheater. Down in the bottom of this great hole the wagon and horses looked unnaturally small. As the others looked down from the street, Mrs. Weed waved a handkerchief above her gray head and shouted, "Luck to you!"

"No use us saying nothing," remarked Wizzen as he led them away. Presently he added, "Say, young people, the old lady's great! Don't you think so?"

They thought so and took pleasure in saying they did. Wizzen led them in sight of their destination. "I'll be standing under this lamppost, casual-like," he remarked, "and you-all kin come back and tell me what luck. No, they ain't no use shaking hands; I'll see you again."

With wildly throbbing hearts, Raymund and Rhoda passed along the dingy street—for it was very dingy indeed—and stopped at the right number. They found themselves before a shop. In front of it hung three golden balls. In one window were watches, rings, and many kinds of curious trinkets. The other window was devoted to a display of second-hand clothes. Rhoda looked at the shop with a disturbed face, but seeing Wizzen faithful to his post and comporting himself with his most casual air, she said: "It might be uncle William's house. Did you ever think he kept a store?"

"I never knew any more about him than you," said Raymund, with hesitation. "We'd better go in and ask."

So they went in the door, and as they passed under the number on the transom—that number which they had so often seen in their mother's Bible—it was like venturing into a world of childhood's vague imagining. A counter faced the door, upon which objects of widely different natures were displayed, and to the right of the counter were piles of old clothes. To the left was a gate which led behind the counter, and beyond that was a door to the rear of the little shop. Behind the counter sat a woman of about 30, exceedingly tall and thin, with such an aggressive display of bone in her presentment that it was easy to imagine that she had an extra rib from Mother Eve. Her hair was coiled in a tangled twist at the back of her head, and she wore her dress low, as if to show the world how very long a lady's neck could be. She smiled at the children, thereby revealing one black tooth, which at first seemed a gap. The smile was not at all pleasant, though it meant to be so, for the lady was so used to exercising unyielding authority that she was utterly unable to relax even when smiling.

"Well, children," she said, "what can I do for you to-day?"

"Does Mr. William Hodges live here?" inquired Raymund, stepping up to the counter.

"I am keeping the shop now," said the lady, rather sternly. She still showed the black tooth, because her lips never came together on ordinary occasions. The black tooth now showed it was not a gap, but appeared to be a sort of danger-signal, meaning, "Better keep away!" The other teeth appeared to be taking the air with easy freedom on account of having this black guard always on the outlook.

"Is this Mr. William Hodges's shop?" asked Rhoda.

"If you want anything here," said the lady, abruptly, "just consider this shop mine. And if you must have names, my name is Miss Pinns."

Raymund, now believing that she was trying to put them off, put on a bold front, and said: "We have come all the way from Kansas City to see Mr. William Hodges."

Miss Pinns looked at them with a dart of amazing sharpness and considered. Then she said, "Who are you?"

"Mr. Hodges is our uncle William," said Rhoda, flushing. "Please tell him we are here."

"He is your uncle?" cried Miss Pinns, turning pale and looking more disagreeable than ever; "that is a likely story, indeed!"

"It is the truth," said Raymund, "and we can prove it. Where is he?"

Miss Pinns again relapsed into meditation, her narrow forehead wrinkling in perplexity. At last she rose from the high stool which seemed only too short for her long proportions, and said, in a begrudging voice, "I will call him."

She accordingly walked to the rear door and opened it. "Mr. Hodges," she said, "come here!" Her voice was milder than when she had addressed the children, but it still showed the muffled note of authority, as if she owned Mr. Hodges about as absolutely as she controlled the shop. A little, stooped man of anywhere from 60 to 80 came to the door, leaning upon two canes. He looked at Raymund and Rhoda through large spectacles of divided lenses. They made him duck his head lower than his bent shoulders, that he might look through the top of the lenses. "Well?" he said, briefly.

Serving.

The sweetest lives are those to duty wed,
  Whose deeds, both great and small
Are close-knit strands of unbroken thread,
  Where love ennobles all.
The world may sound no trumpets, ring no bells;
The book of life the shining record tells.

Thy love shall chant its own beautitudes
After its own life-working. A child's kiss
Set on thy sighing lips shall make thee glad,
A sick man helped by thee shall make thee strong.
Thou shalt be served thyself by every sense
Of service which thou rendereth.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Now, some more about the Ice Cream Social given for Charlie's Educational Fund. At the last report we had received $64.90. I felt quite sure there would be some after-orders for ice cream, at least enough to make it $65. I was right. This is certainly the most successful social I ever heard of. And it is a real social, not a make-believe social; for though none of us were together in the same place, were not our thoughts touching hands with each other? were not our wishes for orphan Charlie sitting side by side? and did not our prayers for his future nobility and success come together here, and go on to God in company? Let us hear more from those who attended in spirit the social where the ice cream was doing good to the helpless, and the cake was just one big angel-food of love and service. Grace Everest, Oklahoma City: "My brother says he will escort me to your ice cream social, so we will want two dishes. I was wondering the other day how many members there are in the Av. S. An easy way to keep the reports is to put down the Bible-references each day in the note-book you wish to send. Then you can mail it the day the quarter is finished. I was glad to se a letter from Beulah Shortridge. Why don't some of the older members write oftener? Harry Buckley made me feel very good by naming me as one of the 'faithful ones.' Maybe he is like my uncle—always saying something pleasant about somebody." (That's the very nicest habit I know of, that a person can fall into. I wish every Av. S. member or friend would fall in so deep he could never get out of it. I am sure I don't know how many members we have. I used to keep count till they grew so many. And yet, of all our members, very few ever keep our simple little rules for twelve weeks, although they must know that to keep them will make them stronger of mind and heart, and so, of more use to the world. Why is it? Of course it isn't because they are lazy; it is because they are so industrious about doing something else.) Mrs. Virgil D. Brown, Los Angeles, Cal.: "Am I in time? Mr. Brown and I will take two dishes of cream. We hope Charlie will grow to be a useful man. We came from Plattsburg last October, and though we like Los Angeles fine, we can't get over the habit of peeping over Old Baldy Mountain, at Plattsburg, in Clinton county, on the other side." (Just as you spoke, I was peeping over the northern edge of the Ozarks in the same direction.) "It is very warm here, which the Californians tell us is unusual. We had a fine rain here last night." (We had a fine rain here, too, last night; but why do I particularize? we've had a rain every day for the past 19 days; that's as far back as I began keeping count. The Arkansawyers say it's unusual, too. Do you know, I think that's a habit of speech that natives acquire unconsciously?) "We are enjoying the Bronze Vase very much" (the reader will kindly observe that it is not I who am now speaking) "and the Av. S. Letters. tion with him. My sister and family enjoyed him so much last summer. I hope the social will be a success in every way." Mrs. E. F. S. Kelso, Putnam, Ill: "I enclose 10 dishes of ice cream for Charlie's education. I enjoy the Av. S. page, especially the remarks by—" (Oh, thank you!) Mrs. S., Bronaugh, Mo.: "Fifty cents to be used for little Charlie." Greenfield, Tenn.: "We read your very original invitation to the ice cream supper and gladly accept, wishing Charlie many happy returns of the day." (Fifty cents in that letter.) Clinton, Ia.: "Your invitation here on time. I send to you this little dime. Sorry the ice cream is understood, for the day's so hot, it would be good. I hope you'll get a lot of money, though your plan does seem a little funny." (We got eighty-five dollars, honey!) Mrs. L. Porter, Jacobs, Ky.: "I send 25 cents for Charlie's ice cream supper. I enjoy the Av. S. Letters so much. I saw you and your father at Pertle Springs 19 or 20 years ago." (Not me surely! What, 20 years ago? Wasn't I too little to go to the springs 20 years ago? I must have been awfully young!) Oklahoma City: "I send 10 cents for Charlie's picnic, and I wish it were dollars, but I send this out of my poverty and hope to send Drusie something before long. God bless them both. What a chase poor Raymond and Rhoda are having to avoid that ubiquitous Mr. Boggs! Please do not let him find them." (If I were only there, I'd show Mr. Boggs. But you see, I couldn't put myself into the story.) Some one from Moberly, Mo., sends a dime for the ice cream supper, and another sends $5, and there is a heart of love and a prayer in faith behind each gift. Belton, Mo.: "I think this a splendid idea to have a social for Charlie's education. Good evening, Brother Ellis." (Why, howd'y, Belton; I'm pleased to see you're still on the map.) "I have come for my saucer of ice cream and will pay my dime." (Yes, I'll relieve you of it, as it's probably heavy.) "No, I don't like to do that. I think it a selfish old maid or bachelor who spends only one dime at a social and just on himself. I've brought a dollar and will treat you and Charlie. I am glad Charlie made his decision to visit you and Felix this summer. Once I visite_ the St. Louis orphan home. The first thing I asked Miss Tena was to show me Charlie. I like his appearance very much. I hope we may have a large crowd this evening." (We have received orders for eight hundred and fifty saucers.) Ala A. Russell, Greenfield, Mo.: "I could not serve ice cream for Charlie's benefit, as I have three motherless children to care for, so I took them all in a buggy and drove around to a few of the sisters and collected $1.25; and my grandchildren and I add $1. Little John, four years old, kept asking where you lived and would you have the cream ready, and baby said, 'He wants some team, too!' The other one is six, so you see I have my hands full." (May heaven bless all three and the hands that minister to them. The name of each donor is inscribed in my account book.)

One of the sweetest things about the Advance Society is the way we get acquainted with noble souls whom in the visible world we would doubtless never have met, or at least learned as they are. Who of us does not at once feel acquainted with the writer of the last letter? We see the buggy going down the road with the children in it, all bent on soliciting something for the orphan boy known to them only through our page. The baby is doubtless holding the tip end of the lines, imagining himself the driver. You will remember that when Charlie ended his visit with his sister, he went to Mrs. Skinner. I have a personal letter from her, part of which is not to be printed. Indeed she would rather none of it were, but I want you to have a little heart-glimpse of this friend of orphans. Mrs. N. C. Skinner, Dorsey, Ill.: "When Charlie came on his visit, there was no one to meet him. He got to Dorsey at nine, Sunday night. We got a telephone message saying he was at Dorsey. We were all in bed. Charlie said if we could direct him, maybe he could walk over—two and a half miles. Mr. Skinner said he would go right over for him. I telephoned the man at Dorsey I would pay him if he would keep Charlie all night, but he said he had no bedroom. Mr. Skinner was ill with the headache, so I woke up my nephew's widow, and she and I had the loveliest moonlight drive. We sang all the way over to Dorsey. I felt so sorry for Charlie that I had to kiss him, and we took him right to our hearts. He is a love-boy. He and my great-nephew, 12 years old, have a good time, and Charlie and 'Houndpup' do, too." And here is something from Charlie himself: "I am surprised to hear the social took in so much money. I thank you so very much. I hope I will soon get to go to business school, for I am anxious to get an education. I don't know how I can ever repay the friends who take such an interest in me." (By becoming a good man; that is all the reward they ask.) "This is a farm; it is such a pleasant place. From Mrs. Skinner's I will go to Mrs. Thornton Stahl. I have gone hunting several times. I helped turn the washing machine yesterday. I get all the apples and grapes I can eat. The Ridgely Sunday-school is not very large, but it is all O. K. There is a threshing machine just across the road panting like its little heart would break. I have sure had a fine vacation so far. But I did hate to part with Bessie. Give your mother and father my love." (When Charlie's vacation ends, we will print every item of his expense; for it is your money that he is spending, and you ought to know all about its use.) Kathryn Lammert, McKirk, Mo.: "A little early, but yet I've eaten my cream and forward my money immediately. My! but it was good, so pure and sweet! I could have eaten a dollar's worth. It's not because it makes my head hurt that I only took one saucer, but because I just had a dime. I inclose as many good wishes, though, as if it were $10. 'Tis not what we give, you know; 'tis what we share; for the gift without the giver is bare.' The Av. S. Letters are grand. All the family read them. 'Bronze Vase' is all right. Do you know, I was in a city once and a lady pointed out to me a gentleman sitting on a porch, and she told me how he counted everything he saw; in fact, he was just like the Mr. Merlin Agency you described in the 'Bronze Vase.' We live in the country on pretty Clover Dale Farm, and mamma says we'll invite Charlie here some time. Papa, mamma, brothers and sisters have all gone to a big revival, and I am here at home looking after things and trying to write with the meanest pen on earth." (I have one I'd like to enter against yours in a state competition.) "So don't you print this letter under any consideration, hear me?" (Too bad, but I didn't hear you until it was too late, and I had copied off your letter. But I ask all the contributors, please not to read the letter. Now, then, hear me?) Jacksonville, Ill.: "One dollar for Drusie. May her work never suffer for lack of funds, and may the Av. S. be faithful to the trust committed to its care." Drusie

Malott, South Chih-li Mission, Tai Mingfu, North China (please remember the direction; first you go south, then you go north): "Well, well! Two foreign mails within the last eight days, and you should have seen me when the mailman came! The delightful pile of packages and papers could hardly be carried in my arms. Friends came running to my room to see if Christmas hadn't made a mistake at the wrong end! We were soon examining the lovely books that some kind heart had sent. Nine books and two bundles of papers! Please always let me have the pleasure of knowing the names of the senders of these much-appreciated gifts. But I hope friends wil not use for me money needed in so many places in the Master's service. Indeed, I put it as a request. From The Christian-Evangelist I find that Elizabeth M. Rothwell, Moberly, Mo., is one who so kindly sent me a number of books. To her I extend sincerest thanks. And when I found that your own dear mother tied them up for mailing, I said, 'God bless her kind, motherly heart.' They were tied up just right for the long voyage. 'Daily Strength for Daily Needs' was especially appreciated—in fact, was an answer to a prayer of several months previous. Does anybody know where I can get a 'Birthday Edition of Daily Light'? About books: I am not hard to please. I enjoy all books worth reading. I brought very few to China because I came so suddenly, so unexpectedly; there were no duplicates in the packages sent. The Christian-Evangelist grows more interesting each week. My own letters when printed are so old that they seem new to me. Tell Mrs. Shryock that a dollar with such a prayer is worth more than $25 without a prayer. God does answer prayer. Some of the answers have been marvelous—so marked. But, young people, the Father desires you above all other gifts. You, your life, body and spirit, wherever he chooses for you to serve him. It is worth all. It is the only true living, the only real happiness. Do you doubt it? Try it and see! * * * July 26: Since beginning this letter, I have received another package of books and a package of papers. Also precious letters from Mrs. Romwebber and Ataline Stokes and Mrs. Damarell and her two daughters, the first inclosing $7 and $1 respectively, and the latter saying they were making their offering to you. Best of all, each assured me of her prayers. That is more than anything else, for I know an answer will come, and I am strengthened and encouraged." (Drusie acknowledges receipt of the monthly $5 from the Av. S. But, indeed, we may claim the $8 she mentions, since the Av. S. was no doubt the cause of their being sent. Another $5 from you goes to her from Bentonville this week. By the way, speaking of Bentonville, I am proud to say that it turned out to the social after all; it was rather late, but there was plenty of ice cream to be scraped out of the freezers; pretty hard, you know, but just as good as any. Plattsburg, too, my old home, came in great numbers. Why, dear me! I will have to devote another week to finishing up this story of the social. Mrs. Johnston, of Stewartsville, and even the ladies of Detroit, Mich.—just think of that! And while you're thinking, I'll slip away.

Over the River.

"Over the River"—the old, sweet song!
The road to the rest there is not so long;
A song and a sigh, and a brief good-bye
And we meet with the dreams 'neath a stormless sky.

"Over the River"—the song that thrills
In music down from the heavenly hills;
The pain and peril of Life's time past,
And the rest that is given of God at last!

"Over the River"—so sweet it seems
To drift away to the starlit dreams!
To fear no more the fall o' the Night
"Over the River" where "Love is Light!"

A Dreadful Dilemma.

A capital story is told of Governor Van Sant, of Minnesota, in connection with a recent visit of his to New York.

Soon after the governor had been assigned to a hotel room, a former resident of Minnesota called and found him gazing with gloomy countenance at his trunk.

After an exchange of salutations, Mr. Van Sant said: "John, I'm in a tremendous fix. I want a suit of clothes out of that trunk. Oh, yes, I've got the key all right, but my wife packed the trunk. She was to come along, but was prevented at the last moment. To my certain knowledge she put in enough to fill three trunks the way a man would pack them. If I open it, the things will boil all over the room, and I could never get half of them back. Now, what I'm wondering about is whether it would be cheaper to go out and buy a new suit of clothes or two additional trunks."

A young Japanese compositor, employed on a Japanese paper in New York, was riding down town in a City Hall train the other morning. He was engrossed in his morning paper, and paid little attention to the other passengers.

But a fresh looking young man who sat next to him, and who had been eyeing him all along, suddenly asked:

"What sort of 'nese' are you, anyway; a Chinese or a Japanese?"

The little Jap was not caught napping. Quick as a wink he replied:

"What sort of a key are you, anyway; a monkey, a donkey, or a Yankee?"

The fresh young man had no more to say, and left the train quickly when City Hall station was reached.—The Crown, Newark, N. J.

MOST WONDERFUL COMBINATION HEATING & COOKING STOVE EVER INVENTED—CAUSING GREAT EXCITEMENT WHEREVER EXHIBITED. Fuel drawn principally from atmosphere. Uses 395 barrels of air, while consuming one gallon of oil. Wood, coal and oil cost money. ONLY FREE FUEL IS AIR. Supply unlimited. No trust in control. Air belongs to rich and poor alike.

HARRISON'S VALVELESS WICKLESS, AUTOMATIC OIL-GAS AND AIR BURNER STOVE

Automatically generates gas from kerosene oil, mixing it with air. Burns like gas. Intense hot fire Combustion perfect. To operate—Turn knob—oil runs into burner—touch a match, it generates gas which passes through air mixer, drawing in about a barrel of air, to every large spoonful of oil consumed. That's all. It is self-regulating, no more attention. Same heat all day, or all night. For more or less heat, simply turn knob. There it remains until you come again. To put fire out, turn knob, raising burner, oil runs back into can, fire's out. As near perfection as anything in this world. No dirt, soot or ashes. No leaks—nothing to clog or close up. No wick—not even a valve, yet heat is under perfect control.

D. CARN, IND., writes: "It costs me only 4½ cents a day for fuel." L. NORRIS, VT., writes: "The Harrison Oil-Gas Generators are wonderful savers of fuel, at least 50% to 75% over wood and coal." E. ARNOLD, NEB., writes: "Saved $4.25 a month for fuel by using the Harrison Oil-Gas Stove. My range cost me $5.50 per month, and the Harrison only $1.25 per month." M. KING, VA., writes: "Using one Burner and Radiator, I kept a 16x18 foot room at 70 degrees, when out doors 13 to 20 degrees were registered." REV. WM. TEARN, ME., writes: "This morning 16 below zero, and my library far below freezing point. Soon after lighting the Harrison Oil-Gas Stove temperature rose to summer heat." WM. BAERING, IND., writes: "We warmed a room 13x14 feet, when it was about 10 below zero with one Radiator." Objectionable features of all other stoves wiped out.

Not like those sold in stores. Ideal for heating houses, stores, rooms, etc., with Radiating Attachment; also cooking, roasting, baking, ironing, etc.

GEO. L. SNIVELY.	Sec. and Gen. Supt
R. P. CROW,	Treas. and Bus. Manager

The picture of our Editor for one renewal and one new subscription accompanied by the $3 has proven a very popular premium, and we are sending his "lineaments" to many a home and study.

Again we advise all our readers to get to the Wabash in time to catch the train leaving St. Louis at noon, October 11. We will gladly secure you accommodations in the city and will do all in our power to make your attendance upon the convention a most pleasing memory.

A representative of this House has just gone over the route of "THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST" Special to Buffalo. He "followed the flag over the Wabash." The service is of the very safest, best and most courteous. Arrangements were made for housing the party at the very best and most economical hotels and close to the convention hall.

It is a great surprise to the writer that many of our preachers known to have large libraries order their books through secular agencies exclusively. Unconsciously, they are paying more than is necessary for the books and at the same time are failing to have part in the building up of a publishing house most creditable to our brotherhood and helpful to our preachers and other book-reading disciples.

About the most extravagant eulogium pronounced upon other Bible school literature is that "it is as good as Dowling's." We publish all of W. W. Dowling's contributions to our Bible school literature and charge no more for it than others ask for their productions. Why not get the best and rejoice in the assurance that you are doing in this particular all that can be done for the young folk.

Three hundred, five hundred, one thousand CHRISTIAN-EVANGELISTS per week will cost comparatively little during your protracted meeting but their contribution to the success of the services will be only second to that of the evangelist and pastor and the Bible. Write or wire us for terms, and your orders, and the papers will be sent promptly. Preachers and evangelists give striking testimony to the efficiency of the voiceless eloquence of these papers in urging men to wait upon the preaching and preparing them for the unfolding of the Word and helping them to go forward when the invitation is given.

Hundreds of congratulatory letters are received from well-wishers over the manifestly rapid growth of the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. These are profoundly appreciated especially when accompanied by a subscription list. In addition to the large number of ones and twos, we are pleased to report the follow clubs of new subscriptions received during the past week at the regular $1.50 rate, to-wit.: Rockwell City, Ia., 3, H. Brown, pastor; Swayzee, Ind., 6, W. A. McKown, minister; Alexandria, Ind., 47, H. A. Wingard, pastor; Elwood, Ind., 18, Robt. Sellers, minister; Independence, Mo., 3, A. J. Marshall, pastor; Marceline, Mo., 39, W. D. Bolton, minister; Mobile, Ala., 8, Claude E. Hill, pastor; Citronelle, Ala., 3; Fairhope, Ala., 4; Brookfield, Mo., 26; Bucklin, Mo., 7; Allerton, Ia., 3, R. H. Ingram, minister.

Assurances come to us from every source that the vast majority of our preachers are in perfect sympathy with the aspirations of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for our brotherhood. If these brethren will only co-operate with us persistently, aggressively and lovingly, they can introduce THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST into 100,000 homes long before the 1909 Centennial and yet not injure the business of any other of our publishing houses. Not one household in five in which we have members is taking any religious paper. Will not thousands of our preachers give practical expression of their interest in the propaganda of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST by enrolling the names of tens of thousands of this non-reading class on our subscription lists? It will be a wonderful impetus to our churches and American Christianity.

HOLDING FAST

Washington Gladden

IN the bitter waves of woe,
  Beaten and tossed about
By the sullen winds that blow
  From the desolate shores of doubt.

Where the anchors that Faith has cast
  Are dragging in the gale,
I am quietly holding fast
  To the things that can not fail.

I know that right is right,
  That it is not good to lie;
That love is better than spite
  And a neighbor than a spy.

I know that passion needs
  The leash of a sober mind;
I know that generous deeds
  Some sure reward shall find;

That the rulers must obey,
  That the givers shall increase;
That Duty lights the way
  For the beautiful feet of Peace;

In the darkest of the year,
  When the stars have all gone out,
That courage is better than fear,
  That faith is better than doubt.

And fierce though the friends may fight,
  And long though the angels hide,
I know that truth and right
  Have the universe on their side.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

Robert Hopkins writes: "I covet a little of your Centennial page in behalf of the Kentucky Centennial." It is granted. Nowhere else do we look more hopefully for "the what-ought-to-be" than to our Bible schools. What public schools are to the future America so these Lord's day schools are to the church of to-morrow. No press space is too precious, no time too valuable, no abilities too great, no sacrifice too costly, to devote to the upbuilding of these schools, securing for them merited consideration in the councils of the church, and the preparation of their membership for all the responsibilities of Christian husbandmen, soldiers and priests.

It is a prophecy of a glorious "second century" when men like J. W. McGarvey, E. L. Powell, R. H. Crossfield and Robert M. Hopkins devote themselves to the solution of the problem of the betterment of our schools and the inspiration of the workers.

A prosperous Illinois congregation is seeking a pastor. Notwithstanding THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is largely circulated among its membership, the official board adopted a resolution barring any minister from their consideration who has passed his fortieth year. One fallacy in such action may be better illustrated than argued. That resolution would bar Jas. H. Gilliland of Bloomington and perhaps R. F. Thrapp of Jacksonville, two of the ablest and most successful preachers the state has produced. No one knowing these two men believes they have accomplished nearly so much during the past score of years as they will during the next twenty of their ministry.

We so deeply regret this action that we would not give it this publicity were not the practice of relegating our middle-aged preachers to inactivity rapidly dying out, and we wish to help in the obsequies. These officers would doubtless explain their action by saying "We favor long pastorates and wish a young man to come who will continue with us for the next quarter century." But observation shows that pastorates of our younger preachers are much briefer than those held by men in the fifties and sixties. After this "young preacher" is gone, this church will possibly call some man of fifty or sixty years of age, now rejected on account of his years, to a prosperous pastorate of ten or fifteen years. We do not disparage the calling of young men, but protest against a cast-iron resolution barring preachers who have passed a stipulated age milestone. Nothing is doing more to drive preachers into business, to induce them to go where the immediate salary is largest, to refrain from devoting themselves exclusively to the ministry of the Word, to discourage the most thorough ministerial preparation for life-time service beside the altar. Let us have other criteria of usefulness. Sanguineness, hopefulness, enthusiasm, buoyancy of spirit, genius for soul-saving, adaptation, the habit of success, are each far more important factors than mere matter of years in determining one's fitness for the pastorate. Our second century will be characterized by many old men eloquent in our pulpits whose wisdom, venerableness and holiness will impart additional lustre to the glory of the church. In the meantime let us use every soldier of the cross both young and old in extending to the utmost limits the boundaries of the kingdom and making it delectible as possible within those bounds before Pittsburg and 1909.

The Kentucky Centennial.

BY ROBERT M. HOPKINS.

"A Bible school chair in the Bible College" is the slogan by which Kentucky Bible schools are being rallied to the Centennial cause. It is proposed to raise $25,000 from the Bible schools and their friends to endow this new department in the College of the Bible. The college in turn will offer a course of study in Bible school methods and principles which will be obligatory upon all students, and also form a special two-year department where Bible school teachers and workers may be trained for their duties, giving a diploma for the satisfactory completion of this department. Additional work will be provided as may be demanded. "Full of good promises for both the college and the Bible schools," says Brother McGarvey. "It would be a great matter if Kentucky should be able to point to this one thing as having been actually done as a lasting monument in commemoration of our centenary as a religious body," is Bro. E. L. Powell's comment.

The Bible College Centennial session of the state convention in Louisville, September 27, bids fair to be the greatest service in this great convention. The speakers will be Marion Lawrance, J. W. McGarvey, E. Y. Mullins, E. L. Powell and R. H. Crossfield.

Our Centennial Helpers.

Enclosed find $1.50 for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Yours in sympathy with federation. Have been praying for it for sixty years.—H. B. Osborn.

Enclosed is $1.50 for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I greatly enjoy reading it more especially since I can seldom get to church on account of inability to walk.—Mrs. L. A. Campbell.

Send me missing numbers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST with bill. I have been a constant reader for thirty-two years and I find I am daily hankering for the good things I know I have missed.—Mrs. M. G. Heard.

By the kindness of Mr. Carpenter, of the Church of the Disciples, a graduate of last year from Yale Divinity School, I have had the privilege of reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST during the past year. I wish to express my satisfaction with the general tone of the paper. The discussion of important questions has seemed to me eminently intelligent and fair. My knowledge of those things for which the Church of the Disciples stands has been enlarged and my appreciation of the significance of the movement with which it is identified has been intensified.—Louis O. Brocton, Yale University.

I believe THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is the ablest and most interesting paper published by our brethren, and should be in every Christian home. I believe its editorials on federation of Christians unanswerable and so convincing the whole world should read. I endorse its views of the Holy Spirit and other vital topics.—William Frazier.

I enclose $1.50 for my CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and wish to say that the sweet Christian spirit you manifest, and the broad, intelligent view you take of things, makes your paper not only helpful, but perfectly charming to me. I can not do without it. May our dear Lord spare you many years to represent our people in your great work!—Jennie Woodruff, Little Rock, Ark.

Please send me the subscription of ———. She was formerly a Presbyterian. I sent her THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and now she expects to become a Disciple, or a Christian only.—W. E. Beckler.

Aside from the preaching of the Word, there is no greater recruiting agency for the Disciples of Christ than THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

When your paper is regularly read by one in our community it does the work of an assistant pastor, and down in this district where the anti is yet untamed I need the help of your Christian literature. Like THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST it causes them to think of the things that are lovely and enters the home as material for the building of fitly framed Christian characters.—Andrew Jay Jones, minister.

I have been a constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST since it was published at Quincy, Ill. I thought it good at first, but it has continued to improve ever since. I do not think it can get much better as it is one of the best religious papers published. If a copy fails to come I can not content myself until I get one and have it read to me. I hope you will continue to publish as good a paper in the future as in the past.—Mrs. J. H. Suddeth, La Grange, Mo.

Mrs. John Hazlewood, Payson, Ill., writes of a beautiful illustration of the practical application of church federation to the good of that community. The Congregationalists, Baptists and Church of Christ united in a revival meeting. Our pastor was asked to invite one of his brethren to hold the meeting. Not being able to secure the one he wished, a Congregational minister from Kansas City was called. Our minister and young men labored earnestly to lead the people into the better way with the result that the larger number of converts became members of the Christian Church, and a feeling of brotherly love kindled that greatly benefited all the congregations. She writes that the time was when such a course could not have been employed because our minister would have refused to participate in the meeting. Behold, how beautiful and helpful it is for the brethren to dwell together in love!

I have been more deeply interested in the issue on federation which has occupied so much space in our papers of late than in any other feature of religious discussion for a long time. I have had no uneasiness as to the outcome, as it is impossible for any earthly opposition to seriously interfere with the advancement and final consummation of the aims of the current Reformation. Neither life nor death, loyalty nor disloyalty nor any editor or preacher can stay the progress the Church of Christ is making throughout the world. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST may have made some mistakes—it would be more than mortal if it had not, under the immense strain it has gone through—but its attitude on this important issue will open the way to larger growth of real Christian union than any paper could possibly have done by an uncompromising and sometimes unintelligible opposition to a discussion of a vital, religious question. No harm can come to the church by federation or anything else we can do without sacrifice of conception.—Joseph Lowe, Evangelist.

Current Events

Mr. Bryan on Public Ownership.

A good deal of superfluous excitement has been generated in the minds of some Democratic statesmen and in the editorial columns of some Democratic journals by Mr. Bryan's pronouncement in favor of federal and state ownership of railroads. As we understand it, he was not formulating a plan for immediate action, but was dealing with the topic in a wholly academic and theoretical manner. He was not defining the policy which he would pursue if elected to the presidency, but was defining himself. He was saying to his fellow-Democrats, and to his fellow-countrymen at large: "I am the sort of man who believes in government ownership of railroads. If you elect me to the presidency, it must be with the understanding that I am that sort of a man. But whether or not I would try to put such a policy into effect at a given time, would depend upon circumstances." Such a declaration, entirely creditable to the frankness of the man who made it, need not cause alarm to the most sensitive and timid capitalist. We may be tolerably certain, whatever may be Mr. Bryan's abstract theories about public ownership, he will not be hasty about trying to put them into operation and that he would not be able to do so even if he tried. If public ownership is the worst, no one is in the slightest degree justified in considering the Bryan boom to be a Bryan menace.

The New York Muddle.

Mr. Hearst says positively that he will not be a candidate for the presidency or the vice-presidency in 1908. We believe his prediction is quite correct. He is, however, a very lively and troublesome candidate for the governorship of New York this year. The wide-open spirit of the New York Republicans and the auto-nominations of Hearst and Jerome, either of whom will run independently if the Democrats nominate the other, makes the political situation in the empire state about as complicated and uncertain as it could well be. No prognostication at present can safely go beyond the point of saying that probably somebody will be elected governor, but as to his person or party, only time can tell.

Who Ought To Pay?

Who ought to pay for the enforcement of the law? The public, whose representatives enacted the law, or the much smaller group of those who really want it enforced? At Fort Harrison, in Marion county, Ind., after much urgency on the part of the temperance people and the reform forces generally, the "blind tigers" and illegal liquor shops in the vicinity of the barracks were cleaned out. This was simply an enforcement of the law. But when the sheriff presents to the county commissioners the bill for the expense of doing the job, they refuse to pay it and tell him to try to collect from the temperance societies who were so anxious to have the joints closed. Seldom does a country board put itself in a more undignified and undefensible position than that. It is a virtual repudiation of the law after it has been enforced, and an assertion that the cleaning out of the dens was merely an accommodation to a group of temperance enthusiasts, rather than an enforcement of public law for the public welfare.

The National Irrigation Congress met last week in Boise, Idaho. The congress is composed of representatives appointed by the governors, mayors and chambers of commerce throughout the arid and semi-arid states. At Boise it had opportunity to see one of the greatest irrigation works now under construction by the government's reclamation service.

The Last Report From San Francisco.

The San Francisco death list, according to the final report, totals 452, including five who were shot and two who were poisoned by eating unwholesome emergency rations. The number of murders avoided by closing the saloons for some months after the fire and the number of suicides prevented by the peculiar psychological influence of the disaster, would almost equal the number of fatalities. Of those killed by the earthquake and fire, only eighteen were Chinese. Almost all the remainder were whites.

Mr. Bryan has issued a reply to the "Letters of a Chinese Official." The letters were a glorification of oriental and a criticism of occidental civilization. It is generally believed that no Chinaman, official or otherwise, had anything to do with the writing of them. The writer was assured by an eminent Chinese diplomat a year or two ago that the letters were actually written by a Chinese official who had long been a resident of England, but that he had been assisted in matters of style by a well known English literary woman.

The Fugitive Banker.

The runaway banker, Stensland, whose misdeeds wrecked the Chicago bank, of which he was president, has been found in Tangier, Morocco. He does not deny his guilt but insists that he never meant to do wrong. He never deliberately planned to rob his bank. He did not wish any person to lose his savings on his account. But when he was needing money once, about ten years ago, he borrowed money from the bank and put his own notes in their place. Then, because it would look bad to have the bank holding so much of his paper, he forged notes and cashed them—always fully intending to pay back the money. Finally he found that he could not pay it back, so he ran away. He proves his good intentions by saying that when he went away he might have taken a very large amount of the bank's money with him, but did not. It would be hard to preach the appropriate sermon from this text without falling into platitude. It is only the old truth that good intentions pave the way to—Tangier or bankruptcy or dishonor, or some other sort of calamity unless they are backed up by good sense, good judgment and good morals; and that the beginning of dishonesty is not in some overt act of obvious and palpable villainy, but in the hair's breadth transgression of the line between mine and his, in the taking of a risk with another's property. The solid virtue of honesty needs to be hedged about by the grace of honor.

The Labor Famine.

Mr. James J. Hill points out in a recent speech, that the great need of the country is for more workers. He means especially what we call unskilled labor and the cheaper grades of workmen. The railroads depend almost entirely upon foreigners and can not get enough of them, and the farmers are at their wit's end to get any sort of laborers. This demand for labor in excess of the supply is a result of prosperity. The condition insures every able-bodied man against starvation, for he can earn a dollar or a dollar and a half a day by manual labor. But it does not add much to the prosperity and comfort of the salaried man who finds that the expense of living increases while his salary stands still.

The History of Language.

The usual and expected protest against spelling reform is that it ignores the history and development of language. The London papers have come nobly to the rescue of the king's English against the Roosevelt and Carnegie reform, and accuse these eminent gentlemen and all others who write "tho" for "though" and spell honor with only five letters, of "sacrificing the history and meaning of the language." How Shakespeare's conservative contemporaries must have bewailed the sacrifice of the history and meaning of the language because the great Elizabethans, departing from Chaucer's usage wrote "very" for "verry," "had" for "hadde," and "said" for "sayde." Even as late as Spencer, a knight could be described as "Ycladd in mightie armies and silver shields." Even since the death of Shakespeare the language has traveled far and even those who stand so stoutly for the "history and meaning of the language" would not ask us to return to the spelling of his epitaph:

> "Good frend, for Jesus sake forbeare
> To digg the dust encloased heare;
> Blese be ye man yt spares thes stones,
> And curst be he yt moves my bones."

No, the argument from history is all on the side of reform. It has required a long process of development to make the English language and the process is not yet completed. The next step is no more sacrilegious than the last one was. The vast amount of literature which has been printed in English as at present spelled and the prevalence of dictionaries have given to the present spelling a degree of stability never attained by any previous form of the language, but have not made it necessarily the final or perfect stage.

Where Jesus Placed the Emphasis.—IV.

His Remedy for Sin.

As previously intimated, Jesus was vastly more concerned about the cure for sin, than about how it entered into the world. He saw that it was the one destructive influence that was marring the wellbeing and happiness of humanity, and he sought to eradicate it from the human heart, where he located it. According to Jesus sin resides in the intention, in the moral purposes of men. In opposition to this teaching of Jesus preachers have been known to illustrate the workings of the moral law by those of physical law. Who of us has not heard it stated in this manner: If a man walking in the darkness, or by mistake, steps over a precipice, the fact that he does it ignorantly and without intention does not save him from being killed by the fall. So, it is argued, if a man mistakes the meaning of a moral law, or a command of God without intending to disobey God, his good intention avails nothing. This is to ignore the distinction between moral and physical law, and to wholly misunderstand the nature of salvation by grace. Sin, with Jesus, as we have seen, means the corruption of the heart; it is wrong desires, wrong purposes, and evil thoughts. Hence his remedy for sin was the purification of the heart.

Jesus' method of bringing about this purification of the heart is unique among religions. With a sublime confidence in the good, and the godly element in humanity, he believed that men were to be won from sin by showing them its opposite—incarnate goodness and purity. The horribleness of a sinful life was to be revealed to men by the exhibition of a sinless life. What the world needed was a practical embodiment of the divine ideal of purity, of righteousness and of truth, and this was furnished to men in the life and teaching of Jesus of Nazareth. But this sinless and holy personality must win the hearts of men by loving them, and the higher the manifestation of love the more effective it is in winning men from sin to holiness. Does God love men in spite of their sins, and is he willing to accept them if they come to him confessing their sins? It was not easy for men to believe that a holy and just God could love and save sinners. Jesus came to demonstrate that fact, and by his life, his teaching, his deeds of mercy among men, and especially by his death for the sins of the world, he manifested the love of God for lost men.

There is no more astonishing fact in all the gospels than the confidence which Jesus expressed in humanity when he said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." It is as if he had said, Men may misunderstand my motives and my mission in the world; but when they see the supreme manifestation of my love for them in my death on their behalf, they will all be drawn to me. The saddest thing about the impenitent sinner, who has learned of Christ's death and remains impenitent, is the fact that he has disappointed Christ, and has failed to be worthy of the confidence which he reposed in him.

Christ's remedy for sin, then, was to point out to men its awful consequences, to show them the beauty of holiness as exhibited in his own life, and to convince them of his own and his Father's love for men, by his death on the cross. This, he believed, would bring men to repentance, which he did not fail to enjoin upon all as essential to forgiveness and to life everlasting. Jesus laid profound emphasis upon repentance. So important was it that even one sinner repenting caused joy among the angels of heaven. Repentance with Jesus was the inward change of mind and heart, resulting in turning away from sin in its outward manifestations. His life, his teaching, his death, all looked to this end—bringing men to repentance and therefore to God. God can forgive a penitent, but not an impenitent sinner. Hence Christ's death, in his own language, was "for the remission of sins." This is the supreme place which the cross of Christ holds in the Christian system, as a revelation of the terrible consequences of sin, and of the infinite love of God, and his willingness to save the sinner. Trust in Jesus Christ who revealed him, otherwise called faith or believing, would also result from this Gospel of Christ, and in the effort to conform the life to his teaching. Jesus taught that sin was an obstacle to faith, and he told the Jews to repent that they might believe the Gospel. By putting away such gross sins as they were already conscious of, they would be able to believe on Christ, which faith would lead them to a still further repentance.

But let it be definitely understood that Jesus Christ offered himself to men as the only remedy for sin. Not his church, nor his moral teaching, no, not even faith, repentance, or baptism, or any "plan" or "scheme" of salvation is the divine remedy for sin. These are only helps to bring men to the true remedy which is Jesus Christ himself. He is the light of the world, and he is the life of the world. He came that men might have life and that more abundantly. "Ye will not come to me," said Jesus to the Jews, "that ye may have life." (John 5:40.) "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." (Matt. 11:28.) Faith, repentance and baptism are valuable just as they aid in bringing the sinner to Christ himself for healing and for forgiveness. That is their meaning and purpose. They have no efficacy in themselves. To claim deliverance from sin on compliance with any outward conditions when there is no experience of Christ's redeeming power in the heart and life is to be self-deceived. "He that hath the Son hath life."

The chief emphasis to-day, as it seems to us, should be laid upon these facts concerning the nature of sin, and Christ as the remedy, with a view of bringing men to repentance and thus to forgiveness.

A Scientist's Creed.

None of us objects to his own creed. Even he who speaks most loudly about "the old Jerusalem gospel" has a creed. Hence we need not regard it as a strange thing that a scientist should have a creed. Much depends upon what a creed is as to whether we object to it or not. When by means of a long set of theological formulas we seek to bind men to one system of belief we may expect trouble. Sir Oliver Lodge, one of the greatest physicists, believes this, and yet he sees the value, too, in having something reasonably definite for the average man to grasp and feel that his own belief is shared by thousands of other humans.

Professor Lodge has written an article for the "Hibbert Journal" in which he suggests a method for inculcating the "First Principles of Faith," in a reasonable and scientific way into the minds of children and young folks at school. "A creed," he says, "or catechism should not be regarded as something superhuman, infallible, and immutable; it should be considered to be what it really is—a careful statement of what, in the best light of the time, can be regarded as true and important about matters partially beyond the range of scientific knowledge."

Prof. Lodge's belief is not what would be termed orthodox. He submits a "scientific catchism," drawn up for the purpose of avoiding matters of sectarian controversy, and based upon the current thought of natural and psychological science. But the following creed or expression of faith is what this scientist proposes:

"I believe in one Infinite and Eternal Being, a guiding and loving Father, in whom all things consist. I believe that the Divine Nature is specially revealed to man through Jesus Christ, our Lord, who lived and taught and suffered in Palestine 1900 years ago, and has since been worshiped by the Christian Church as the Immortal Son of God, the Savior of the world.

"I believe that man is privileged to understand and assist the Divine purpose on this earth, that prayer is a means of communion between man and God, and that the Holy Spirit is ever ready to help us along the Way towards Goodness and Truth, so that by unselfish service we may gradually enter into the Life Eternal, the Communion of Saints, and the Peace of God."

The niceties of this creed we will not now discuss but it is a beacon light pointing to a harbor where many a mind unsettled by the wisdom of this world may yet find a way to the feet of Him who said "If I do not the works of my father, believe me not."

Notes and Comments.

Can a man be a Prohibitionist and work with the Anti-Saloon League at the same time? This question was raised recently in a conversation between one of our evangelists and an Episcopal canon, who said that prohibition is right but is too ideal, therefore he thought the Anti-Saloon League is better. The evangelist told him he could see no reason why he could not be a Prohibitionist and an Anti-Saloon man at the same time, holding on to his ideal as the right one, and working with the Anti-Saloon League as one of the ways of realizing that ideal. The Episcopal brother acknowledged that he could. Then the evangelist made the application that he could hold his ideal of a perfect, visible organic Christian union, while co-operating with the brethren of other churches through church federation, for the realization of that ideal. The canon acknowledged himself handsomely trapped by this view of things, and good naturedly surrendered to the argument.

Idealism is a good thing. No great work is accomplished without a high ideal. But if we make our ideals a substitute for practical measures leading thereto, instead of an inspiration and guide in the use of practical measures, then we become idle and inefficient dreamers instead of successful doers of things. It is this mistake that has brought idealism into disrepute. We can not immediately have the ideal state, the ideal church, the ideal civilization, the ideal society, or the ideal unity of religious forces; shall we, therefore, have no government, no church, no civilization, no society, or no form or degree of Christian unity? That would be folly. Let us hold to our ideals and be content to take all the intermediate steps leading to their realization.

A brother who has had opportunity recently of meeting a large number of ministers representing different religious bodies writes: "I am surprised to find that nearly all these ministers agree with our plea 'in the main.'" This has always been the strength of our position—that in its chief points, at least, it challenges the approval of all. How could it be otherwise? Christian men cannot well express themselves against loyalty to the word of God, the exaltation of Christ above all human authority, the unity of all Christians in him, brotherliness and co-operation, instead of sectarianism and strife, and the effort to restore the New Testament ideal church in its creed, its ordinances, and its life. To stand for these principles and to seek to exemplify them both in our teaching and conduct is the highest vocation one can have in this life.

Ambassador Whitelaw Reid has just given utterance to sentiments that are vital. In a remarkable address before one of the British universities he showed how much more widespread were the higher institutions of learning in our own country than in any other. But what we are most interested in is his declaration that from the feeble beginnings at Jamestown and Plymouth to the present, the two essentials in every settlement and in every isolated pioneer outpost in the wilderness were a church and a school-house. These two, working on the race history and the race instinct, have molded the people. Here is a strong endorsement of church extension. It is worth while taking note, too, of the fact that so keen an observer as Mr. Reid believes that the present tendency in the American educational system is to shift the emphasis from the purely practical and scientific to the intellectual and spiritual.

Current Religious Thought.

The passion for Christion union is burning hopefully in the hearts of those who truly love the Lord regardless of "faiths and orders." Many are approaching this through the medium of federation. At the recent conference at Carrollton of the Missouri Southern Methodists the following among other proceedings were held. (Culled from the "St. Louis Christian Advocate.")

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON FEDERATION.

We, your committee on federation beg leave to submit the following report:

We met in joint session with commission from the Methodist Episcopal Church, in Cameron, August 27, 1906, and transacted the following business:

It was recommended that the Methodist Episcopal church discontinue its organization in Shelbina, and also at Wesley Church in the Edina circuit, and that the membership of these churches be requested to unite with the Methodist Episcopal Church South; and also that the church in Queen City and Bethel on the Edina circuit, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and the membership of the same be requested to unite with the Methodist Episcopal church. In each case the presiding bishop ratified the work of the commission.

We are gratified to know that the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church in their annual meeting commended Federation to their conferences and adopted what is known as the "Missouri Plan" which was inaugurated by the commission of the Missouri conferences.

We note also with pleasure that the presiding elders and pastors of our conferences have in the main been ready to render your committee any assistance needed in their most delicate work.

We have faith in the wisdom and piety of the two greatest Methodist churches and believe that the day is not far distant when many weak struggling congregations, maintained by missionary boards in the Missouri conferences will be consolidated and that there will be a great saving of men and money to the Kingdom of our common Lord.

A. C. Browning, R. H. Cooper, C. Grimes, B. J. Casteel and S. P. Emmons, Committee.

Doubtless in many communities where Christian and Baptist congregations are struggling for bare existence, if proper overtures were made, the latter could be induced to come with us and be one in Christ and stronger. The experiment is worth trying.

Robert J. Burdette, whose chief reputation formerly was that of a humorous writer, but who has been for some years the pastor of a Baptist church in Los Angeles, has been objecting to the length of the form of service for the presentation of children. We think that there are some Methodist ministers whose experiences have been such when they have baptized babies, as to sympathize with Mr. Burdette when he says: "There may be some fathers who could stand and hold a baby through that length of service, and there may be some babies who would be sweet as cherubs from 'Dearly beloved' to 'Amen,' but as a rule I think the 'service' should not be longer than the baby." We are decidedly of the opinion that there ought to be an abridged form of the present baptismal service.

Here is the old confusion that causes controversy. If the "Western Christian Advocate" would be content with a dedication or "presentation of children" it might be worth while to consider the length of such a service. But when it confounds things that are different we are of the opinion that there ought not only to be "an abridged form of the present baptismal service," but that this should be dispensed with entirely. Then there would be no need for the fathers to get nervous or the babies to cry. And the child could, when more mature, with some understanding of the significance of its acts, attest its allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ, through the act of immersion, so full of meaning, and accepted as valid baptism by all religious bodies.

We commend the following—an editorial in the "Congregationalist"—to every reader of "our own" papers:

How fine a revelation of character is often made by the light, unguarded word, the hasty penciled scrap of writing, the unplanned action! These were the last written words of one who was suddenly called higher—"this dear church!" One who loved him found them and laid them reverently away among her treasures. They seemed but the natural, sweet outbreathing of his daily life. His feet, like his Master's, had often been "tired with going afoot," his hands had scorned no roughest lowliest duty, his tongue and pen had been simply and unreservedly for the church's service. Is the church of Christ so near to all our hearts as that—so evidently dear? Our lives must say many things before people will believe much what our lips are saying. Can we stand up in church without blushing and sing the hymn that says, "For her our tears shall fall, for her our prayers shall rise"? Or are we often careful already that no sun shall light on us nor any heat that we can possibly avoid by slipping out of her services and errands? The day comes fast when all will read us as an open book. Even now to one and another come swift, unforeseen revealings. The rose's perfume steals out unaware; so does the sweetness of a consistent Christian life.

"'The Central Christian Advocate,' calculating the minimum on which a country pastor can live, supporting wife and two children, figures out the yearly total at $702. And the minimum is kept from going higher still only by such meager calculations as $90 for all the clothes that the family requires, $25 for household furnishings, and the like. And there isn't a cent set aside for rent. The calculation doesn't even allow the minister to give away a tithe; the portion for benevolence is only $50. In thousands of churches, if the responsible officers would only sit down together and count up what it costs them to keep their own families going, they would quickly realize that their pastors have not enough to live on. Instead, however, of this businesslike way of estimating the pastor's needs, the average board of trustees begins at the other end of the problem and proceeds to ascertain what the various members of the church feel like giving. And the preacher puts up with what they happen to get."—The Interior.

PENTWATER MUSINGS.

Summer has fled. The days are perceptibly shorter. Last night the sun went down over the lake several degrees south of where he made his exit when we first came to the Park. There is a September haze over the lake and over the land, a September nip in the air, and a suggestion of autumn in the home-going of our resorters and in the quietness which reigns along the lake shore and in the still woods. The fishermen, in anticipation of equinoctial gales, are lifting their nets which have brought them rich harvests of fish during the summer months. Across the channel, however, in the little village, the signs of life and activity are abundant. It is the height of the peach season, and the canning factories are running day and night, and vessels are coming and going, ladened with the ripened fruit which they bear away to market. No more beautiful days have come during the whole summer than these early September days have been. In these quiet days, when nearly all the resorters have gone, one has opportunity to look at the summer in retrospect. Has it been used to the best advantage? Have we availed ourselves of all the opportunities which it has brought to us in the new scenes and associations which we have enjoyed? Have we opened our minds and hearts to the wider vision of truth which God is continually seeking to impart to us? Have we carried with us through the vacation season the sense of God's presence, and cultivated a closer fellowship with him? None of us, we suppose, feels that he has quite come up to what he had hoped in these respects, but many, no doubt, will return or have returned, to their homes and to their accustomed labors, feeling richer in spirit and in closer sympathy with their fellowmen for the hours of quiet meditation which they have been permitted to enjoy amid the scenes of nature in its varied manifestations.

While nearly all the regular resorters have closed their cottages on the beach and returned to their homes, we have just now an interesting group of visitors made up of a number of young men from the Campbell Institute and some of their wives and children. The club house had just closed for the season, but they have secured the privilege of rooming there, and will take their meals across the channel in the village. The arrivals of this group at present are E. S. Ames and family, Errett Gates and Mrs. George A. Campbell and their little son, of Chicago, C. C. Morrison, of Springfield, Ill. Others will come later. They are having the club house down on the beach all by themselves and if they do not have a good time, they will have only themselves to blame. Some of them, at least, will remain a week or two, and we have already pressed Brother Gates into service for a sermon next Sunday. We have notified these young brethren of the University of Chicago that no seeds of heresy are to be sown along this shore! They acknowedge that this resort is within the jurisdiction of our diocese, and have promised to "be good"—that is, as far as it is possible for men to be—coming out of the atmosphere of that institution! It has been one of the happiest circumstances of our editorial career to keep in close touch and sympathy with the young men who have entered our ministry, having availed themselves of the best opportunities of the times in preparing themselves for their high calling. We have not been able always, of course, to endorse all their theories and opinions, many of which, no doubt, they themselves will not be able to endorse in later years. But we thoroughly believe in their essential soundness in the faith, the sincerity of their motives, their high and noble ideals, the purity of their lives, and their future usefulness to our cause. The latch-string at "Garrison Park" hangs out for all lovers and seekers after truth and a higher life.

Among the departures of our friends during the past week were W. F. Richardson and wife of Kansas City, of whom we have spoken, and C. M. Fillmore of Carthage, Ohio, a suburb of Cincinnati. These friends were greatly enjoyed while here and greatly missed now that they have gone. The Fillmore Bros., worthy sons of a noble sire, we have loved these many years. They have always stood for the highest and best aspirations of our own movement, and for temperance and social reform. Their music publishing house, after having passed through the usual experiences of such enterprises, has reached a basis of what seems to be a growing and enduring prosperity at which we rejoice. At our last Sunday's service Brother Fillmore sang for us his far-famed solo, sung round the world, the music and words of which he is the author, "Tell mother I'll be there," which was greatly enjoyed by the audience. He came in a very weakened, nervous condition, and made great improvement during his two weeks' stay, and should, in our judgment, have remained longer, but he felt that the work in his congregation demanded his return. The problem of harmonizing the interest of a pastor's health with the demands of his work in the church, is a very perplexing one, and deserves the sympathetic co-operation of the church in its solution. Many a conscientious man is the victim of his own sense of duty to the cause and people he loves.

An anxious brother writes to know what action, if any, will be taken at Buffalo concerning the proposed Basis of Federation which has been submitted to the various religious bodies by the Inter-Church Conference in New York. Nobody is authorized to answer that question. It is for the Convention itself to determine whether it will take any action at that time and, if so, what. In a convention of free people which acknowledges no "boss" it remains for the body itself to determine its course on all the great questions which arise. One thing is reasonably certain, and that is that Christian love and Christian courtesy will prevail and will decide, in due time, the proper course to pursue in reference to the great and important matter which has been submitted to us. Of course, we cannot afford to ignore a matter of such commanding importance, and relating so directly to one of the chief objects and aims of our movement. No one acquainted with public sentiment among us, perhaps, will question the possibility of passing a safe and conservative resolution, expressing our sympathy with the movement for closer co-operation, but whether it were wiser to do so by a majority vote, while there is a considerable dissenting minority, resulting wholly from a misunderstanding of the matter, or whether it would be better to postpone action until there is time for the removal of such misunderstanding, is a question for the brethren to decide. We are sure, now that there has been time for sober reflection, that nothing will be done "through strife or vainglory," or in any factious spirit. We are none of us going to Buffalo in any mood for such action as that, but looking to God for his counsel and the guidance of His Spirit, we shall be led in the way of unity and of brotherliness.

To the victims of hay-fever those lines of James Whitcomb Riley,

> "When the frost is on the pumpkin
> And the fodder's in the shock," have a peculiar charm. Frost is the only effective remedy, so far as we have learned, for the annoying malady. There are many alleged preventives of sea-sickness, but lying under the shade of a tree is about the only effective one we know of. So there are many preventives and cures of hay-fever advertised, but as yet the average victim looks forward to the season of the year celebrated by Whitcomb's lines as the only sure cure. Strange the doctors of the world don't appoint a commission to chase down the particular bacillus that is at the bottom of all this trouble, and capture it and provide a destroyer for it, and thus become the benefactors of that part of the human race that spends at least one month of the year in a kind of misery known only to the unfortunate victims of hay-fever. Autumn has many other attractions when she clothes the forests in robes of more than regal splendor and spreads her thin veil of haze over all the landscape, but its chief attraction to the hay-fever sufferer is that its biting frosts destroy the pollen of those flowers and weeds which are at the bottom of his suffering. This fact is only referred to here as an apology for not fulfilling some conditional promises to deliver addresses at some conventions and other meetings during the month of September.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

Dead London is interesting, but one finds vastly more in living London. The bank is a good place to study it, and the Exchange hard by. The bank is the hub of things. When "the old lady of Threadneedle street" speaks the world generally listens. It is a large one-story structure covering four acres, without any windows. It is the government agent in dealing with its debt of $3,250,000,000, though a private corporation. It is the busiest spot in London, both above and below ground. Seven of the most important thoroughfares converge here, omnibuses alone averaging 700 an hour passing it. Ground at this point is worth $16,250,000 an acre, or $150 a square inch. People pour along the streets by the million and there is a subway under the street through which scores of thousands pass to avoid the rush of traffic. This institution issues 50,000 bank notes daily, from $25 to $5,000, and one is shown for $5,000,000. These are immediately canceled when paid in, so the life of a note may be only a day. Weighing machines they use which weigh thirty-three gold sovereigns a minute, which throw those of full weight into one compartment and light ones into another. I bought here a hundred farthings and they were as careful of them as of the gold to give the exact weight. George Peabody's statue stands at the bank, as well as that of Wellington. Peabody, the American merchant, who gave half a million for better houses for the working classes, which accommodate 20,000 people at an average weekly rent of $1.30. The queen offered him a baronetcy, but he declined it and asked her picture instead.

Not far from the bank one finds the tower of London, and I was fortunate enough to strike upon a day when a hundred thousand north country people were in the metropolis to see a foot-ball match, and they surged through the tower—40,000 of them—and I could see them and hear their peculiar dialect. The tower covers eighteen acres in the heart of London, and has been fortress, palace and prison. As Macaulay said "there is no sadder place on earth than this." Its moat and its walls and its history are interesting. Its "Beef-eaters," or guards, whose uniform has not been changed since Henry VII, after the battle of Bosworth; its armory with figures of men on foot and horseback, clad in steel; its display of the crown jewels, blazing sceptres, swords, orbs and crowns, orders and insignia, the king's crown with its 3,000 diamonds, its pearls and other precious stones on top, enclosed in an iron cage; all challenge attention, but its instruments of torture, its block and axe, and its spot where Sir Thomas More, Anne Boleyn, Lady Jane Grey, Guilford Dudley, Somerset, Strafford and Laud, Catherine Howard, the Earl of Essex and many others had their heads chopped off, thrill us with horror. And it is only a little over 150 years since the last person beheaded in England, Lord Lovat, lost his head here, 1747!

Another good place to see London life is on the bridges. Just beyond this place I crossed the tower bridge. Ten thousand vehicles were coming and going. It cost over seven millions in our money, and has a footway 142 feet above, and leaves, which are raised to allow the passage of large vessels. A bell is rung, the leaves go up, and in three minutes the tide of humanity surges on. I crossed and saw St. Savior's Church, seven hundred years old, the Cathedral of South London, where Edmund Shakespeare, brother of the poet, is buried, and Massinger and Fletcher, and Gower, Chaucer's friend, and the Protestant martyrs under Queen Mary were tried, and John Harvard, the founder of Harvard University, was baptized in 1607, to whom a beautiful American window was unveiled by Mr. Choate. Then I took my way back across London bridge. This famous structure, by Rennie, built in 1831, is of granite with five arches, having a length of 928 feet; 30,000 vehicles and 120,000 pedestrians cross it daily. It looks down on the busy pool. The Celtic Llyn, "a pool," and dun, "a hill," is the origin of the name London, and "the pool" is the busiest spot on the Thames. At the other end of the bridge is Billingsgate, the great fish market, and one may find near by Whitechapel and the great docks, the Peoples' Palace and Toynbee Hall, and Dr. Barnardo's Homes. Still another place to see living London is in the zoo. There are elephants, rhinoceroses, hippopotami, giraffes, bears, lions and monkeys in great numbers, and human animals by the thousand. We were three of American species, and there were 43,000 English the same day, as the turnstiles said. Another place to see people is in the churches. I sat on the pedestal of Lord Mansfield's monument at Westminster and listened to Canon Henson, and again at Shakespeare's in the poet's corner, and heard charming music, and the people were there. I went to the city temple to a Thursday service and heard R. J. Campbell. He had an audience of 1,200. Dr. Joseph Parker kept up this service over thirty years. A memorial window commemorates the one thousandth meeting. "When mammon is at white heat," he said, "midweek noon hour" and here it is. Mr. Campbell has kept it going four years. One of his men told me the congregations were from 1,200 to 1,800. The church is down town and has only about 600 members. Fourteen meetings were announced for the week. I spoke to Mr. Campbell, having met him in America, and asked him about religious conditions in London. "Not unfavorable," he said. I congratulated him on his sermon as "straight goods," and on his midweek audience. He said: "Yes; the women come though, and take first seats, and the men are forced to the rear; and I don't like it." I enquired if Christian Endeavor was prospering in London, reminding him of our Denver convention which he attended. He did not know. "But you have a C. E. society?" "Yes," he said, "but I am a preacher, and it ends there!" Mr. Campbell, I believe, has not very robust health, and it was agreed when he took charge of the temple that he should simply fill the pulpit. I attended a service at Westbourne Park chapel, Dr. John Clifford's, and found here the same large attendance and the same long list of meetings announced, conferences, mothers' and Dorcas meetings, Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor, temperance, Band of Hope, missionary, club and Bible Circle, and P. S. A. services.

The May meetings are now on. They begin in April and end in July and are all called "May meetings." Most of them are held in Exeter Hall. I saw a list of 236 missionary and benevolent societies announced. I attended the opening session of the Baptist union, which met in the city temple. Perhaps 2,500 were present from all over the United Kingdom. I never saw a more enthusiastic assembly. They sang as if inspired. In the opening prayer was as much politics as we put into a preachment. The brother, Hugh D. Brown, of Dublin, cried: "Lord, save us from priestcraft and catechisms," and there were many "amens." "Lord, this is St. George's day. We don't know what St. George did for this country, but we do know the dragon is still here, the dragon of sin and superstition, of intemperance and of bigotry." He alluded to the education bill which is causing such feeling all over Great Britain. The president, F. B. Meyer, delivered the most vigorous pronouncement on all questions before the British public I ever heard. The educational contention was handled without gloves. He maintained the line of cleavage should be "benevolence, not blood; character, not caste; goodness, not gold." He paid his respects to the landlords, the sweatshops, the ginmills, and the bishops and other clergy; and there were cries of "Hear! Hear!" and much approval. By the way, Mr. Meyer is a Baptist, preaches for a Congregational Church, and employs a Congregational assistant who baptizes the infants while he immerses the adults. I said to one of the Baptist preachers: "You fellows have a strange mix-up over here." London has more hospitals, asylums, and benevolent organizations than any city on earth. There are 108 societies of various charitable and religious, temperance and missionary services in the city, some with an income of many thousands and scores of workers. I dropped in upon the British and Foreign Bible Society, seeing Matt. 24:35 over the door, and was shown through their great Bible house. They send out 70,000 copies every working day, translate the Bible into 390 distinct forms of speech, added ten last year, and have issued since the beginning in 1804, 192,000,000 copies of the Scriptures. London has 2,700 places of worship: only six classified as "Disciples of Christ." I found the West London Tabernacle well attended and received many courtesies from Mark Wayne Williams and Leslie Morgan. A day with these brethren at Hampton Court and in the Museum of Natural History at Kensington will be long remembered. We were met in Liverpool by a full congregation in Upper Parliament street of members from that church and Chester, Saltney, Birkenhead and Southport, and Brethren Hughes, Moss, Coop, Wrathall, Pratley, and the rest gave us a greeting and farewell which greatly cheered us on our journey. Taking the Baltic, the largest steamship afloat, 24,000 tons, 725 feet long, 76 wide and 49 deep, we, with 2,700 others, sailed April 25, reaching New York May 4, safely, after nearly 16,000 miles' travel.

What the Brethren Are Saying and Doing

By B. B. Tyler

Is faith in Christ as the Son of God necessary to salvation? If so, why?

A man may be virtuous, have knowledge, temperance, patience, kindness, charity, honesty, etc., and believe in God as a good lord and ruler of the universe; yet believe in Jesus, only as a great teacher or moralist of high ideals. He may believe conscientiously after wide study and investigation that the great miracles surrounding his life story are myths or fables coming from tradition as did many Grecian and Roman myths.

Suppose a person can't help but look at in something of that light, yet is seeking honestly the highest and best way of living and a hope for a future life. He studies Christ, Ingersoll, Buddha, Confucius, Mohammed, Darwin and everything he can get bearing on the great problem of life and destiny. He finds some good in all, many things reasonable, beautiful and good. Some more than others. In all he finds ideas, teachings and stories which are absurd to all reason and absolutely incapable of proof or demonstration at present. He accepts and embodies in his character all the good he can from all teachers.

Will he be saved? Does the Bible offer any hope to a person of that kind?

The foregoing inquiry came to me some days ago. I pass it on to the readers of The Christian-Evangelist. What is your answer to the question, "Is faith in Christ, as the Son of God, necessary to salvation?" Will the man be saved who can not believe that Jesus of Nazareth is the Son of God? Does the Bible offer any hope to a person of that kind?

1. The work of the minister of the Word is the preaching of the Gospel, "Preach the Word," "Do the work of an evangelist," "This one thing I do." "I determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." This was the determination of Paul when he entered Corinth after his experience in Athens. Hence I make emphatic the pronoun.

2. Faith in Jesus, as the Son of God, is not necessary to salvation in the case of infants, insane persons and idiots. Faith in Christ is not necessary to salvation in the case of those who are unable to believe. Our Father does not require the impossible of his children under pain of eternal damnation. "If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath and not according to that he hath not." This is the statement of a fundamental principle in the Christian religion. The Master said: "Unto whomsoever much is given, of him much shall be required." Reasonable men act on this principle. "To whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more."

3. To such as are capable of believing in Jesus, as the Son of God, the Scriptures teach that faith is a necessary condition of salvation. The prison keeper in Philippi could believe. Hence Paul, as an ambassador of Jesus Christ, commanded him to believe on the Lord Jesus and assured him that if he would do so he would be saved. This instruction was given and this command was issued in answer to the question: "What must I do to be saved?" This then was what the pagan prison keeper must do to be saved. "Without faith it is impossible" for such a person "to please God."

4. The person described in the foregoing is a very foolish man. "He studies Christ, Ingersoll, Buddha, Confucius, Mohammed, Darwin and everything he can get." If the seeker after truth was mentally sound in the beginning such a hodge podge would, it seems to me, in a little while, cause him to become daft. This man knows not how to study. The issue relates to Jesus. "Who is he?" This is the question. What light does Darwin, or Mohammed, or Confucius, or Buddha, or Ingersoll, throw on this question? None whatever! There is a great difference between this wide and indiscriminate reading and earnest investigation. It is safe to say that, as a matter of fact, this individual does not study Christ, Ingersoll, Buddha, Confucius, Mohammed, and Darwin. It is probable that he reads quotations from them. It is also probable that he gives more time and attention to Ingersoll than to all the others.

5. Jesus himself suggested a method which, if pursued, will bring most gratifying results. "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching, whether it is of God or whether I speak from myself" (John 7:17). If this man really desires to know, let him begin at once to practice in his daily life, both toward God and toward his fellow men, the doctrine or teaching of Jesus. Knowledge will come by doing. Experience in doing what the Christ requires will result in certainty as to the divine wisdom and power of Mary's Son. Any person pursuing this course will be saved beyond a peradventure. His salvation is absolutely certain.

6. How can the Bible bring hope to a man who does not believe what it says?

A man promises to give me a thousand dollars. My honest opinion is that he is a liar. While I entertain this opinion of him his words can not beget hope. This man thinks that the Bible—its story of Jesus and all the rest—is a collection of fables, or myths, or something of the kind. This collection of untruths can not generate hope. Impossible! Does the Bible offer hope to a man of this kind? Not a bit.

HOW MANY OF US?

Fail to Select Food Nature Demands to Ward Off Ailments.

A Ky. lady, speaking about food, says: "I was accustomed to eating all kinds of ordinary food until, for some reason, indigestion and nervous prostration set in.

"After I had run down seriously my attention was called to the necessity of some change in my diet, and I discontinued my ordinary breakfast and began using Grape-Nuts with a good quantity of rich cream.

"In a few days my condition changed in a remarkable way, and I began to have a strength that I had never been possessed of before, a vigor of body and a poise of mind that amazed me. It was entirely new in my experience.

"My former attacks of indigestion had been accompanied by heat flashes, and many times my condition was distressing with blind spells of dizziness, rush of blood to the head and neuralgia pains in the chest.

"Since using Grape-Nuts alone for breakfast I have been free from these troubles, except at times when I have indulged in rich, greasy foods in quantity, then I would be warned by a pain under the left shoulder blade, and unless I heeded the warning the old trouble would come back, but when I finally got to know where these troubles originated I returned to my Grape-Nuts and cream and the pain and disturbance left very quickly.

"I am now in prime of health as a result of my use of Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Modern Religious Persecution---A Defense

By B. L. Chase

9. Some Deadly Heresies.

The most deadly heresy that has sprung up among the Disciples—the most alarming because so widespread and dangerous—is the teaching that other religious bodies are Christian and churches of Christ. It is appalling how deep-seated this heresy has become among the Disciples. The majority of our editors and of our leading pastors in the large city churches have fallen into this error, but the "rank and file" are against it. To my knowledge there is just one editor who is sound on this question, and he it was who saved us from disappearing as a brotherhood about three years ago. I need not speak his name; it is a household word. In another generation he will be known as the Restorer of the Restoration Movement. His name will be linked with the beloved name of Benjamin Franklin, as Joshua's was linked with that of Moses. He has taken up the work where Franklin lad it down, and upon him has fallen the intellectual and doctrinal mantle of that great leader. He is the only man left among us in these apostate times who knows perfectly the mind and reproduces exactly the spirit of the great Franklin. He is the only one who has been strong enough to resist the flatteries and bewitching advances of the denominations. All others are speaking kindly of the sects, and are mixing with them—are even saying that there are Christians among them. They are even quoting the words of Alexander Campbell, who fell away from the true faith in his later years. He said in 1837, just before his great apostasy, that a Christian was "one that believes in his heart that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah, the Son of God; repents of his sins, and obeys him in all things, according to his measure of knowledge of his will." He was so bold as to say he believed there were Christians among the sects. From the time of this utterance his decline toward Babylon was rapid.

Our ministry to-day is not what it once was. We used to have strong men who were not afraid to denounce the Methodists and Baptists and call upon those who desired to be saved to come out from among them. But where do we now hear preachers bear strong testimony against the sects? They can not resist their smiles, and are so bewitched that many of them are ready to fall into the "federation trap" which the sects have spread for the Disciples. We used to have debates going on against the faith and practices of the sects, but now where do we hear of debates? Instead of fighting them, we are trying to get our arms around them. We used to have plenty of preachers who were not afraid to stand up and say: "We are right and everybody else is wrong." We have but a few now. Who can say we do not need the Inquisition?

The alarming thing is that we will have to summon many of our very best men before the awful tribunal for holding this deadly heresy. On the list of men to be tried first, I regret to place such honored names as Garrison, Tyler, Power, Philputt, Powell, Breeden, Combs, Craig, Tyrrell, Richardson, Moore, Haley and a host of others who have been misled by them. But why should we pause before an honored name? Did the church in medieval times hesitate before the name of a Huss, a Latimer, or a Galileo? We should be unworthy successors of the great persecutors who have gone before us if we did not purge the Church of these heretics.

Such heretics actually believe that Luther, Knox, Calvin and Wesley were Christians; that Carey, Judson and Livingstone were saved; while none of these men were members of the true, apostolic Christian Church. They believe that Thomas and Alexander Campbell were Christians before they were immersed in 1812. If that is so, then our plea for primitive Christianity has had no meaning. They were just as well off without baptism for the remission of sins as we are who have been baptized. Then a person is just as likely to be saved in the Methodist as in the Christian Church. No wonder the Disciples are disappearing where such things are being taught. If we are going to live and grow as a people we must have preachers who will preach that we are the only true Church; that Jesus spoke of the Disciples when he said, "Upon this rock I will build my Church"; that we have "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth."

The Gospel was lost from the time of the apostles until it was discovered by the Campbells. There was no Christian church in the world from the first century until 1812, when one was organized at Brush Run, Pa. There were no Christians until then. In the year 1900 there were a little over one million Christians in the world, according to the year book of the Disciples. There were many millions of Methodists, Jews, Hindoos, Buddhists, Baptists, Roman Catholics, Mohammedans, Atheists and Pagans, but just 1,118,000 Christians.

The Disciples have before them a tremendous task to evangelize all the rest of the world—Pagan, Protestant and Catholic. But if we let some of our heretics go on teaching that the Baptists and Methodists are Christians then we shall have to federate with them in saving the world. If we federate, we must disappear as a brotherhood. The only way we can save ourselves from annihilation is to start a persecution against every man that recognizes the denominations as churches of Christ. This is our only hope of holding our own against them, and of continued growth. Would a Methodist leave his church and join us if he felt he was just as safe in that church? If we do not keep on telling the members of the denominations they will be lost if they remain with them we shall cut off a very large annual increase in our membership from these churches.

What if the Disciples of Christ should disappear? There would be no true church of Christ on earth to teach the "old Jerusalem Gospel" to immerse people for the remission of sins, to preach Christian unity, or to tell sinners what to do to be saved; no one who could teach the true design of baptism, the true nature of faith, of conscience, or the correct doctrine and action of the Holy Spirit; none who would know how to organize true churches of Christ, how often to celebrate the Lord's Supper, how to take a confession of faith correctly, or how rightly to divide the word of truth. It would be a dark world, indeed, with no one left in it to save the Methodists, the Baptists and the heathen. I suppose the sects would go on blindly pouring out their money to build hospitals, schools and churches; to send the "Gospel as they un-

CAN DRINK TROUBLE
That's One Way to Get It.

Although they won't admit it many people who suffer from sick headaches and other ails get them straight from the coffee they drink and it is easily proved if they're not afraid to leave it to a test as in the case of a lady in Connellsville.

"I had been a sufferer from sick headaches for twenty-five years and anyone who has ever had a bad sick headache knows what I suffered. Sometimes three days in the week I would have to remain in bed, at other times I couldn't lie down the pain would be so great. My life was a torture and if I went away from home for a day I always came back more dead than alive.

"One day I was telling a woman my troubles and she told me she knew that it was probably coffee caused it. She said she had been cured by stopping coffee and using Postum Food Coffee and urged me to try this food drink.

"That's how I came to send out and get some Postum and from that time I've never been without it for it suits my taste and I have been entirely cured of all my old troubles. All I did was to leave off the coffee and tea and drink well made Postum in its place. This change has done me more good than everything else put together.

"Our house was like a drug store for my husband bought everything he heard of to help me without doing any good but when I began on the Postum my headaches ceased and the other troubles quickly disappeared. I have a friend who had an experience just like mine and quitting coffee and using Postum cured her just as it did me.

"The headaches left and my general health has been improved and I am much stronger than before. I now enjoy delicious Postum more than I ever did coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason" and it's worth finding out.

derstand it" to the heathen; supporting missionaries, hospitals and schools in foreign lands; but the work would all have to be done over again, if God ever sent his true church into the world. These Protestant sects are all building upon the wrong foundation, and their work will come to naught.

Since the Disciples are the only ones who have the truth, they ought to go into every place where there is a Methodist or Presbyterian church and try to convert the members to Christ. They are following Wesley, Calvin and other human leaders; the Disciples alone are following Christ. We have the right name, the right baptism, the right organization and the right creed; and if we have all these things right, our spirit and life will be right. I have always noticed how much better lives the Disciples lead, how much better spirit they manifest toward each other, how much more sacrificing and unselfish they are, than the members of other churches. That is because they were baptized correctly, and celebrate the Lord's Supper with proper frequency, and have the proper form of church government, and write "Disciples" with a little d. These are the marks of the true church of Christ. If Jesus or Paul should visit the earth in person they would come straight to a church of the Disciples. They might pass right by a Methodist church and not know what it was, because it would not have the right name painted on the signboard or chiseled into the corner-stone. The first questions Jesus would ask a church of the Disciples would be: "How were you baptized? How often do you celebrate the Lord's Supper? How is your church organized? Do you believe in federation? Do you write Disciples with a big D or a little d? Do you think you are a denomination? Do you believe Moses wrote every word of the Penteteuch? Are there one or two Isaiahs? When was the book of Daniel written? Did the whale swallow Jonah?"

The answer to these questions would determine whether Jesus remained with that church or passed on to another, looking for the church that he founded upon the rock. Yet in the face of these unanswerable facts there are preachers tolerated among the Disciples who say that the true church is known, not by the name or organization that it bears, but by the spirit and life of the members; that if a man lives like Christ in all love and purity, though he may be called a Methodist and belong to that church, yet he is a Christian! Such teaching is enough to make Benjamin Franklin and J. F. Rowe turn over in their graves. The Disciples should drive every preacher and church member out of their ranks who holds such soul-destroying doctrine. Better a thousand times that the brotherhood be torn to fragments than harbor such poisonous teaching.

Why I Am a Christian Only and Not a Denominationalist

By J. K. BALLOU.

I am a Christian only because that is all Christ asks; it is all the Bible teaches one should be; it is all the apostles and first Christians were; it is all that is compatible with Christ's teaching and the spirit of the New Testament.

I am not a denominationalist, for that would make me a divisionalist, and divisions are classed as fruits of the flesh ("idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousies, wraths, factions, divisions, heresies." Gal. 5:20. R. V.)

All denominations cause divisions and divisions are condemned by the Bible. ("Now I beseech you, brethren, through the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you." 1 Cor. 1:10.)

Denominationalism defeats the purpose and spirit of Christ's prayer ("Neither for these only do I pray, but for them also, that believe on me through their word; that they may all be one; even as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou didst send me." John 17:20, 21.)

Denominations prevent Christian union, retard missionary activity and furnish an excuse for not accepting and believing on Christ. It is something in addition to Christianity, and is not necessary to salvation, but plainly antagonistic to the teaching of the New Testament. Denominations exalt opinions into tests of fellowship. They are not divided on faith, but opinion. It is positively wrong to divide the church of God on opinion. The New Testament alone will never make a denomination, but added to this a prayer-book, a confession of faith, a book of discipline, an arbitrary test of fellowship, and we have a denomination. The Christian world will not unite on any denomination. It must unite on Christ, for Christ and in Christ. Hence to belong to any denomination prevents Christian union.

What must one give up to be simply a Christian without being a denominationalist? He must give up nothing divine—nothing required by Christ or taught by the Bible. He must give up all denominational names, such as Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, etc., for none of these are in the Bible, but are of human origin and foster divisions, then for the sake of unity can not we all drop them? He must give up all arbitrary creeds and confessions. Christ is the Christian's creed and a confession of faith in him is all inclusive. ("Thou art the Christ the son of the living God." Matt. 16:16.) To be a Christian only is to wear Christ's name only—to honor him by wearing his name. The names in the Bible are not denominational or party names; all others are.

To be simply a Christian one must give up a sectarian spirit, man-made creeds, artificial tests of fellowship, human names and ordinances and displace them by the Christian spirit, the divine creed, which is Christ, faith in him as a sufficient test of fellowship, the name Christian or any name in the Bible, and the ordinances as observed and kept by the apostles. Denominationalism is very expensive; it is a grat waste of the Lord's money to build and maintain churches where a few will serve much better.

Denominationalists are Christians and as good people as are to be found, but that is in spite of the fact that they are denominationalists, and because they are Christians. They are not living up to their highest privilege and enjoying the liberty they might have in Christ as long as their energies are directed in maintaining a denomination, which is of necessity more or less antagonistic to every other denomination. It is not complimentary to other denominations to belong to a certain one.

Since there is nothing to lose but much to gain by parting company with all sectarian and denominational parties, and since it is antagonistic to the plain teaching of the Bible, and an impediment in the way of Christian union, why do so many still hold on to it? The sad answer is because they do not know how to get away fom it; in too many the love for the denomination is too strong and Christ's will is too little known in this particular to induce them to stand fast in that liberty wherewith Christ has made them free.

Repentance

By J. W. Kilborn

"I tell you, Nay: but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."—Luke 13:3.

Some sinners had come to tell Jesus about the death of some other sinners, about which they seemed deeply concerned. We are not to understand from the manner of Jesus' reply that he treated the matter in the least degree flippantly, but he saw at once, and tried to make the sinners see, that the affair so far as those Galileans was concerned was a "closed incident," while "live issues" confronted those to whom he was speaking and whom he had been trying to teach. "Do you think those Galileans whose blood Pilate mingled in one of his ghastly orgies, or those upon whom the tower of Siloam fell, were viler sinners than all the rest of mankind, that such awful calamities should have fallen upon them? No; sinners doubtless they were, but that matter was passed beyond recall. And now except you repent, except you get right with God, except you shall learn that God is not the God of the dead, but of the living, you shall also in like manner be eternally lost." God is no respecter of persons. God has one law. God will not suffer that one man, because of hypocritical observance of the letter of the law, should pass into the enjoyment of the "rest that remaineth," but except each shall for himself and by himself make his life clean and pure and holy, except he shall bow down before the Master in loving, contrite repentance, ready to pray with another sinner, "Depart from me, O Lord, for I am a sinful man," God can not find himself a home in the heart and life. Like these Galileans, how much time we waste in concern for the sins of the other, and how little we are concerned over the shame we hide under our own cloaks. A great company stood before a man who "spoke as the Holy Spirit gave him utterance." They heard his masterful array of evidences; they listened to his scathing, blistering indictment of their own crime in murdering their Christ; the arrow of conviction sank to the very depths of their hearts; they believed themselves sinners in the sight of the God whom blindly, gropingly, they had tried to find that they might worship him. The very foundations of their faith in the old life, the old self, the old system, crumbled away and they cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" What a thrilling scene it all was. Hear the dignified answer of the Spirit-filled man, "Repent ye; repent ye; repent ye." May we not well believe that each one of these preachers cried to the waiting, anxious inquirers that burning command, "Repent ye?" Yes, I know the rest of it, too, but my theme is repentance, for this we need before the rest of the command. Establish the vital principle of repentance and the rest inevitably follows. No man who repents in the sense in which Jesus used the term, or in that in which the apostles used it on Pentecost and similar occasions, will stop at any command the word of inspiration lays upon him. He can not—he dare not. What is it, then? Need I pursue the case further? Do we not all know that the subtle, mysterious change that makes the thief make restitution, that causes the libertine to cease from his sensuality, the drunkard to flee his wickedness, the tight-fisted miser to open his hand and spend his wealth for God, the scarlet woman to anoint the feet of Jesus and bathe them even in her tears—this is the repentance that "brings forth fruits" and brings the whole being in subjection to God. May God bring us all to repentance, for "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."

Mt. Carmel, Ill.

The Man with the Ax

By Edward O. Sharpe

There was a great reformer in the long ago who thus spoke:

"Even now the ax also lieth at the root of the trees; every tree, therefore, that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire."

Thus, with prophetic solemnity, is declared the doom of every evil thing and system that curses the human race. Those who work out their cruel schemes are strangely obtuse to this warning. They go on planting evil trees and culturing them, heedless of the unerring ax of retributive justice and the consuming fires of an oppressed people's wrath. There is to-day a vast forest of such growth which must be cut down, not merely because of evil fruition, but more because the space is needed for the planting of orchards and grain for the children of our One Father.

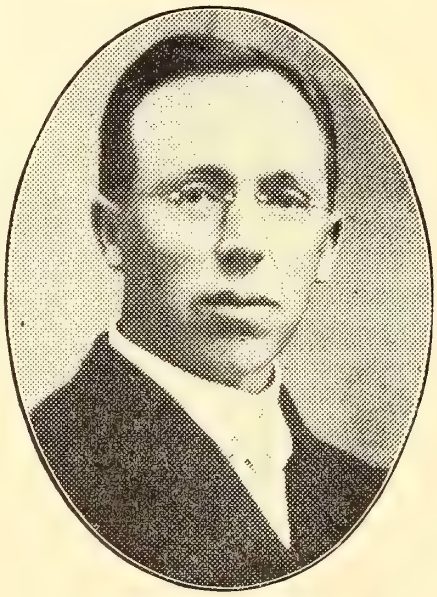
The broad and fertile fields of a continent, or hemisphere, unite to form the state, wherein the homes are pillars of strength and beauty. In an evil hour the insidious seeds of industrial and social tyranny are planted and for a time grow unseen but at length, lofty and umbrageous, they spread their branches far and wide over a whole people and claim all space for their own. Time-honored, moss-covered conservatism, sitting in the soft places of luxury and power, seeks selfish and unjust rule over those to whom Jehovah gave, not only liberty but dominion. When the hour of seeming triumph for the evil thing arrives then comes the Man with the Ax.

The battle between radical and conservative has been age-long, and concurrent with racial development. There have been victories that eclipse the glories of Austerlitz and Marengo, and defeats sadder than French tears at Waterloo. The victories endure; the defeats are but eddies in the mighty, onward flood. The Man with the Ax never surrenders; he has battered down the dungeons of wrong, and, with ringing tools, built the temples of national weal and joy. He has ever been a revolutionist and always hated till his heroic endeavor is crowned with success—then hailed as a demi-god. He knows he is not a favorite with his contemporaries. and plaudits will come with floral praise on his tomb.

"This is, O Truth, the deepest woe
Of him thou biddest to protest,
With men no kinship may he know,
Thy mission hems from worst and best.

The wolf that gauntly prowled the wood
From human-kind more mercy got
Than he who warns men to be good,
And stands alone and flinches not."

The ultra-conservative is the apotheosis of inertia. He esteems all desire for reform, as unreasonable and visionary; if he had his way there would be but one season for him—a continual harvest time. If evils are pointed out to him he calmly replies: "Such things always have been and always will be—'the poor you always have with you,' you know." The radical protests against such a paralysis of philanthropy and says with confidence: "The ax is laid at the root of the tree." This is the divine sanction upon radicalism, God's benediction on the Man with the Ax. Conservatism does but "skin and film the ulcerous place" while radicalism applies the keen edge and removes all the diseased tissue, even to the very roots, for radicalism is root-work, etymologically and rationally considered.



Edward O. Sharpe.

The Man with the Ax is the prime minister of progress; he pleads the emancipation of the slaves of evil circumstance. He is hooted by the reactionaries in the parliament of man. Then the ax swings swiftly, surely, and the old order is gone.

It is charged that the radical injures the good in his violent efforts to destroy evil. Even if this were true it would not justify a policy of laissez faire or folded arms and paralysis of social conscience. But it is not true except in a far-fetched sense. "Destroy in order to save," is quite a philosophic admonition; the flower fails and the seed is found; the seed perishes that the blossoms of a new springtime may be born. The present generation can not be clad in the out-worn garments of the social and industrial past, however highly we may regard them as heirlooms. Every upward movement of the race has been purchased with treasures of love and blood. In war for the liberty of a people many hearts must ache in lonely woe for loved ones fallen on the crimson field. Desolation lies ever in the wake of an army clad in righteous armor.

The radical is far removed from the nihilist. He holds to the reign of law in the administration of a government that shall prevent the action of a powerful and sinful individualism. He is socialistic, in that he demands the application of principles that guarantee every man an equal opportunity and where none shall injure or overreach by superior mental talents or shrewdness. He does not propose a vacuum in which moral and social rights and relations can not exist. If, in the readjustment of economic conditions, some injury is done to vested rights and intrenched privileges, it is because they stand in the way of the greater good to the greater number. The Man with the Ax is nobler in his heritage of hardship than the conservative in his hereditary purple and fine linen. The latter leaves the world as he finds it—or worse—while the former clears the way for the progress of generations yet to come hither.

There is ever a returning crisis. This age has its own problems with which it must grapple. The lines of war are now drawn up in America; mighty forces are in process of alignment and in opposition to each other. The appeal is, first, to reason and conscience. These failing to move brutality and covetousness, there must come the arbitrament of authority. A regnant voice must give utterance to the imperial mandates of righteousness. In the final adjudication vox populi, vox Dei. If age-lasting iniquity and oppression can maintain its sway in this great western republic, heaven help the race! The people have only to swing the ax and smash the gods of the market place.

The first and worst enemy of God and man that must perish is ignorance. It is the most valuable auxiliary of all who would enslave their fellow-men in spiritual or social degradation. Superstition and degeneracy will flee before true education as bats before the morning light. As the hands of angels hidden from mortal view shift the scenery of the heavens and dissolve nocturnal shade with the glory of dawn, so shall the heralds of intellectual day spread the light of knowledge from brain and lip and pen until a blinded race shall see and claim its dower right.

The mass of our American citizenry is honestly desirous of making our country truly great, but there has been so much commercial and political debauchery in the past few decades that the patriotic heart grows sick and faint. There is, to-day, a fight on between Mercenery Capitalism and the Army of the Common Good. Vast corporate systems that owe their existence to legal concession and unpopular taxation, go on plundering the many and enriching the few until it bewilders and dazes every conception of popular sovereignty. Never satisfied, these corporate jackals besiege legislatures and courts for favor and further opportunity to gnaw the bones of the poor. The Man with the Ax is on their trail and he will get them if they don't watch out.

Let us not be pessimistic; the better day is coming and not very far away. Every evil that lays the victim low will finally be relegated to the graveyard with Herod, Judas, Caligula, Borgia and Von Plehve. Let the people be wise and advance with caution upon the breastworks of Satan's fortresses, but as sure as

"Right is right and God is God,
Then Right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

Brother St. John three years ago was a Methodist, but was won to the plea by H. A. Northcutt and has since had his membership at Terre Haute, where L. E. Sellers ministers. He is, beyond question, among the very best leaders and soloists in the land. His work is of a high grade, and his presence has the right kind of influence in the meeting. He is of a hopeful disposition and never fails to make friends and wins the large choruses, which he leads to him at the beginning. His whole heart and soul are in his work.

LeRoy St. John.

—In answer to inquiries we wish to say that The Christian-Evangelist special train to the Buffalo convention will be supplied with baggage cars, also with a diner and a commissary car that will supply sandwiches and coffee at much cheaper rates than the regular diner. In fact, nothing is being left undone to serve the convenience of our traveling companions and minister to their entertainment during the trip.

—C. R. L. Vawter, of the First Church of Christ, Shelby, Ohio, is in a meeting with the Mill Hall (Pa.) church. Brother Vawter held some very successful tent meetings in Pennsylvania last summer, and has had numerous calls for meetings since, but he has accepted none till the one came from Mill Hall, preferring to stay with his own church. The Avis (Pa.) church, which he organized last summer in a tent, is now in the toils of a building enterprise.,

—James S. Beem, of Bethany, Neb., has had 24 additions to the Low Centre church during his three months' pulpit supply there. He now offers his services to the churches as general evangelist.

—Evangelist James T. McKissick recently assisted J. W. McGarvey, Jr., in a meeting at Mount Zion, Ky., with 64 additions, 50 being by primary obedience. Brother McKissick has helped to add 166 to our churches since July 1.

—W. E. M. Hackelman, of Indianapolis, visited with us last Friday en route to Union City, Tenn., where he will assist Herbert Yeuell through a revival in J. J. Castleberry's church. This is an exceptionally strong combination, and we anticipate a great meeting.

—Mary A. Lyons, the indefatigable corresponding secretary of the Ohio C. W. B. M., has changed her headquarters from Hiram to 9726 Logan Court, N. E., Cleveland, Ohio. We trust the labors of Sister Lyons may long be blessed with the success that has attended her hitherto.

—W. W. Burks has recently returned from a vacation spent in the southwest. He reports E. S. Bullard happily located with the Las Vegas (New Mexico) church; that his people are greatly pleased with their new pastor, and that prospects for the great upbuilding of the congregation are most excellent.

—The railroad rates to the Kentucky convention at Louisville, September 24 to 27, will be one fare plus 25 cents, instead of one and one-third fare plus 25 cents, as erroneously stated by the corresponding secretary in former announcements. No certificates are needed.

—What May is to the farmer September is to the preacher. It is a time of quickening kindling enthusiasm, preparing for the great spiritual harvests of November and midwinter. Let us all enter enthusiastically upon our work and give to the world some astonishing church statistics.

—R. R. Hamlin, who is having remarkable success as evangelist since his resignation at Fort Worth, Texas, will begin a meeting in Nevada, Mo., early in November. —The annual convention of the Western Pennsylvania Christian Missionary Society will be held at Homestead September 25-27. An excellent program has been arranged.

—The American Christian Missionary Society would notify its friends that the books for this year close September 30. Churches, Bible schools, Endeavor societies, ladies' aid societies and all other organizations, as well as individuals, wishing to contribute to this year's receipts must make remittances at once.

—R. W. Tanksley, who was compelled by throat trouble to relinquish a very successful pastorate at Neodesha, Kan., after a three months' sojourn at Eureka Springs, is enabled to resume his labors with the churches. His address is Neodesha, but we hope to learn of his early call to one of our churches.

—In a letter from Mrs. H. A. Wheeldon we learn that the Missoula (Mont.) church, under the leadership of Brother and Sister W. H. Bagby, is growing rapidly in numbers, prestige and usefulness. In the letter The Christian-Evangelist, which is circulating largely in this church, comes in for a generous meed of praise.

—Evangelist John T. Stivers holds meetings nearly all the year. During his vacation he just "holds meetings." During his vacation in Missouri he held one of the latter for three weeks at Memphis, Mo., assisted by J. T. Shreves, resulting in twenty-one additions. Brother Stivers speaks very highly of Brother Shreves' pastoral and pulpit abilities.

—H. A. Northcutt is in a meeting in his old home town, Knox City, Mo., with 83 additions at last report. More than half of these are men. Roy Westcott, a young local merchant, has charge of the singing; Brother Northcutt says that he serves God in the store as well as in the church. Verily, such men are the hope of the church of the future.

—The office has been favored with an announcement of the marriage of Lura Margaret Wallace to Leslie Garfield Parker, of Des Moines, Ia. These young people will be at home to their friends in Des Moines after September 24. We wish them great happiness and usefulness as they go down through the years together.

—If one of our young men of the Student Volunteer Band who has in view the dedication of his life to either foreign or frontier work would like to have the advantage of a year's exercise in one of our large cities, he might communicate with George L. Snively, president of the City Mission Board, Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.

—O. L. Hull, of Randolph, Ohio, concluded a meeting last Lord's day with his home church of one week's duration, with 14 additions by confession and baptism. He has closed his work with the church there to accept the pastorate of the Garrett (Ind.) congregation, where he will assist in the building of a new church home.

—In a communication from Charles Reign Scoville, of September 6, he reports 353 additions in his union meeting at Monroe, Wis. This totals 4,330 additions to the churches through Brother Scoville's meeting for 1906. Among the great contributions this Restoration has made to the religious world is this remarkably successful evangelist.

—The resourceful pastor of our Amarillo (Texas) congregation adds in a note enclosing subscriptions to The Christian-Evangelist that his church surpassed its Church Extension apportionment. We naturally expect Christian-Evangelist churches to do this, especially when such a consecrated minister as Howard Jewell is at the prow.

—Evangelist Chas. W. Mahin is in a meeting with Rock church ten miles from Huntington, Ind. He writes there is every kind of "ism" represented there; that sinners are confused by them and there is difficulty even in teaching them the truth. There were two additions at last report with prospects for a good increase. He begins with the Ambia (Ind.) church September 15.

—Evangelist W. A. Haynes, Skidmore, Mo., will begin a meeting in Doniphan, same state, the first Lord's day in October. He orders 500 copies of The Christian-Evangelist to his assistance through the meeting. Brother Haynes has been highly recommended to us as a soul winner, and we delight in having this fellowship with him in revival services.

—W. B. Blakemore is having a very happy time at Mill Creek, Ky. Over $800 worth of improvements have been made to the church property during the past year. The Twelfth district Sunday-school and the C. W. B. M. conventions held very successful sessions in his church August 15 and 16. His people recently gave $110 for Kentucky state missions.

—Children's day for home missions is the first Lord's day before Thanksgiving. A beautiful exercise, "Soldiers of the Cross," has been prepared by this society, and will be sent free wherever requested. Attractive boxes in which to collect money for this important ministry have been prepared, and will be distributed gratuitously among the Bible schools applying.

—John S. Sweeney, of Paris, Ky., was an office visitor last week. He recently held a brief meeting with 11 additions at Old Union, Green county, Ill., where he preached his first sermon 50 years ago. He visited other scenes of his earlier ministry with great pleasure to himself and help to the churches. There is many a good sermon and lecture and even debate in the old hero yet.

—Chas. E. Smith, state evangelist, has just closed a short meeting at Versailles, S. C., with five added to the membership during the meeting and a very substantial payment made on the church extension loan owed by that congregation. Some sectarian and bitter opposition at St. Stephens was changed into admiration and love for our plea before the meeting concluded. Brother Smith is now at Merrit's Bridge.

—W. J. Cocke recently conducted a two weeks' meeting with the Mill Creek (Ky.) church, with 37 additions—23 by confession and baptism. The successes that characterized his Georgia ministry are following him to a marked degree into his new field of labor in Kentucky. Together with his other schoolmates, this paragrapher greatly rejoices in Brother Cocke's victories for the truth.

—J. A. L. Romig, Portage La Prairie, Manitoba, corresponding secretary of the Western Canada Missionary Association, has prepared a twenty-page booklet reporting his work and the general development of the cause of primitive Christianity in his territory. It abounds in encouragement to Disciples living in the land of "Our Lady of the Snows." We hope many of our Canadian brethren will attend our Buffalo Convention next month.

—F. M. Rogers concluded his first two years' service with the West Side Church, Springfield, Ill., August 31, and was immediately re-engaged until January 1, 1910. The membership of that new church is 524. Its growth in all the elements of church strength has been almost phenomenal, and Brother Rogers' continuation with them is a guarantee there will be no recession. Victor Dorris and C. H. Altheide will assist him in revival meeting, beginning November 1.

"Help us to get into our own church home."

DID YOU TAKE

a Church Extension Offering the first Sunday of September?

The Offering began then but it should not end until every church sends an Offering. Select the best Sunday to suit local conditions, but to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

SEND AN OFFERING

The Annuity feature of Church Extension is profitable to you and the Board. You receive 6 per cent and the Board builds churches with your money.

—W. W. Burks, of Nevada, Mo., sends us the subscription of H. S. McCord, pastor of the Presbyterian church in that city. He had expressed admiration of the teachings of the paper. This suggests a great opportunity to those who would have our plea fully understood by our denominational brethren. Several thousand subscriptions from denominational ministers could easily be secured by our preachers—an accomplishment that would greatly redound to the extension of this Restoration movement.

—Sumner T. Martin, 2136 Congress street, Chicago, city evangelist, asks that all persons knowing of members of the Christian church moving to Chicago send him their names and street addresses. The importance of this will be realized when it is authoritatively stated there are more members of the Christian church in Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Kansas City, Pueblo, Denver and other large cities not affiliated with our churches than are identified with them.

—The Kentucky state convention meets September 24. Among the able men and women on the program we note President C. L. Loos, A. McLean, H. D. Clark, J. T. Kackley, R. M. Hopkins, R. L. Clark, P. A. Cave, Jno. R. Ewers, Mark Collis, W. E. Ellis, M. G. Buckner, Carey E. Morgan, H. C. Garrison, J. W. McGarvey, F. C. Button, May A. Finch, R. H. Crossfield, Marion Lawrance, E. L. Powell, President E. Y. Mullins, R. M. Simpson and Secretary H. W. Elliott.

—James H. Henderson, of the Talula, Ills. church, writes that W. J. Battonfield, at present ministering to the church at Chambersburg, Ill., will move to Texas in a few weeks. He has not decided on any location yet. Our correspondent writes that Brother Battonfield has been successful in every field where he has labored and that he will undoubtedly prove helpful to any Texas church engaging his services.

—O. C. Moomaw, after a three years' faithful and successful pastorate at Clay Center, Kan., has resigned and the church wishes a new minister to begin October 1. The church is free of indebtedness, alive to missions, has a good building, well located in a city of 4,000. Otha Wilkison, of Ukiah, Cal., will conduct revival meetings there through September. Ministers considering this pastorate may address L. M. Householder, Clay Center, Kan.

—The missionaries of the Foreign Society in the Philippine Islands report 540 additions during the past year. When it is remembered that there are only three men there giving themselves wholly to evangelistic work, it will be seen that these are most encouraging figures. The society has recently expended $16,000 in ground and a building in Manila. This work was begun only five years ago and there are already 17 organized churches.

—We very much regret to state that Brother Garrison is so severely afflicted with hay fever as to make it impossible for him to attend the Paris convention of Illinois Disciples. This is as great a disappointment to him, as it will be to those who expected to hear and meet him. His place on the Endeavor program, however, will be supplied, and a great convention will be edified by splendid reports of work done and inspirational addresses by some of our ablest and noblest men and women.

—Hiram Van Kirk, of 2230 Dana street, Berkeley, Cal., has been requested to secure delegates for the national convention at Buffalo. The rates will be one fare plus $2. As this is the first opportunity to secure half fares east since the World's Fair, it is hoped many will avail themselves of the opportunity. Let those intending to come from California write Brother Van Kirk at once. We hope these California delegates will come over the Wabash from St. Louis joining The Christian-Evangelist Special at noon, October 11.

—Lynn R. Hornish, in a letter containing remittance for the New Hampshire fund, says: "I had intended to give my little for a long time, but have neglected to do so. I am afraid there are thousands who have delayed even as I have. If we only would do and not delay." Would that these "thousands" would "do" at once that a sufficient fund mighty quickly be compounded for holding this meeting and the first month's salary of a located preacher, that we might go on to other victories.

—W. E. Garrison, who was compelled by threatened pulmonary complications to relinquish the presidency of Butler College in the dawn of what promised to be an unusually brilliant career, has just been elected principal of the High School of Santa Fe, N. M. One significance of this that will delight hosts of friends is that all who are considered for this responsible position must first undergo a rigid examination and be found absolutely free from all traces of tuberculosis.

—Secretary W. J. Wright stopped with us part of a day on his way to the Indian Territory convention at South McAlester. He is quite sanguine that offerings for home missions will aggregate as much for 1906 as for the previous year, notwithstanding the interregnum following the resignation of Secretary B. L. Smith before his own recent acceptance of this important portfolio. Our hearts and prayers are with Brothers Wright and Ranshaw in their heroic undertaking for the evangelization of the home-land.

—Next Sunday afternoon at three o'clock the officers of the Teachers' Union of the Christian Bible school of this city will hold a rally at the Hamilton Avenue Church to consider ways and means of advancing Sunday-school interests. All interested in Sunday-school work and the upbuilding of the cause of Christ are invited to attend regardless of denominational lines. Among others on the program other than our own workers are S. J. Lindsay and P. M. Hammon. Governor Folk has been invited and has signified his intention of being present if circumstances permit.

—The company of Disciples that will leave New York to visit Palestine next February will include Mrs. Dessie Campbell Barclay, daughter of Alexander Campbell, who spent three years at one time in the Holy Land; J. P. Lichtenberger and wife, of New York and A. C. Smither and wife, of Los Angeles. If these are fair samples of the character of the company the Disciple pilgrims will constitute a select group on the steamship Arabic. From Bro. B. B. Tyler we learn that the next cruise promises to be unusually popular.

—Herbert H. Saunders, of Noblesville, Ind., writes a beautifully worded letter commending the evangelistic methods, aspirations and successes of R. H. Fife, of Kansas City, whom he heard through a revival meeting at Holden, Mo. "I heard Brother Fife say many times, 'Unless you want to accept Christ in determination to work for him for the extension of his kingdom, no matter what that sacrifice may entail, you would better stay where you are.'" Brother Fife is known to this office as a man of faith, purity, ability and success.

—We will gladly serve our friends by securing entertainment for them at Buffalo. We have secured options on a multitude of homes equipped with all modern conveniences and within easy walking distance of the convention hall. The convention hall is not located in the hotel district. Entertainment in private homes is preferable to hotel service. Rates 75 cents and $1 for room and breakfast. Our services are absolutely gratuitous. If names are sent us soon enough the Buffalo entertainment committee will mail assignments with directions for finding them to applicants.

—W. E. M. Hackleman has been selected by the Buffalo convention committee to conduct the music for the national convention October 12-18. This is the fourth time Brother Hackleman has been selected for this important position. The music of the program will be taken from "Gloria In Excelsis," that best of all church hymnals. In Indiana, alone, this hymnal has been adopted by such county seat churches as Brazil, Rushville, Frankfort, Lafayette, Anderson, Noblesville, Kokomo, Central, Indianapolis, Fourth, Indianapolis, Jeffersonville, Wabash, Huntington, Crawfordsville, etc.

THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY,
Y. M. C. A. BUILDING,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

—On Sunday, August 26, L. N. D. Wells preached his farewell sermons—to his congregation in the morning, and to the public in the evening. At both services the house was crowded, the evening audience overtaxing the capacity of the house. Three confessed Christ in the morning and were baptized in the evening when still another made the good confession. At the close of the evening service Bro. Wells was presented with a beautiful gold watch, and Mrs. Wells was the recipient of a splendid silver set as a token of the love of the members of the Wilkinsburg church. This popular preacher has taken up his new work in East Orange, N. J.

—Evangelist S. J. Vance, of Carthage, Mo., held a meeting at Sorrell, Mo., in the Baptist church, under the auspices of the Missouri Christian Missionary Society. There were 11 additions at the first Lord's day service. "The Baptists very kindly granted us the privilege of organizing a congregation of Christians only, but not the only Christians, in their church, which we will do during the progress of this meeting. This is another great opportunity for preaching Christian union, which I am not neglecting to do. I preached yesterday on 'The Divine Plea,' with many colorings of Bible union."

—There were five additions the first two days of Evangelist George C. Ritchey's meeting at Nampa, Idaho, where he is being assisted by 300 Christian-Evangelists each week. He was at Emmett, Idaho, 10 days, and organized a church of 17 members that has since been added to. This church is now negotiating for a church building. A new church building will be dedicated at Rupert in October, where he closed a meeting August 5. Meridian, Idaho, expects to have a new building completed in December, when Brother Ritchey begins his second meeting there. Each of these congregations needs a good pastor.

—Referring to a brief personal notice of himself in this department of the paper in connection with his relation to the Marshall Field Dry Goods Company, Bro. W. P. Keeler, of Chicago, writes: "Be it understood that your humble servant is but an employe of Marshall Field & Co., now in his thirty-fifth year of service." While Brother Keeler thus disclaims the honor of being "a member of the great Marshall Field Dry Goods Company," his long connection with that firm in a responsible position is high testimony to his ability and integrity.

—Parties going with The Christian-Evangelist special over the Wabash to the Buffalo convention will have their choice of going from Detroit on to the convention city either by rail through Canada or over the full length of Lake Erie on a staunch, safe ship. We advise our friends to go one way and return the other. There is no extra charge for the ship ride. The rate from your home will be one fare plus $1 east of the Mississippi and plus $2 west of the river. From wherever you start get to the Wabash as soon as possible. Lowest possible rates will be secured for side trips to Niagara and elsewhere, and best entertainment provided for while at the convention.

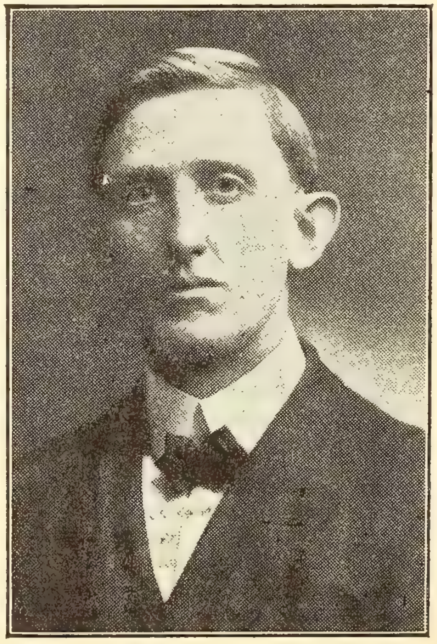
—A letter has been received by the Editor from Evangelist Herbert Yeuell, dated London, August 25, in which he announces that he was to sail from Liverpool in the steamer "Coronia" on Tuesday, August 28, and that he expected to be able to start his meeting at Union City, Tenn., September 9. He reports that his mother's health is improved somewhat though she is still ill. He was to preach at the West London Tabernacle on Lord's day evening, August 26. He will probably be in his meeting before this reaches our readers. On account of the crowded condition of the steamships coming this way his wife and son who accompanied him to England will not return until a few weeks later.

—During his recent vacation, Percy T. Carnes, of La Plata, Mo., held a three weeks' meeting in Bayfield, Colo. There were but two members in the town, and a few in the surrounding country when he arrived, nor had there ever been a sermon by a Christian minister in the county. Notwithstanding there was much prejudice and misunderstanding to be removed, the people heard "the new doctrine" gladly. He preached to the largest audiences ever assembled in Bayfield. "We closed the meeting with a great baptismal and union service, the reception of scattered disciples and members from the denominations, and the organization of the first church simply Christian in the county. Bro. G. E. Trone, elder and "fireside preacher," will lead the work for awhile."

—The "Daily Vidette" contains more than a two-column account of the farewell reception given Brother and Sister J. H. O. Smith by their Valparaiso (Ind.) church, together with the pulpit committee's very reluctant acceptance of their resignation and a tribute to the real worth of the pastor and his wife—or rather these joint pastors, we are justified in saying. Brother Smith's resignation abounds in expressions of profound appreciation of the tender and sacred relationships existing between him and his church for so many years. The kindly interest of all Valparaiso as well as Disciples everywhere will follow honest-hearted, consecrated and eloquent J. H. O. Smith through his evangelistic career.

—"Arrangements have been made and the money raised for securing the services of a pastor at the Christian Church. Wallace Stuckey, of Lebo, who has so successfully managed the big revival that has been in progress for some time, is responsible for the great religious wave that has swept over Galesburg and vicinity. This organization has been at a standstill for several years, but new life and vigor have been infused, and it promises to be one of the strongest organizations in this section of the country. It seems that every citizen is more than pleased that its door will be opened again soon for regular services, and the people of the town have responded nicely to the call for financial support." —Thayer (Mo.) News.

—Charles Frederick Trimble, Oklahoma state evangelist, began a campaign for the restoration of primitive Christianity at Ada, I. T., September 7, under the direction of the state board. Brother Trimble is being loaned by the Oklahoma Christian Missionary Society for this meeting on account of the great importance of that field. He is spoken of by his board as the "Apostle of Love." So successful have been his evangelistic labors for the past twelve years that he has earned a front rank position among our evangelists. More than half the baptisms reported by living link evangelists at the recent El Reno convention were the results of his work. Of his 400 additions to Oklahoma churches during the year 235 were by confession and baptism. Three hundred Christian-Evangelists will be among the aids to Brother Trimble in this meeting to which the brethren are looking forward with so much hopefulness.



Charles Frederick Trimble.

—During Pastor J. M. Philputt's vacation from Union Avenue Church, this city, Irving S. Chenoweth, his assistant, had full charge, preaching twice every Sunday and keeping up a large amount of pastoral work, besides speaking every Thursday night at a downtown mission. It was a great responsibility for one of his years to assume, but he discharged his duties to the increasing satisfaction of the church, and showed himself to be a man of unusual natural and spiritual resources. He is now at his home in Illinois enjoying a well-earned vacation. The problem before the Union Avenue Church this year is the erection of the main auditorium. They are planning to let the contract in December and hope to begin work early next spring.

—In advance of a full report of the El Reno (Okla.) convention we are pleased to state on good information that it was the largest and most enthusiastic of any ever held in the territory.

—The members and friends of the First Christian Church of Parkersburg, W. Va., gave a reception in honor of their retiring pastor, G. F. Assiter, on Monday night, that was quite a notable event. Ministers of the various churches were present and the secretary of the local Y. M. C. A. who made brief complimentary addresses, which were interspersed with music. Brother Assiter was then called to the platform and presentations of silver and jewelry were made to him and wife on behalf of the church and his Sunday-school class. At the close refreshments were served to a large company. J. M. Helm, of Hillsboro, O., succeeds Brother Assiter, who goes to Rogersville, Pa.

—In a letter from B. B. Tyler to one of the office force he states, "I am overwhelmed with work and am unutterably happy. Received ten persons last Lord's day and two since; expect to baptize three to-morrow; was ordained to the work of the ministry September 4, 1861. This one thing I have done during all these years. I have never engaged in business or even been a teacher. I have served either as pastor or evangelist forty-five full years and am now doing the best and happiest work of my life. Have never had a spell of sickness; my health now is perfect, not an ache nor a pain; not a fear nor a dread. I am simply boiling over this morning with joy, and hence this letter. Praise the Lord. The yoke is easy; the burden is light.

—We have received from Bro. R. B. Neal, of Grayson, Ky., the apostle of anti-Mormonism, a copy of "Oliver Cowdery's Defence and Renunciation," which is No. 9 in his series of anti-Mormon tracts. This is really a most important document in the refutation of the fraudulent claims of Mormonism. Oliver Cowdery, it will be remembered, was one of the three original witnesses who saw the wonderful "plates" and the scribe who wrote down the translation of these "plates" dictated by the prophet through "the Urim and Thummim." He was also the first person baptized into the "Latter Day Saints Church," being baptized by the hands of Joseph Smith, Jr., the prophet. This tract is a flashlight on the inside of Mormonism, and should be in the hands of all who come in contact with this modern abomination. Address the publisher as above and help him to scatter them broadcast among those in need of such instruction. Ten cents per copy. Write for price in quantities.

—One of our ministers in the south sends us a copy of a tract published by the publishing house of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Nashville, Tenn., entitled "Divine Precedent for Baptism by Affusion," and asks us to publish a refutation of the same in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Fortunately the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST do not need any refutation of the author's arguments. The author relies chiefly on the account of the baptism in the Holy Spirit in the second chapter of Acts for his argument in favor of affusion. The Holy Spirit was poured out or shed forth upon the disciples; therefore baptism is by pouring. The author is oblivious, apparently, to the fact that baptism in the Holy Spirit was not the pouring out of the Spirit, but a result of that pouring out, by reason of which the disciples were "filled with the Holy Spirit." It was their spirits, not their bodies, that were submerged in the Holy Spirit, just as the body is submerged in water in literal baptism. But we refer our brother who sends the tract to the book on "The Form of Baptism," published by the Christian Publishing Company, which answers these arguments and many others in a most thorough manner.

—The home-coming of Paul Moore, our assistant editor, to which we are all looking forward with great pleasure, came nearly being terminated by a tragedy deep as a maelstrom and dark as the shadow of death. On September 1 Brother Moore was fishing in the Yellowstone, and was so carried away with the sport he failed to see that the sun was sinking and was no longer lighting his pathway in the shallows of the river. When he realized that darkness was coming on his path was utterly obliterated. The waters were deep and the current like a millrace. A misstep precipitated him beyond his depth and he was swirled down to what seemed certain death, but fortunately he was borne to a huge rock rising above the surface. Calls for help brought others to the shore, and after hours of trial a rope was floated to his perilous retreat. Fastening this about him, he threw himself out into the current and was swept to the shallows and finally rescued more nearly dead than alive. Fire was soon built on the shore, and he was resuscitated and able to return to camp about midnight after the most hazardous experience of his many adventures by land and sea. Thousands will join with us in thanksgiving that one so capable and devoted to the good and true has been spared to further service to the church and all humanity.

An Elijah Dowie can go to most any of our great cities and establish a congregation and found a church. When Elijah II. went to Chicago he had over $100,000, it is true, to make trumpets blare, and street cars blaze, and the press heralded his sayings, and with which to secure famous auditoriums for the comfortable seating of his hearers, but every body in Chicago knew that "the prophet" was in the city.

It may be said it ought not require $100,000 to establish a true church in one of our cities. It will not, but how comes it that men will give $100,000 for the founding of a false church while we so reluctantly or at least so slowly give $2,000 for the institution of a true Church of Christ in another American city?

Conditions are such that we must have an able evangelist preach in a prominent place widely advertised. There are no brethren to act as hosts. All is hired service. These difficulties ought to inspire us rather than daunt us. We WILL win. Let us quickly double our present gifts and then happily tell of our new church in Manchester.

REGIMENTAL REUNIONS AND FORTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY BATTLE CHICKAMAUGA,

CHATTANOOGA, SEPTEMBER 18-20, 1906.

On September 18, 1906, will occur the forty-third anniversary of the Battle of Chickamauga. It is proposed to celebrate this memorable event with a reunion of the various regiments that participated in this memorable battle and the various battles fought around Chattanooga. This reunion will be held at Chickamauga National Park, September 18, 19 and 20, and the present indications are that it will be the largest and most notable gathering ever held in the South. On the above dates, the remnants from the armies of twelve states, comprising the following: Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas and Kentucky, will assemble, many for the first and last time since they marched from its blood-stained fields, forty-three years ago.

Here is one of the great opportunities for the education of the youth. Don't fail to take your children and show them historic Chattanooga, with all its historical connections. It is the opportunity of a lifetime. Go and see the old war generals and other officers; point out the places of interest on the battlefield; let them show you and explain, in person, the markers erected on the battlefield showing the positions of the opposing armies at the time of battle. It will not be long until none will be left to do this noble work.

It will be many years, if ever again, that such an opportunity will present itself. See that your tickets read via the Louisville & Nashville R. R., the Battlefield Route. Call on your nearest railroad agent for rates and advertising matter pertaining to the reunion, or write nearest representative of the Louisville & Nashville R. R.

Candor.

I found this in the Harbinger and as a specimen of brotherly candor it stands alone.

> "Elder ——— made us a short visit to Bethany, and while here, by request, delivered to us a discourse. He has been laboring amongst us and the Baptists for many years. He was not popular amongst the Baptists and he is not popular amongst our brethren; and I presume, as he is constituted and as other men are constituted, never can be popular in any community.
> "Which are to blame I will not presume to guess. But the world is large enough for all its inhabitants, and if Brother ——— has his eccentricities and peculiarities, other men have something of their own that they had better not have; and, therefore, some forbearance is necessary.
> "I, therefore, think that those who approve Brother ——— should hear him and assist him, and that he ought not to offer his services to any people who neither solicit them nor appreciate them. In so doing, he and the brethren will get along more satisfactorily. A. C."

After reading this I am sure that no one could accuse Brother Campbell of favoritism nor of a desire to puff up his brethren. F. P. ARTHUR.

Grand Rapids, Mich.

Small-St. John at Mexico, Mo.

The Small-St. John meeting is now six days old with six added. The meeting came upon us with but one week's preparation. Last fall seventy-five were added, with baptisms regularly since. Hence, the field has been somewhat gleaned, and the material of that more difficult class to reach. Brother Small is preaching great sermons, the congregations are large and the whole town is pleased and talking the meeting. Men are becoming interested who seldom attend church, and we are confident of splendid results.

St. John is a singer of great power, a fine soloist and chorus leader and above all a sweet spirited Christian. His work among the boys and girls organizing them into a chorus here has been of a very pleasing character. Out of town visitors have been W. T. Moore, W. B. Taylor, Lowell C. McPherson, H. A. Northcutt and J. N. Coil. The additions have included one from another religious body. The meeting will continue at least two weeks longer.

A. W. KOKENDOFFER.

We are here in a meeting with Brother Kokendoffer and the congregation at Mexico, and unless all signs fail we will have a good meeting. Brother St. John is my constant companion in labor. Already we have heard Christ's name confessed and we expect a good day tomorrow (Sunday). The congregations are large and especially attentive and we are hoping that "times of refreshing may come to us all" in the meeting. Brother Kokendoffer is much beloved by the church and by the citizens of the town. He is surely living to serve the people. He freely offers his services to all who may need them, and esteems it a favor to be informed by any one whom he can help. He will visit the aged and sick, the discouraged and unfortunate, read and pray with them, bury the dead and marry the lovers, whenever and wherever called without respect to church or creed. This week he married two couples on the same day and two of the contracting parties were members of another church. He is really the servant of the community and he is known only to be trusted and loved. His work in Mexico in the past five years has been good and only good. He has built up a congregation which now numbers 800, and they have a church building which I have seldom seen excelled anywhere. When our ministers and Christian workers are praying for the evangelists we ask kindly and sincerely to be remembered. Our next meeting will be with R. H. Crossfield, of Owensboro, Ky. We begin there September 23. All the people in Mexico are reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST while the meeting continues. We are scattering them judiciously through the audiences and at each home with the evangelist's themes on for the week.

Primary Superintendent Appointed.

It is with great pleasure that I announce that Mrs. Leonora L. Buxton, 3001 East Sixth street, Kansas City, Mo., has been appointed the primary superintendent of the Christian Church Bible schools in Missouri. Mrs. Buxton will soon be in communication with our primary workers in the Sunday-schools of Missouri, and also will be available for certain field work in conventions and institutes, under the direction of the state superintendent. All who desire to consult her in regard to primary work will write her at the above address, and those who desire to secure her services in conventions and institutes will please write to J. H. Hardin, state superintendent, 311 Century building, Kansas City, Mo.

J. H. HARDIN.

Kentucky Bible Schools.

There are a few items to which we wish to call the attention of our Kentucky Bible schools.

1. We are heavily in debt this year. Unless prompt remittance is made on the part of all delinquent schools, both large and small, we shall come to the state convention in debt for the first time in our history.

2. The program for the Bible school sections of the state convention embraces the names of Marion Lawrance, J. W. McGarvey, E. L. Powell, R. H. Crossfield, Miss Mary A. Finch and President E. Y. Mullins. No finer array of talent has ever been announced. These will speak on Thursday, September 27.

3. The chief topic for discussion in the convention will be our centennial enterprise, "A Bible School Chair in the Bible College." We must raise $25,000 to endow this chair by October 1, 1909. All schools are asked to come prepared to state what share they will assume in the making of this centennial enterprise possible.

This is the most far-reaching step in the interest of Bible school work that has been contemplated by our people. Its accomplishment will insure that every preacher who is educated at the College of the Bible will be trained for efficient Bible school work, and also superintendents and Bible school workers may educate themselves for their special lines of work. Charcoal Kills Bad Breath.

Disagreeable Odor Arising From Indigestion or From Any Habit or Indulgence, Can Be Instantly Stopped.

Sample Package Mailed Free.

Other people notice your bad breath where you would not notice it at all. It is nauseating to other people to stand before them and while you are talking, give them a whiff or two of your bad breath. It usually comes from food fermenting on your stomach. Sometimes you have it in the morning—that awful sour, bilious, bad breath. You can stop that at once by swallowing one or two Stuart Charcoal Lozenges, the most powerful gas and odor absorbers ever prepared.

Sometimes your meals will reveal themselves in your breath to those who talk with you. "You've had onions," or "You've been eating cabbage," and all of a sudden you belch in the face of your friend. Charcoal is a wonderful absorber of odors, as every one knows. That is why Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are so quick to stop all gases and odors of odorous foods, or gas from indigestion.

Don't use breath perfumes. They never conceal the odor, and never absorb the gas that causes the odor. Besides, the very fact of using them reveals the reason for their use. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges in the first place stop for good all sour brash and belching of gas, and make your breath pure, fresh and sweet, just after you've eaten. Then no one will turn his face away from you when you breathe or talk; your breath will be pure and fresh, and besides your food will taste so much better to you at your next meal. Just try it.

Charcoal does other wonderful things, too. It carries away from your stomach and intestines, all the impurities there massed together and which cause the bad breath. Charcoal is a purifier as well as an absorber.

Charcoal is now by far the best, most easy and mild laxative known. A whole boxful will do no harm; in fact, the more you take the better. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made of pure willow charcoal and mixed with just a faint flavor of honey to make them palatable for you, but not too sweet. You just chew them like candy. They are absolutely harmless.

Get a new, pure, sweet breath, freshen your stomach for your next meal, and keep the intestines in good working order. These two things are the secret of good health and long life. You can get all the charcoal necessary to do these wonderful but simple things by getting Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. We want you to test these little wonder workers yourself before you buy them. So send us your full name and address for a free sample of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. Then after you have tried the sample, and been convinced, go to your druggist and get a 25c box of them. You'll feel better all over, more comfortable, and "cleaner" inside.

Send us your name and address to-day and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address

A Great Rally.

On August 26 we had a great rally at Owensboro, consisting of many of the churches in Daviess county and vicinity, in order to secure a better co-operation between all of them in securing preachers to labor with and for them. The meeting was held in the great tabernacle located on the Chautauqua grounds, and is an ideal place for such a meeting. Fully 1,500 people were in attendance. Bro. Walter M. White, of Lexington, was present and preached a splendid sermon. R. H. Crossfield, the ever ready minister of the Owensboro church, presided with grace and dignity. Dinner was served on the ground in great abundance. All present were happy while there and went away happy.

We have a much better prospect for a more united effort in that section than ever before, and we believe it will result in great good. Brother White preached at night in the Christian church house in Owensboro to the delight of a large audience. W. J. Hudspeth.

A Successful Campmeeting.

The first annual encampment of the Wichita Mountain Assembly is now a matter of history. The first effort of the kind ever attempted in this new country by any religious people has come and gone and is pronounced a success.

The meeting was held in the military reservation, on Medicine creek, seven miles northwest of Lawton, Okla. The location was ideal in every way, nature having bestowed her richest gifts upon it. Being near five miles from any white settlement, the majority of those who attended the services were encamped on the grounds.

The preaching was done by two of our ablest Oklahoma ministers, O. L. Smith, of El Reno, and W. A. Merrill, of Hobart. To those who know these brethren it is needless for me to say that the work was well done. Being of a widely different type of men, they were able to present the Gospel from different standpoints. Both men are fully imbued with the spirit of Christ and preach the Word with power.

Prof. C. M. Bliss, of El Reno, conducted the song service. Professor Bliss is an artist in his profession. Much of the success of the meeting was due to the excellent song service under his leadership.

The meeting was a success from two standpoints. In the first place the Gospel was preached, the good seed were sown, and in time the harvest must come. In the second place, the meeting resulted in a permanent organization which will mean much to the Disciples in this new country. The association aims to combine some Chautauqua features with the camp-meeting idea which will enlist many who would not otherwise be interested. Once enlisted, they will get the benefit of the teaching which is to be a special feature of the association, and thus the end will be reached.

The officers for the ensuing year are: C. M. Barnes of Lawton, president; C. M. Bliss of El Reno, vice president; H. C. Stubblefield of Lawton, secretary, and Charles L. Thornton of Faxon, treasurer. These officers, together with three other members to be chosen later, constitute the executive committee. The next encampment will be held during the summer of 1907 somewhere in the Wichita mountains. H. C. Stubblefield, Secretary.

Colorado Assembly.

My month's vacation was spent at Gato, on the "Moffat road," thirty-six miles from Denver. This is indeed in the "lap of the Rockies," and is the place selected by the Disciples of Colorado for their summer assembly. At this place that marvelous feat of engineering, the Moffat road, reaches the height of 8,000 feet, and the canyon through which dashes the beautiful South Boulder creek opens a little and the tops of the sometimes perpendicular walls fall back giving an ideal location for the encampment.

Already more than a hundred acres of pines, rocks and quicken asps have been surveyed off into large lots and a half dozen permanent cottages have been built. A system of waterworks is being completed and by next season a hotel and a store will be added to the accommodations of the place. It is hard to imagine a more ideal place for vacations and summer homes, and for a religious assembly of Christian people, situated as it is so close to Denver, and yet in the midst of the wildest and most beautiful mountain scenery where intense summer heat is not known, and where a ride of an hour and a half on the train brings one to the top of the continental divide, the region of perpetual snow.

The assembly proper lasted this year two weeks. Sessions were held in the forenoons and evenings, the afternoons being given over to rest and recreation. An effort will be made to have the permanent tabernacle ready for the sessions next year, and no pains will be spared to make the program the very best. Among those who helped make the program a success this year were B. B. Tyler, W. B. Craig, Mrs. Cornelia Miles, Hon. Ben C. Hilliard, Crayton S. Brooks, O. W. Lawrence, Chaplain J. P. Lucas, Dr. Oliva Baldwin, Jesse B. Hasten, L. G. Thompson, Miss Mary Carpenter, Mrs. Sudie E. Flint, E. F. Harris and many others. Too much praise can not be given to J. E. Pickett, the president, for the success of this assembly so far. On his shoulders has been the burden of arranging the program.

Northwest Kansas Notes.

A. R. Poe, of Colby, comes to Dresden to live and preach half time for this worthy congregation. They have a building recently dedicated and nicely furnished and are hoping for splendid things during Brother Poe's ministry, as he is a worker and has a strong hold on the community already.——M. J. Hibbs is doing a fine work at Hill City and Roscoe, in spite of a long siege of sickness in his family, which has hindered him much.——Brother Gilpin and wife are at Agra, and though they have been there but a short time, have already formed a strong feeling of fellowship, having won the confidence and love of the people. They are young, energetic workers and have an enthusiastic church membership, composed largely of young people whose sterling worth is of great value to the cause in that community. Agra church will prosper.——We hear that Bro. F. U. Harmon is doing some good work in and around Norcatur, and that a church building at Kanona is now assured.——The first service was recently held in our new church building at Lenora. They hope to have a meeting this fall. Brother Mulkey has worked faithfully to accomplish what has been done in this neglected field.——The writer and wife spent two weeks at Logan, presenting Christian evidences and the plea of the Christian church to the people of that community. Large audiences attended and splendid interest was manifested. Charles McVay was present the last week of the meeting and his solos were enjoyed by all. No organization was effected on account of having to give up the opera house before any permanent work could be accomplished, but they hope to reap from this sowing not many days hence, for the people with one accord gave heed to things which were taught.——We begin at Clay Center on the 9th and will likely be there two weeks or longer, before returning to our work at Ukiah, Cal. Otha Wilkison.

August in Oregon.

Although the month has furnished its share of hot weather, the work in Oregon has forged ahead. One victory that will cause all to rejoice is the payment of the remaining $450 held against our state work by the Salem State Bank. This is one fruit of the Turner convention and of Brother Rains' visit to Oregon. There remain yet $400 to be paid on the old debt, but there are pledges outstanding to fully cover this amount. If all those making pledges at the state convention and to the secretary prior to the convention, will send in the amounts pledged, the whole debt may be canceled by October 1. If these pledges are not sent in soon they will interfere with the November offering for our missionary entetprises, planned in convention. Remember, brethren, "2,000 conversions and $6,000 for Oregon missions."

Another victory was marked by the dedication of a neat and commodious chapel in the town of Woodburn. This is also a fruit of Turner plans. The building was erected by the help of the central district, and is largely the work of our beloved and efficient "church builder," Bro. L. F. Stephens. The writer and two other preachers had the privilege of helping a few days—long enough to testify to the efficiency of Brother Stephens' work. This work is not only a victory for the central district, but also for the whole brotherhood. Our people now have a suitable home in this important but difficult field. The dedication took place August 26. The dedicatory sermon was preached by our president, J. W. Jenkins, and the evening sermon by Brother Stephens. Everything went off well, and those present pledged more than was asked for on the occasion. Let us have more work like this; it will do us good.

All will regret to learn of the burning of the church at Phoenix, where a little band of Disciples has been unholding the banner of the Christ. They will likely need aid in rebuilding. We are all "one in Christ Jesus." Don't forget November 4. F. E. BILLINGTON, Cor. Sec.

The Madison (Mo.) Meeting.

The gifted A. N. Lindsey, New Franklin, Mo., left for his home to-day, after a continuous service here of over four weeks. Seventy-nine, for the most part by baptism, were added. The most remarkable feature was that two-thirds or more were men. There was no unusual excitement, but the whole community was stirred to a permanent betterment. Lindsey is a power in both public and private work, and can do a better work next year than this even. After nineteen months of quiet work on the part of the church and the writer, during which time about 25 were added, and for half-time preaching, repairs, missions and benevolence about $1,700 raised and expended, we were ready for a victory, but the most sanguine did not anticipate such a great one. Fourteen were added last night, and auditorium and Sunday-school rooms crowded to the doors. This gives us a membership of over 400 and otherwise increases our endowments and possibilities. Lindsey, with a cheerfulness that graciously commends him, took all the burden he could from my shoulders in deference to my physical ailments, and made it one of the most pleasant meetings of my life. He does not count himself a professional evangelist, but has the native and acquired ability to make him a most successful one. Except the regular evening offering, no special calls were made for funds, but by the quiet plan inaugurated by one of the best boards with which I ever labored we will have a surplus in the treasury. Bro. P. Hales, with the chorus he has led for several years, even surpassed himself by the efficient aid of Miss Sinnie Frank at the piano. I. B. CORWINE,

CHURCH DEDICATIONS.

Minden, Neb.

The new Christian church at Minden, Neb., was dedicated Sunday, August 26. W. J. Lhamon, dean of the Bible College of Missouri, preached the sermon and raised the money to cover the debt on the building. One thousand dollars were needed. About $1,050 were raised during the day. Brother Lhamon proved to be the right man in the right place. His sermons were scholarly, logical and full of the Word. His pleasant manner of presentation kept the audience in good humor while the money was being raised. No church makes a mistake in calling Brother Lhamon to dedicate for them. Although it was a great day for the Minden church, nine months ago there were only a handful of discouraged members worshiping (without a pastor) in an old tumbled down building, an eyesore to the city and a disgrace to the cause of Christ.

Last November Burton H. Whiston was called to the pastorate. Since he has been here the work has taken marvelous strides. Forty have been added, a new house of worship at $3,000 built and paid for and a large increase in the attendance at all the services of the church. Peace and harmony dwell within; the entire congregation are with their pastor. The future of the church looks very bright.

THOMAS SHIRLEY,

Chairman of Official Board.

Chanute, Kan.

September 2 was a red letter day in the history of the Chanute (Kan.) church. We began our building four months ago at an estimated cost of $3,500. We raised $2,500, leaving $1,000 to raise on dedication day, and made our plans that way. We secured Bro. M. M. Davis, of Dallas, Texas, to help us on that great day. But when we gathered up all of the bills and had a meeting of the board on Monday night before, we found we had expended $4,350. So there were $1,850 to raise. To help this surprise Saturday morning it began raining. Brother Davis came through the rain. Very few came out to the consultation meeting Saturday night. Sunday morning it was still raining. Even Brother Davis, with all his experience and courage, said: "We can't do it." By 11 o'clock the house was well filled, the large chorus did splendid work, the spirit began to rise. Brother Davis preached his master sermon on "Our Plea," at the close of which a splendid young man united with the church. Everybody was hopeful. Brother Davis made a plain, simple call for pledges to meet this indebtedness. The responses came faster than the clerks could record them. No large gifts, $50 was the largest given by any one man; but it seemed that they all gave something. A large number of young people gave $5 or $10 apiece. When counted up we had $1,250. At night we raised $100 more. Then the board assumed the $500 still lacking and we dedicated the church with great rejoicing. It was still raining. The offerings are still coming in from those who were not there, and we are sure the remaining $500 will soon be met. Considering that one year ago our old building was under mortgage we feel that we have great cause to thank God and take courage. G. W. KITCHEN,

Pastor.

Rennselaer, Ind.

The church was organized with forty-four members on April 17, 1887, by E. O. Sharpe, in the house of worship owned by the church of God. A lot was purchased in 1888, and the first church home was dedicated by J. P. Ewing in January, 1891. The church has been blessed with an efficient company of godly men for officers. Among the elders we mention Dr. I. B. Washburn, W. H. H. Graham, G. H. Brown, J. H. Cox, W. H. Coover, W. S. Day, C. W. Coen, J. L. Brady, James Leatherman.

The following ministers have served the church: B. E. Utz, January 1889-1893; J. L. Brady, October 1893-1896; L. H. Findley, 1896 (Died within the year); W. S. Moore, October, 1896-1898; N. H. Shepherd, 1898-1899; A. L. Ward, July, 1899-1902; T. A. Hall, January 1902-1904; J. M. Elam, January, 1904-1905; G. H. Clarke, January, 1905.

The church has always been evangelistic. E. O. Sharpe, J. V. Coombs, N. C. Brewer, Robert Howe, W. F. Shearer, have all held good meetings, as have almost all the pastors. Since the church's organization 590 persons have united with it. There are now about 300 members. The church has always had an excellent Sunday-school and Ladies' Aid Society. The Junior and Senior Christian Endeavor societies, together with the Auxiliary to the C. W. B. M., have each assisted in promoting the Lord's work.

The erection of a new house of worship that would be suited to the church's growing needs, was first seriously contemplated by A. L. Ward. After him came T. A. Hall, who did much pioneer work in preparing the church for the task. The building project did not take definite form until Brother Elam became pastor. It was due to his optimisim that much of the money and plans for the new building were secured. In 1905 G. H. Clarke became pastor. The contract was let and the work of construction and the raising of funds went steadily on until it was ready to be dedicated to the Lord.

The building is 89x66, and has a basement under the entire structure. It is of pressed brick laid in red mortar, with stone and white mortar trimmings. The foundation is of stone and cement blocks. It is heated by a double furnace. The floor of the main audience room is bowled and seated with circular pews. The Sunday-school room is provided with chairs and can be thrown into the main room. The two will seat about 800 people.

There are three beautiful memorial windows filling the north end of the main audience room. One of the smaller ones is in memory of Mr. and Mrs. George N. Brown, and is a reproduction of "Christ in the Garden." The main window is in honor of Dr. and Mrs. I. B. Washburn, and is a reproduction of "Christ in the Temple." The third is in memory of Jessie Bartoo, and represents "Christ Risen." There are three large rose windows in the gables.

This church was dedicated last Sunday by J. H. O. Smith, of Valparaiso, Ind. Four thousand dollars was called for and almost the entire amount was raised and the house dedicated to God. The building and furnishings cost $11,000. Brother Smith proved himself a master of assemblies, a prince at raising money, an eloquent and faithful preacher of the Gospel. On Monday evening he delivered a practical lecture on "Gumption," to a crowded house. The day will long be remembered by the church as one of the high days in its history. G. H. Clarke.

Salem, Ind.

On August 26, after a year of hard labor, the good people of Salem, Ind., gathered to dedicate their beautiful new church. It was certainly a beautiful sight, the house complete to the minutest details, the grounds beautiful with green and flowers and the interior abloom from choir loft to entrance. Everywhere seemed to be gladness.

The house was full when services began, and through the intense heat every one remained deeply interested in every part of the program. The music was fine, the grand new vocalion adding greatly to the inspiration of all the services.

After the communion service F. T. Porter, of New Albany, preached the dedicatory sermon.

The afternoon was filled with music and short, bright addresses by local ministers. The Presbyterian minister said one thing he noticed was that we (the Church of Christ) were everywhere in evidence, and nothing could put us down or put us out of sight. All seemed anxious to forget they were anything but Christians.

The treasurer's report was an especially interesting part of the program. We learned that about $4,500 had been spent, and every cent of indebtedness was paid and money in the treasury.

The dedication by the membership in concert was long to be remembered. In the evening watchwords were called for, and out of a large number of very suggestive ones the church voted to adopt "This church a magnet to draw and hold all classes to Christ and Christian living." Under this it was expected to make use of many suggested plans for growth and work.

Then came the evening sermon by F. T. Porter, which was given fine attention.

The new church at Salem is a fact because Bro. W. Y. Allen, the minister for the past five years, had the will, executive ability and untiring energy to make it so. He alone thought it possible, but all stood loyally by him in his plans, and now a brick building that has aid society, C. E., prayer-meeting and study rooms, besides the main auditorium, takes the place of the old brick of one room. The aid society, as usual, was most useful. The young ladies and Sunday-school also shared in the burdens. This is the sixth church Brother Allen has built. May it ever be spiritually as materially a monument to him. May the love of his people and community ever, as now, be his. Mrs. F. T. Porter.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Coffeyville, Kan., Sept. 10.—Meeting one week old; twenty-eight additions. Ellis Purlee is pastor.—Cooksey and Parks.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Belpre, Kan., Sept. 5.—Meeting closed; 50 additions, $2,700 raised for new building. Expect to dedicate $4,000 house in four months; then we return for another meeting. Chicago next.—H. E. Wilhite.

His sermon on "Beauty and Basis of Christian Union" is great. To indicate the temper of our fellowship in Mexico the pastor of the Christan church preached in the Baptist church to a large audience Sunday morning. We believe in fellowship. The field is great and difficult, but we believe victory will be ours.—A. W. Kokendoffer.

St. Joseph, Sept. 4.—Three confessions and one addition by statement to Mitchell Park congregation during August. J. L. Harris, representing the Christian Publishing Company, was here Sept. 3, and with our assistance secured about thirty subscriptions to The Christian-Evangelist. More subscriptions will likely follow.—C. A. Lowe.

Trenton, Mo., September 8.—We are driving through Missouri in our gospel wagon and are having good opportunities to preach the Gospel. "Vice is a monster of such horrid mien,
That to be dreaded, needs but to be seen.
But, seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

There is that so suggestive of omnipotence in a dauntless "No" as to establish the divine origin of the one who pronounces it. All the future belongs to the man who will make a "No" ring out over the multitude and then not waver before lions' dens, fiery furnaces, or contemptuous sneers.

To one with God's sense of proportion he that governeth himself is greater than he that governeth a city but is subject to his own caprices and the inbreathings of Satan. The consciousness of self-mastery under Bible directions is a most superb and satisfactory possession. The feeling of true royalty and sovereignty over the empire of one's own life is worth more than it costs of self-restriction and denial.

In all the realm of diplomacy there is no other art equal to that of saying "Yes" and "No" honestly. When one whose honesty has been proven takes refuge in either of these fortresses the batteries of the evil one are trained elsewhere—he knows they are invulnerable. When an irresolute man says either, the enemy has located him in fragile defenses, concentrates his artillery on this one point and soon receives his capitulation.

The invaders' ammunition was almost exhausted. Another charge and they would have fled in confusion across the border. Alas, the patriot defenders knew it not; they were disheartened, they rested on their arms, and that land is a vassal that might have been a new star in the constellation of freedom. So with those withstanding wine. Perhaps the last thirst pang has been endured. Resist longer, assume the offensive, and perchance this time the fiend of the still will flee.

Intelligence will save the strong-willed from the weakness of obstinacy. Resoluteness has to do with principles rather than specific acts. The stubborn man may say, "I will never enter a saloon," and will see a tempted man stand before the bar and will not enter to lead him away because of his vow. Another equally resolute would vow, "I will not patronize the saloon," and is free to rescue the unfortunate. A will of steel adaptable to circumstances is better than one of unadjustable cast iron.

In knightly tournaments determination, stamina, persistency were often more potent factors in the winning of the victory than length of blade or strength of arm. In the tempted's conflicts with Bacchus these same qualities are much more availing than high-sounding declarations of independence or scathing denunciation. In these contests between men and the rum demon choose as victors not the men of handsome form, stately carriage, brilliancy of mind and eloquence of tongue, but rather those of courage, grit, indomitable will.

THE VALUE OF TEMPTATION.—James 1:12.

"Yield not to temptation,
For yielding is sin;
Each victory will help you
Some other to win;
Press valiantly onward,
Dark passions subdue;
Look ever to Jesus;
He'll carry you through."

It never has been satisfactorily proven that there is value in briars, diseases and temptations. In themselves they are part of the primal curse. The world would be happier and better without them. It is our duty to eradicate them from the earth and try to make of land and sea a paradise without a thorn, pain, pest or tempter. God is not the author of temptations. They spring from Satan's baleful influence among men.

God sends us the good angels—opportunities to do good and become better—and it is our joy to receive them. Satan sends the bad angels—temptations to do wrong—and it is our salvation to reject them. Many treat temptations as if they were heavenly emissaries to be cherished and reluctantly relinquished, if at all—folly as great as warming the dormant viper in one's bosom. No matter how luring they are, they are demoniacal and the wise will treat them as deadly foes.

Temptations are not necessary to the development of sterling characters. That the youth is temperate can be otherwise determined than by beguiling him into the saloon. Many sins that haunt the memories of men and taint many a beautiful ideal would never have been known to them nor injured them had they not been deceived into believing that they were not really virtuous till they had come into ungloved contact with sin and vanquished it. Scars may show we have been through the flames, but why burn tinsel in our faces for the sake of having scars?

There is a sinful temptation to put one's self in the way of temptation. Men have gone into the lion's cage to see what the lion would do. The lion did according to the lion nature, but the inquisitive adventurer never told of it. Men have gone all the way to hell just to see what is along the route and to determine whether they could resist the fascinations. Amidst flames and wailings they learned they were baubles in Satan's hands, who leered as he tossed them toward the iron gates.

If there is value in temptation it lies in revealing to us our weakness and sinfulness and absolute need of a Father's love and an elder Brother's ceaseless vigils and companionship. For there is nothing really beautiful or attractive in any article of temptation Satan fabricates or in any staging, sylvan, astronomical, commercial, social or political, he may set. It is not outer charms so much as inner depravity that lures, affects our judgment, paralyzes our moral sensibilities and destroys us. May all temptations drive us only closer to our sources of strength and grace.

That God made the elements of which temptations are composed in no wise makes him responsible for the wicked combinations men have made of them. God never built a still nor inspired others to. As well hold him responsible for every murderous bullet as for a compounded narcotic. There is grace acquired by resisting invading temptations, but guilt involved in helping one into being, or setting it in the way, or in any wise subjecting others to its influence.

THIRD QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Memory Verse, Matt. 16:25.

Golden Text.—And they were astonished at his doctrine; for his word was with power.—Luke 4:32.

The lessons of the past quarter are from the latter part of the ministry of Jesus, beginning about the time of his final departure from Galilee and ending in Tuesday of Passion Week. Most of the lessons are from the period known as the Perean ministry.

In every one of the lessons we find presented some important items of the teaching of Jesus. In these final months of his ministry we would certainly expect that he would be dealing with no trivial matter but giving the last touch of emphasis to the teaching which he considered most vitally important. The passages chosen for the lessons are fairly representative of the body of his teaching during this period.

For the review, therefore, especially with adult classes, it will be profitable to disregard the historical incidents and to summarize and systematize the teachings of Jesus as found in these lessons. Every teacher and student should go over the lessons and make out such a list as the following (only fuller, if possible), giving the important teachings of the several lessons:

1. Jesus and the Children.—Humility and forgiveness; the need of sacrifice for salvation; God's care for the lost.
2. The Duty of Forgiveness.—Divine forgiveness granted only to the forgiving; the efficacy of prayer.
3. The Good Samaritan.—Helpfulness to the poor; obligation to help all needy persons, regardless of race or condition.
4. Jesus Teaching How to Pray.—God is a loving Father; men are God's children; therefore pray with confidence.
5. Jesus Dines with a Pharisee.—The supreme value of man as compared with things or institutions; humility.
6. False Excuses.—Contrast between God's willingness to save and man's unwillingness to be saved; the Gospel for the poor and despised.
7. The Parable of the Two Sons.—God's love for the lost; the sonship even of sinners; the salvability of man; duty toward the lowly and outcast.
8. The Judge, Pharisee and Publican.—Persistence in prayer; humility, even with sin, better than self-sufficient righteousness.
9. The Rich Young Ruler.—Insufficiency of legal righteousness; necessity of entire surrender; danger of riches.
10. Bartimaeus and Zacchaeus.—Mercy on the poor; kindness to the despised; a hated sinner saved by friendship.
11. Jesus Enters Jerusalem in Triumph.—A peaceful triumph; rebuke to unholy traffic in the name of religion; pity for the poor and halt.
12. Jesus Silences Pharisees and Sadducees.—Political loyalty consistent with religious liberty; the resurrection and a spiritual state.

Make a topical grouping of these and any other moral and spiritual principles that Jesus taught in these lessons. What did he teach about God? About man? About the duty of man to man? About the relation of man to God? Are any principles much emphasized in the teaching of Jesus which are usually neglected at this day? Does Jesus seem to omit or touch lightly upon any things which the church has been in the habit of emphasizing?

Current Literature

The Religion of the New Testament. By Prof. Weiss. Funk and Wagnalls Company, New York. Pages 440. Price $2.00 net.

It was fifty years ago that the author of this volume began his academic career with a lecture on "The Relation of Exegesis to Biblical Theology." In that address was emphasized the fact that a purely historical account of the different types of doctrine furnished by the theology of the New Testament must be supplemented by a work giving the underlying unity of this diversity. This book is the outcome of this idea. It is a summary of dogmatic conclusions, the author's answer as to what the religion of the New Testament really is. His aim is to permit the Scriptures to speak for themselves. We may have more to say about the book later. Though we think the distinguished professor makes some mistakes, his book is one that has to be reckoned with as that of a scholar and a man who speaks out of long experience.

Questions of Faith. A Series of Lectures on the Creed. New York. A. C. Armstrong and Son. Pages 212, price $1.50.

Here we have some of the best thought, by some of the foremost theologians, on some of the greatest questions of our religion. The book appeals to every thinking man for any one of the three reasons we have suggested. The writers are all Scotchmen and holding front rank in that country where theology is almost as much discussed as oatmeal is eaten. "What is God?" is treated by Prof. James Orr. Prof. H. R. Mackintosh discusses "Is Christ the Son of God?" Dr. Marcus Dods considers the question, "Did Christ Rise from the Dead?" Prof. John Laidlaw gives his answer to the question, "What do We Mean by the Holy Spirit?" Principal Lindsay writes on "What is the Catholic Church?" Prof. James Denney answers the question, "Can Sin be Forgiven?" and P. Carnegie Simson considers the problem, "Is There Life After Death?" These various themes were presented in seven lectures to enormous British audiences. They form a fine apologetic, and the fact that they were cast for popular presentation and go straight to the heart of the matters of which they treat is their greatest merit.

The Life and Work of the Rev. E. J. Peck Among the Eskimos. By the Rev. Arthur Lewis, New York. A. C. Armstrong and Son. Pages 350, price $1.75.

From time to time heralds of the gospel have worked on the Greenland, Labrador, and other northern coasts, but to Edmund James Peck belongs the distinction of being the first missionary who has devoted his whole life to the Eskimos. As a lad he entered the British navy in which he served for ten years. During this time his heart and mind were being prepared for the conviction which came to him that he could be useful as a Christian worker in the polar regions. After a few months spent in the training school of the Church Missionary Society of London, he went to his chosen field in 1876, so that for about thirty years he has been breaking the word to "that people whose native name, 'Innuet,' means 'The people', and who have the belief that they really are the salt of the earth and the highest type of humanity." This book is as interesting as a novel, and we wish we had the space to give many excerpts or a lengthy summary of its contents. The ordinary life of the native is graphically set forth, and we glean here what we do not get from most books written about the northern seas. How brave a man is this England missionary may be seen from the fact that but one ship each year reaches the station on the Little Whale River, and that only once in six months does the overland mail come to him.

ALL WILL WANT
QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS
BY S. D. GORDON
The author of "Quiet Talks on Prayer" (now in its 55th thousand), and "Quiet Talks on Power" (now in its 80th thousand).
Cloth, 12mo. 288 pages. Net 75c.

"QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS" is an attempt to group up in simplest Anglo-Saxon English the statements of the entire Bible regarding Jesus. The purpose is wholly practical, that one may get at a glance, for his own thought and heart, the swing of the Bible from end to end on its central theme.
Mr. Gordon's life work has been leading up to the theme of this new book.

TOPICAL ARRANGEMENT
FIRST—The purpose of Jesus' coming; the plan of his coming; the tragic break that occurred in the plan; the surprises that worked out of that break.
SECOND—The Person of Jesus from three points of view: the human; the divine; the winsomeness of his personality.
THIRD—The seven great outstanding experiences which reveal Jesus: the Jordan Baptism; the Wilderness Temptation; the Transfiguration as an emergency unusual; the Gethsemane struggle; the Victory of Calvary.
FOURTH—Study Notes. One of the most important features of the book, making it possible for the earnest reader to follow for himself Mr. Gordon's essential methods.

What Principles Are Involved?

J. H. Garrison, Editor CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

I am interested in your paper and am in love with the spirit of charity and co-operation with other Christian bodies, but as to federation, I do not understand and would like to be informed as to what extent so-called federation put in practice might involve the foundation principles for which the Church of Christ stands. I wish information that I may know myself and also give answer when asked. MRS. M. C. PETERSON.

Beaver City, Neb.

While we feel that the question asked in the foregoing has been sufficiently answered in the discussion in our columns, we have no disposition to refuse answer to the courteous and evidently sincere question which our sister asks. Federation as it is proposed and advocated by many leaders in all the religious bodies, is simply a method of co-operation among Christian people to the extent that is possible, under present conditions, without any sacrifice of conscience or principle. It, therefore, involves the principle of brother love, of the charity that thinketh no evil, and of the unity of the spirit—principles which are vital and fundamental in our religious movement. It does not involve the violation of any of these "foundation principles," but it involves the putting into practice of these principles, just as far as can be done. Of course no one among us is opposed to this kind of Federation, when he understands what it is. Nothing different is proposed.—EDITOR.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

How much we need divine guidance in all the walks of life, the many pitfalls for unwary feet, the great strength of will power needed to overcome the evil. When we are happy we think the world a good place and think little of the future, but when sorrow comes and the heart is sad everything seems to say, "Look higher." I would like to hear from others on this subject. Personally I do not believe it was intended for us mortals to be perfectly happy on this earth. If so, we would set our hearts too much on "things that perish with the using." This subject is an old one but much could yet be said upon it, and as I write, these words come to me—

"Must I be carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease,
While others fought to win the prize
And sail through bloody seas."

Local Federation a Blessing.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

For seven consecutive Lord's day evenings we have tested "Federation" in union services, and we arise to say that, so far as Ponca City is concerned, federation will work, and it has worked here without the sacrifice of a single Gospel declaration, and hence nobody sacrificed any conscience in the federation. Our audiences were large and all the churches engaged,—Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians and Christians greatly enjoyed the services. We are all now making preparations for big revival meeting. Our work in the Christian church moves along nicely.

Diocesan Bishops.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Does the New Testament teach that there are bishops or elders other than those of the local congregation?

Did not the Apostle Paul's "care of all the churches" grow out of his office as apostle, instead of out of his office as bishop or elder. Yours for truth, J. H. BOYD.

No, there are no bishops or elders known to the New Testament except those for local churches. The apostles, no doubt, had a sort of general supervision of all the churches, at least within certain districts where they labored, but, as indicated, this oversight was by virtue of their apostolic office. The Diocesan Bishop came in later than New Testament time though the advocates of "the Historic Episcopate" hold that the seeds of this new order of things were sown by the apostles, yet, as it seems to us, without sufficient evidence.—EDITOR.

"Step Lively, Please!"

As up and down this world I fare,
And try to get to anywhere,
This startling cry assaults the air:
"Step lively, please!"

If on the trolley car I seek
My way to find by question meek,
With strident voice conductors shriek:
Step lively, please!"

If from the ferryboat I go
To pick my way through mud or snow,
Loud the policeman shouts his "Ho!
Step lively, please!"

Then into upper air I fly,
To take the "L," and with it try
To flee from that pursuing cry:
"Step lively, please!"

At last I turn my weary feet
Down subway stairs beneath the street—
To hear, alas; the guard repeat:
"Step lively, please!"

I wonder will it be my fate
To hear St. Peter at the gate
Say: "Come, you are a little late.
Step lively, please!" —The Century.

PART III.

CHAPTER XI.

There was an awkward silence as Raymund and Rhoda stared at the uncle, now seen for the first time; then Mr. William Hodges turned to Miss Pinns inquiringly. "What is wanted?" he asked. "Whatever you do, Miss Pinns, is approved by me."

"These young people," said Miss Pinns, showing her black tooth at the twins in her most hostile manner, "claim that you are their uncle."

"Nonsense," said the old man, leaning heavily upon his two canes, and staring hard through the upper division of his divided lenses.

"That's what I told them," cried Miss Pinns, triumphantly. "Of course, in a sense you are everybody's uncle," and she nodded her head toward the sign of the three golden balls. Mr. Hodges looked rather displeased at this, and said to Raymund, "Now, sir, what do you want?"

"I am Raymund Revore, and this is my sister Rhoda. Our mother is dead—she was your sister—and we have come here, hoping you can help us, for we have nothing."

Miss Pinns looked inquiringly at the old man. He said: "What was your mother's name?"

"Susie Revore. We lived here till Rhoda and I were six years old, then we moved to Crawley. Mother wrote to you from time to time, but you never answered."

"Well!" cried Miss Pinns, "that ought to have told you it was no use coming here!"

"Your mother was my half-sister," said the old man, begrudgingly.

"And so," cried Miss Pinns, "he is only your half-uncle, and that doesn't count!"

"I had nothing to answer your mother," continued Mr. Hodges. "I was sorry for her, but I am poor myself. Sometimes I thought I would write just to tell her I was sorry, but somehow I didn't. When you don't see a person, you neglect such things. I am a poor man to-day. I don't know what I can do for you."

"Are you a pawnbroker, Uncle William?" asked Raymund, doubtfully.

"No," said Mr. Hodges, turning red. "My business is second-hand clothes and other odds and ends. In connection with the clothing department it is true I conduct what you might call a pawnshop; but it is purely a side issue. I should never call myself a pawnbroker, or allow any one else to do so."

"I should think not!" cried Miss Pinns.

"Uncle William," said Rhoda, walking up to him, "can't you take us in, and let us help you? We have no other relation in the world; you are our only chance; don't send us away, when we have no place to go!"

"Don't stand so close to Mr. Hodges," exclaimed Miss Pinns, "you will strike one of his canes."

The bowed old man looked at Rhoda uneasily. "As I said, I am a poor man. How can I afford to keep two healthy young appetites?"

"We do not eat very much," said Raymund, hopefully, "and we are in such trouble!"

"We have troubles that belong to us," said Miss Pinns, "and they are enough for us to nurse without borrowing other people's offsprings."

"Uncle William!" said Rhoda, laying her hand on his arm, "I can cook for you and clean your house and do as much as a woman. And Raymund is strong and always ready to help."

"The room over this shop," said Mr. Hodges, "is just filled with goods. You might sleep there."

"No beds!" cried Miss Pinns.

"Those second-hand beds," said Mr. Hodges, in a conciliatory voice.

"Poof!" cried Miss Pinns, impatiently plumping herself down upon the high stool and striking the leg with an impatient heel. "Poof!" Mr. Hodges looked at Miss Pinns as if he hardly dared meet her eyes, then gazed upon the eager blue eyes and the silken hair of Rhoda. Oh, what a difference. No wonder Rhoda won the day! Presently she and Raymund went out to the lamppost to tell Wizzen they were to stay, and Wizzen agreed to notify them, should he move Mrs. Weed from the vacant lot. That night the brother and sister slept in the barn-like space above the shop. It was only a half-story, and the roof came down to the floor on three sides. In the highest place there was barely room to stand up. There was a variety of bedsteads, from which they selected two, and any number of quilts and spreads and pillows. They had no light in the room to go to bed by, but through the one low window came the rays from the street. Mr. Hodges was a miser, and would not allow them the use of a lamp. The attic, for such the place really was, was cumbered with broken and mended furniture, and it was easy enough to partition off Rhoda's corner and give her perfect privacy. She felt strange in the gloomy place with the roof so low she might have reached up from her bed to touch the ceiling. Although furniture was stacked all about her, she did not feel that she was alone, and presently to test her walls, she whispered, "Raymund!"

Then Raymund from his bed whispered, "What is it?"

"Good night," whispered Rhoda, smiling in the darkness, and knowing he could hear, she fell asleep. The days passed with their uncle William were uneventful. Most of the housekeeping was thrust upon the girl. Raymund was taught to clean and press old clothes. He and his uncle spent most of the day in the back room at this work. Miss Pinns managed the shop and its owner. She had originally been employed as Mr. Hodges's housekeeper, and while he attended to customers, she had kept the house clean and had done the cooking. Gradually she had risen in the world, and as she rose Mr. Hodges fell. Miss Pinns had known how to play upon his emotions, all of which were directly connected with his own personal money-question. Though the old man had no kindred except the orphans, he toiled from early dawn till night in making all he could and trying to save all he had. Miss Pinns encouraged him as nobody else ever had. She made him think that she admired his stinginess, that she considered his miserliness a noble quality; and to the degree that she made his conscience easy, Mr. Hodges felt the need of Miss Pinns. She may have had a great deal of heart, but it never appeared in her business relations. When some poor wretch entered the shop to pawn his last piece of jewelry, Miss Pinns would beat him down to the last penny, and then send him away with a generous display of her black tooth that said: "I have half a mind to give you up to the police!" Mr. Hodges never attended to the work of the pawnshop. He despised it, and would have despised himself for having it run, if Miss Pinns had not known how to ease the burden of his conscience. It was not from philanthropy or pity that the lady was so careful of the old gentleman, or that she made herself so necessary to him. She had not been his housekeeper longer than a week before she had made up her mind to marry him in spite of himself. The old bach-

A Noted Minister and Doctor of Atlanta, Ga., is Meeting with Wonderful Success.

Those who have long doubted whether there really is a permanent cure for catarrh will be glad to learn that a southern physician, Rev. J. W. Blosser, M. D., of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a method whereby catarrh can be cured to the very last symptom without regard to climate or condition. So that there may be no misgivings about it, he will send a free sample to any man or woman without expecting payment. The regular price of the remedy is $1.00 for a box containing one month's treatment.

The Doctor's remedy is radically different from all others, and the results he has achieved seem to mark a new era in the scientific cure of catarrh, foul breath, hawking and spitting, stopped-up feeling in nose and throat, coughing spells, difficult breathing, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis and the many other symptoms of a bad case of catarrh.

If you wish to see for yourself what this remarkable remedy will do, send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive the free package and an illustrated book.

elor had held her at bay thus long, but Miss Pinns could afford to bide her time, because she was so much younger; she felt sure she would have him at last, and what was a good deal more important, as she regarded it, she would have the shop, too. Mr. Hodges might talk as much as he pleased about being a poor man. Miss Pinns knew better, and she knew he had not only a snug sum of money in the bank, but a larger amount buried somewhere about the place. Where it was buried she had never been able to discover, but she was watching.

Of course, the busy life of the orphans interfered somewhat with their studies, but not fatally. Raymund bought coal oil out of his own money, and he worked so diligently that Mr. Hodges could not begrudge his using it in one of his second-hand lamps. To one looking for an excuse to keep from having to study, the stay at the pawnshop would have seemed a perfect gold mine. There were enough excuses to have supplied a hundred high school students. Rhoda cooked, scrubbed, swept, dusted, marketed, and, thanks to the second-hand dresses that were given her as a reward, kept herself neat. Raymund ironed, stamped, applied gasoline and various other liquids to discolored fabrics with a skill that constantly grew finer and surer, and even sewed. But study they would. There was no other way for them to ever become the man and woman they were resolved to become, and, fortunately, they realized this truth. On Mr. Omer's farm, while acting as nurse to Baby, Raymund had started out as he meant to continue. In the orphan home, Rhoda, though busily pressed by cares and surrounded by many noisy children, had entered upon her career. Her first success in that career came while living with her uncle. Behold! In one of the great St. Louis dailies there appeared one Sunday morning, almost engulfed in a mass of special articles and colored illustrations, the following:

"A CROWN OF OTHER HALVES.

"By Rhoda Revore.

"When but a child, so many deeds
Of good I longed to do;
But strength was wanting my young hands—
Was it not so with you?

"Good works I started many times
While earth and heaven smiled,
Then had to leave them half undone
Because I was a child.

"Now in old age among the wreck
Of hopes deferred I stand.
I find the cloak of good I weave
Half finished in my hand.

"Last night I dreamt myself beyond
The storms of life's wild sea.
An angel came and brought the Crown
Of Other Halves to me,—

"'The other halves of deeds half wrought,
The second word of kindness
The aid that should have followed thought,
The chance lost in our blindness.

"And when I woke, I said, 'Henceforth
No doubt shall make me shirk.
Where'er, whene'er I can, I will Begin some loving work.

"And if to finish it, the power
Should never here be given,
Perhaps the Other Half may help
To gild my crown in heaven."

"Why, Rhoda!" exclaimed Raymund, with a surprised smile, as he came down stairs to go with her to church and found her poring over this article, "you have bought a Sunday paper. How reckless!" For he knew nothing of her plot.

"Come here, Ray," said Rhoda, and she tried hard to keep her voice from quavering. "I want to show you something!" Raymund peeped over her shoulder and caught sight of her name. He grabbed the paper out of her hand. The shop was shut up for the day. Miss Pinns was in her room at the back of the house, and the twins were alone. Suddenly Raymund turned and took Rhoda in his arms and Rhoda began to sob—but she was very happy. "Doesn't it look handsome!" she murmured. "And right on the same page with an extract from Kipling and another from Oliver Wendell Holmes! And it is all set up right, except it says, 'The cloak of good I grieve.'"

"Does it?" exclaimed Raymund, looking at the line. "I didn't notice that; I read it weave from the jump. I don't believe anybody will notice it."

"And if they do," said Rhoda, hopefully, "they will be sure to know what I meant, won't they?"

"Of course they will, if they aren't idiots. Oh, Rhoda, how proud I am of you! Why, that's as good as any poetry I ever read! I never read much," he added, truthfully; "I haven't had time. How could you ever get a chance to make this up?"

"It was when I was scrubbing the floors," said Rhoda, softly. "The work was so hateful to me, and so mean and—and unworthy of me, it seemed, that I wondered if I couldn't ennoble it by making up poetry while I scrubbed. So I made up 'A Crown of Other Halves.' I am glad you like it, Ray. If you hadn't I—I don't know what I would have done!"

"You would have cut my head off—or you ought to have done so. How could I help like it? We won't be able to listen to the sermon, I'm afraid. And in the afternoon we'll visit Wizzen and Mrs. Weed and take that paper along."

"But," said Rhoda, as with a beaming face she followed her brother out of the darkened shop, "do you think Wizzen would care for that kind of thing?"

"Well," said Raymund, his enthusiasm a litle checked, "well, you know," he said, with sudden hope, "Wizzen will enjoy looking at the pictures."

An Irishman wooed and won a Jewess. When the first-born was to be baptized the contentions waxed stout between the two families as to the proper name for the babe, his family insisting that it should be Patrick, and hers that it should be Moses. Neither side would yield, until in desperation they said to a clergyman, "We can't agree; you give him a name, sir; only let it be a Bible name." And instantly he proceeded with the service—"Pat-mos, I baptize thee," etc.

"To live content with small means; to study hard, think quietly, talk gently, act frankly; to listen to stars and birds, to babes and sages, with open heart; to bear all cheerfully, do all bravely—in a word, to let the spiritual, unbidden and unconscious, grow up through the common—this is to be my symphony."—Dr. Channing.

There was an old darky preacher down in Georgia who refused to become ordained, but was content to remain simply an exhorter. This dissent appeared strange to some of his congregation, and one day one of his flock asked about it.

"Well, it am dis way," he replied; "when you's a real preacher you's gotter have a tex' and stick right close to it; but if you is only a exhorter, you kin branch."

The Evolving of a Woman.

The house smelled of new pine boards—pitchy knots, oozing in the hot July sun. Isabel hurried through her dusting. The pungent odors sickened her. She arranged her few vases and bric-a-brac, and her easels, holding pictures of her old-time friends, along the mantel impatiently. She once had pronounced it "such a pretty mantel!" in its white drapings of tissue paper, caught tastefully here and there with gilt tacks; and the cheap little easels had pleased her. They had seemed in harmony; but now—now she herself was out of harmony, and therefore all things were discord.

She hated the plain glass vases that reproved her so with their emptiness. At first she had not wearied of searching diligently for flowers sufficiently sweet and dainty to deck so fine a setting; now she said that even flowers could not hide their ugliness.

The little plaster shepherdess, with her placid face, angered her. She hid her perpetual smile from sight behind a portrait of her stern great-aunt Roxana, who she usually kept with her face to the wall in memory of the many times when she, Isabel, had been kept in a like position by this same good great-aunt in the flesh. Everything displeased her. The curious and delicate shells that had been George's addition to the decorations, she spurned from sight with the very tip of her duster. They were horrid, disgusting things. She let the unique wooden fan, unfurled from a single piece of pine by one of the mill hands, so George said, fall to the floor and splinter the delicate carvings. They had thought it odd, colored as it was with red squaw berries and green snake's grass; but now she crushed it together ruthlessly as she picked it up. The sight of the crude things nettled her beyond endurance.

She dusted her pictures without looking at them. She had no heart to look in the faces of old friends. Some of them were old college chums; some were friends from her home town, closer yet.

She dusted the cheap, varnished table, and a bitter tear fell upon the centerpiece she had done when she was a girl. She said now it was the one really nice thing she possessed; she said too that it was out of place. George had promised to buy a better table. They had said when they placed the centerpiece there that it should be a nucleus, drawing all things in harmony to it; that they would gradually cull out things accepted through necessity, till their little home pleased them. The cotton velour furniture and the varnishy chairs would have to go. They had been the best obtainable in the little town where they had been obliged to get their "things." It was fresh and bright. George liked it. But of course it was only a "makeshift." This morning Isabel felt almost above dusting the "tawdry stuff."

The gaudy brass and pink lamp that George had won with tickets had never looked so cheap before. She meant to have it changed at once. It seemed now that she could not endure seeing it lit another night. The bright rugs on the floor antagonized her, and the one that was George's favorite, with a huge dog portrayed in its center, became positively hideous. She didn't see why he had ever consented to the buying of the thing. She dragged a vallenced rocker over it to hide part of its ugliness.

Her pretty cushions, spread along the chintz cosy corner, were already becoming faded and dingy, she noticed, in the too bright light. The one she valued most, her precious poppy pillow, was quite ruined. She looped back the chintz curtains above into the smallest possible compass, and wondered how she ever could have chosen such a combination of colors; then she remembered that George was fond of pink and green.

In the process of dusting, a fancy picture fell from the screen to the floor. She picked it up and stood holding it; but her eyes did not soften. She did not stop to conjecture who it looked like—whose mouth, whose eyes—as she had done so many, many times. It was the picture of a baby, dimpling with irresistible baby sweetness. It linked a sacred sentiment between her and George; but now she thrust it cruelly into a stock of old magazines that were going into the attic. She was tired and out of patience; and it was nothing but a cheap little old print after all.

Out on the stifling front porch, facing south, dazzling and pitchy in the sun, she sat and thought about her old home and all the luxuries thereof. She pictured her white-haired mother, sitting in quiet refinement in the cool, shadowy front sitting-room—a piece of fine embroidery in her lap, maybe, or a bit of thread lace. She pictured her young sister, in immaculate linen, lounging in from a game of croquet to "cool off" in father's dim old library among the treasured books, or perhaps running through an exercise on the piano. Grace was fitting herself for a career. In a vision Isabel saw her white, shapely hands touching the keys. They would never have coarse, unsightly tasks to do. The little home parlor smelled of lavender.

Isabel's eyes wandered across the hand's breadth of scorched sawdust street to the row of yellow pine cottages, identically the same—the same little porch patched on in front, the same sloping kitchen clinging to the rear. She counted the front windows, two by two, as far as she could see. She wondered if the woman on the other side was doing the same.

In the dry tufts of grass along the fence a miserable cricket begged her for succor. A nesting swallow, flying to the eaves with mud, upbraided her harshly. She seemed to have no sympathy with home-making. Her eyes seemed fixed on the wavering heat rays rising from the unpainted fence boards.

Far away was a modest brown house shaded by vines, looking out upon a quiet avenue lined on either side by aged maples. Through them one could see a church spire rising, and catching glimpses of well-bred lawn plants in neighboring dooryards—cannas and geraniums and stately palms. Her eyes despised the one solitary stunted plant struggling through the rocks at her feet. Long since she had ceased watering and tending it. The sickly yellow hue creeping up its stalk pleaded with her mightily, but she ignored it.

A little front dooryard with old-fashioned sweet posies had been one of her dreams, and she had spent days digging places in the hard soil for her seeds. There had been pinks and asters and bachelor's buttons and sweet phlox and verbenas. The one puny spot was the fruit of her labors. Flowers did not thrive in Higginsville. What sweetness or beauty could thrive within sight of the great belching stacks and smoking waste pits—within sound of the screeching saws and thudding, grinding engines that rested neither day nor night? Would a flower dare to lift its head along the drifting sawdust roads? She remembered shady village streets where many a blue violet bloomed its life out unmolested in the luxuriant borders. Here everything was so yellow and so hot. She put her aching forehead in her hands miserably. It had been not quite a year yet, and how tired she was of it all!

Her mind went back to the time when they had set out. Of course she had known it would be hard leaving home and all her dear friends, and going into a strange land. She never had had any experience in this sort of life; but it had seemed like a good chance, and they had planned how they would make it a stepping stone. George was foreman, and it was one of the largest plants in the state; but of course things were not as she had expected. She did not bother to figure out in just what way they were different. Her head ached, and the gnawing sound of the saws kept on.

True, George had secured the best house in Higginsville. She had a well in her own back yard, and the walls inside were papered with a very handsome paper for Higginsville—a great deal of gilt in scrolls and fancy medallion figures. At first she had been proud, it had looked so fine amongst its dull neighbors; but now the gold was vulgar, the medallions ugly. She thouht longingly of the genteel sage walls at home, decorated with well-bred photographs and genuine bits of water color and oil from the hands of friends. The large autumn scene that George had borne home so proudly, thinking he had such a fine thing, became only a daub in comparison. The cheap prints that had seemed within their means became unendurable.

She thought of all her friends who had gathered after the wedding to wish her well. It had sounded fine to tell them that George was foreman of a big lumber plant in Minnesota, and that they were going to begin life in the woods. With George there beside her, immaculate in his black suit and white front, well groomed and confident (he had been handsome and imposing to look at then), and she in a stunning gown with bride's roses, anything would have sounded well then. She wondered what any of her friends would say if they could see her now in these surroundings.

When George came home at noon, she had been crying. He missed her from the little front gate where she usually waited with a greeting. "I'm going home, George," she told him when he tried to comfort her. "I can't stand it any longer. I'm going home." He reached out his strong brown arms for her, but she drew away.

"It isn't any use, George. I've made up my mind. I can't stand it any longer."

"All right, little woman," he said, cheerfull. "When you going?"

"I believe I'll start to-morrow," she decided, nerved to sudden decision by his calmness. "You can shut things up here. There's the boarding house, you know," she suggested.

"Oh, don't worry about me! Want me to lay off and help you pack?" He was magnanimous.

"No, never mind! I shan't need much. You know," she said, as she went about dishing up the dinner, "things aren't as I expected they would be—they're worse—they're horrid!" George came up from a noisy splash in the wash basin.

"Well, I should say they were! It's beastly hot. It's like an oven in the mill."

"You know, I'm just as disappointed as I can be," persisted Isabel. "Everything here is so—so coarse—so common. I'm not used to it." She looked at him reproachfully from across the table. He seemed vulgarly engrossed in the steaming viands before him. The sleeves of his blue shirt were rolled to the elbows, showing arms burned to a leathery hue. There were pitch stains that soap and water would not remove. His low collar did not hide a burned and weather-beaten neck. His hair clung in damp, uncomely locks. Isabel's lip curled.

"At home things are different," she continued, petulantly. "I don't know how I ever thought I could stand it. I just can't, that's all."

"It will be a lovely trip. Wish I was going with you!" George remarked between huge mouthfuls of food.

"I don't know what I'll tell them, George. They'll ask about—about everything; how I like it—and if—and if I'm happy. I couldn't tell them the truth; it's too horrid."

"You go home and rest a while, little girl, and things won't look so bad to you," he told her, as he pulled on his old slouch hat and hurried back to work. Isabel watched him from the front window. In his loose work clothes his gait seemed slouching. His long arms swung to keep pace with his ungainly strides. She turned away with a sigh.

The afternoon and evening were filled with preparations for the journey, and on the morrow there was time for only a hurried good-bye. "Have a good time and don't worry about me," George told her. "Tell all the folks hello." Then the train started and shut the sight of him from her eyes, and from her ears the sound of buzzing saws. She bought a well-bred magazine and settled down in the luxurious car seat to enjoy herself.

She got off at the familiar home station, and a group of her old-time friends were waiting there to greet her. She went up the street with them, laughing and chatting, and said she was "Oh, so glad to get back!" She sat in the quiet home parlor and told them how tired she was of the sound of saws, and how the smell of pitch and engine oil sickened her, and how she wished George was something else besides a mill man, and how hot and horrid it was in Higginsville. It was just as cool and sweet in the home rooms as ever. She sniffed the cinnamon vine over the front porch. The lattice honeysuckle hung thick with blooms, just as she had hoped it would. The grand old piano, sitting in the dim sage room, impressed her with the same air of genteel elegance she remembered; and yet—something seemed lacking. She sat down and ran her fingers over the ivory keys restlessly. She did not care to play.

She sat out on the porch in one of her old girlish white gowns, where she could see the cathedral spire and the scarlet gleam of lawn flowers; and then was born an almost maternal anxiety over one

Do Your Meals Fit?

Do You Feel Snug and Comfortable Around Your Waist Line After a Hearty Meal?

Did your last meal taste deliciously good to you, and did you eat all you wanted? Could you have patted your rotundity in glee and felt proud of your appetite and of your good strong stomach? Do you feel rosy now because your last meal gave you no inconvenience whatever? If not, you have dyspepsia in some form, and probably never realized it.

If you have the least trouble in your stomach after eating, no matter how little or how much you eat, there is trouble brewing and you must correct it at once.

Most all stomach troubles come from poor, weak, scanty gastric juice, that precious liquid which ought to turn your food into rich, red blood.

If you have nausea, your gastric juice is weak. If you have sour risings or belchings, your food is fermenting; your gastric juice is weak. If you have loss of appetite, your gastric juice is weak. If you have a bloaty feeling of aversion to food, your gastric juice is weak.

You need something in your stomach to supply the gastric juice which is scanty, and to give power to the weak gastric juice. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do this very thing.

Now think—one grain of one of the ingredients of these wonderful little tablets digests 3,000 grains of food. They are several times more powerful than the gastric juice in a good, strong, powerful stomach. They actually digest your food for you. Besides, they increase the flow of gastric juice, just what you need to get all the good possible out of everything you eat. You will never have that "lump of lead" in your stomach nor any other stomach trouble after taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Then everything you eat will be digested, it will give you strength, vim, energy and a rosy disposition. You'll feel good all around your waist line after every meal and it will make you feel good all over.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will make you feel happy after eating a good, hearty meal. Take one or two after eating. You'll feel fine—then your meals will fit, no matter what or when you eat.

We want to send you a sample package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets free of charge, so you can test them yourself and be convinced. After you have tried the sample, you will be so satisfied that you will go to the nearest drug-store and get a 50c box.

Send us your name and address today and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address puny green thing struggling up through rocks. She wished she had remembered to water it before she started. She thought of the swallow, and how she might have protected the nest in the eaves from possible storms. Some realization of the woe of washed-out nests swept over her. There were birds in the maple trees outside, but their full notes of satisfaction seemed to need nothing from her. She even remembered the distressed cricket by the fence, whose cries she had not heeded.

Everything was still—oppressively still. She took down some of the old favorites from her father's library, but they lay in her lap unopened. She could not keep her eyes from the street, and she found herself listening intently for a footstep that did not come. She wondered what ailed her, till they called her in to dinner; then she knew that she had missed the whistle, and George coming home to his evening meal. She lay awake in her still, lavender-scented sleeping room and listened for the sound of saws.

The house swarmed with gay young friends eager to visit, and yet she felt miserably alone in their midst. "Poor Isabel is so changed," they said. "She doesn't seem like herself:"

She came down to breakfast one morning more wan than usual. Her mother was alarmed. "Why, child! What is the matter?" she cried. "I know, though; it's that horrid life you've been living. It has been too much for you. It's a shame! Isabel was always such a fresh-looking girl," she lamented.

They got her to tell again about the little "backwoods town," with its sawdust streets and unpainted cottages. They spoke of them as "shanties," though Isabel acknowledged with inward shame that she was to blame for the title. Memory of the really neat little house, grown suddenly dear, filled her with remorse.

They heaped dainty dishes upon her. "Try to eat," they said. "You must make up now for all the good things you have missed. Those berries are lovely. Try some, dear! I don't suppose you can get fresh fruit in Higginsville. Just think! The poor child can't get a bit of ice, and they use condensed milk. Isn't it a shame! I should think George could manage to have some shipped in!'

Isabel's cheeks flamed as she heard George's shortcomings discussed in detail. "I don't see how poor Issie gets along without ice cream; she used to be so fond of it," put in Grace, languidly. "It's no wonder Isabel is getting thin! Don't you know, father, she said it was next to impossible to get fresh meat? Think of it, no meat and no cream!"

"Don't talk of impossible to me!" sentenced her father, harshly. "I haven't any patience." Isabel was conscience-stricken. A mental picture of the little board where she and George shared their meals, would come. She acknowledged to herself now that it never had lacked for anything—that there had even been luxuries—and that George had spared neither effort nor money. There was the consciousness, too, that she had created the false impression; this filled her with a growing remorse.

"I had a long talk with George when you were married," her father was saying. "I told him that you were not fit for a rough life. You had been babied and pampered. He promised to take care of you. I thought he was a man of his word."

"George has been good to me," Isabel ventured, desperately.

"Oh, yes! Of course!" Her father folded his napkin decisively. "He hasn't beaten you, or anything of that sort; but I don't think much of a man who drags his wife through every discomfort and subjects her to all sorts of privations. I never had to do that. Your mother always had things comfortable. I saw to that."

Isabel would have spoken, but he motioned her to silence. "Don't excuse him, my dear! I understand! I wouldn't have thought it of George Barton!"

Isabel's breath came in sobs as she fled to the seclusion of her own room. There on the window ledge, with her head in the honeysuckle vine, she wept all the crisp freshness out of her white sleeves. "Oh, my dear, my dear!" she sobbed in an agony of contrition. Then she went about putting things into her trunk. Her mother came seeking her before she had finished.

"Why, Isabel! What ails you, dear? Are you ill? Why, my child!" Isabel was holding a bit of lace fichu to her cheek, passionately. "What made you slip away, child? We missed you. Father was wanting you to play one of your old pieces. You musn't miss a moment, now you are where you can take a little comfort, my poor Isabel!"

"Don't, mother." Isabel lifted her head, desperately. "I can't bear it. It isn't true. I've led you to believe it, but it's false, every word of it. Oh, I can never forgive myself, never! See here! He gave me this; he gave me this, and this." She piled her treasures from the trunk to the floor. "They're beautiful. I never half appreciated them—only now that I haven't got him, they're dearer than anything. I'm going back to-morrow, because—because I can't be away from him another minute." Her breath caught in a passion of sobs.

"It's all true that father said," she went on, bitterly. "I've been babied and pampered till I'm no mate for a man like George Barton. He is always giving and I am always taking. The truth of the matter is, he has taken too good care of me—he has finished spoiling me.

"Oh, mother!" she said, with sudden eagerness, "I wish you could see our little home; it's the dearest place—so cosy and cheerful. I never knew how much I—I thought of it before. Oh, mother!" her head dropped in contrition. "The sweetest little cosies! George made them—the cunningest rose bowl—and, oh, mother! I do wish you could see my little stewpans!" And then she sat down and wept again from pure homesickness.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

"I thought the train would never get here, never!" she said, with a deep sigh of satisfaction as she went about touching her treasures to make sure of their safety. "Oh, George! I'm never going away again; I'm so glad to be home. My! but this does me good. Oh, dear, dear things!" she said, with motherly pats here and there. "You're mine, and that's everything. What do I smell?" She sniffed about, hungrily. "Oh, I know! It's pine. Don't it smell homey! And do you know, I believe I'm actually glad to hear those saws, they sound so jolly." Then she pounced upon a little picture; reinstated in its old place on the screen. "My baby! Where did you find it? Oh, George! I've lain awake nights thinking of it up in the attic alone."

"I couldn't spare all my little family, could I?" he questioned her, softly, as he held them both.—The Interior.

We have recently prepared a "Popular Church Record" that surpasses any other made. We send it "on approval" at $2.50 postpaid.

We are happy to announce that with the new year we will have "Teachers' Quarterlies" for the various grades of the Dowling Bible School series.

Our "Bargain Book Sale" is closed. We still sell many of the best $1.50 works of fiction like "The Man from Glengarry" and "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" at 75c postpaid.

See advertisement of Rally Day souvenirs on page 1151. Rally Day comes this month. It would be better not to delay ordering as we were barely able to fill all requisitions last year.

B. W. Johnson's "Peoples' New Testament with Notes" is having a great sale among those wishing a perfectly accurate commentary on the New Testament. It is in two volumes, $2.00 postpaid.

The Christian-Evangelist and a fountain pen to either a new subscriber or a renewal for $2. The Christian-Evangelist and a self-filling fountain pen guaranteed by the manufacturers for ten years to a new subscriber for $2.50—the retail price of the pen.

We offer our readers this heretofore unheard-of proposition, to-wit: The Christian-Evangelist and the "Review of Reviews" for $3. You can not secure the latter alone from the New York office for less than $3. This offer gives you the best religious paper and the best literary review published for the price of the magazine.

Many pastors and evangelists are using 300 or 500 copies of The Christian-Evangelists per week through evangelistic meetings and with splendid results. We send with them for insertion in the papers colored circulars containing the pictures of pastors and evangelists and local announcements. These are valuable helpers. Write us for terms.

Multitudes of Disciples have realized the inconsistency of purchasing books elsewhere, thus building up secular and denominational publishing houses at the expense of one in their own brotherhood, and are properly sending their orders to us. Hence our book trade is flourishing as never before, enabling us to make book offers of ever-increasing advantage to our patrons. Write us before purchasing, no matter what the book you wish.

We can say no more for our W. W. Dowling's series of Sunday-school supplies than that for the new year they will be a little better than ever before. Samples sent gratuitously on application. Do not use those undenominational series that fail to interpret the scriptures and unfold the plan of salvation according to the doctrines of this Restoration movement. Do not use any inferior sorts while the Dowling series is so inexpensive.

The Armory building in which the Buffalo Convention will be held is not in the hotel district. The Christian-Evangelist headquarters will be at the Buckingham, the only hotel near the convention hall. This is within two blocks of it. Around this hotel and within easy walking distance, we have secured a great many rooms in good homes at 75c and $1 per day for room and breakfast. This is much better than going to a down-town hotel where rooms will be higher priced and table service quite expensive.

The Christian-Evangelist special over the Wabash leaves St. Louis, October 11, at noon. The cost of the tickets will be one fare plus $2 for round trip west of the Mississippi and one fare plus $1 east of the river. From Detroit our friends have their choice of going either by rail through Canada or by steamship across Lake Erie without additional expense. Our special train will consist of standard Pullmans, bright new tourist and reclining chair-cars. Every possible care will be given those going with this party and our services are absolutely gratuitous. Get to the Wabash and the "Christian-Evangelist Special" as quickly as possible if you do not live on this line.

The Christian-Evangelist's remarkable growth in circulation is not ephemeral as our published list in each issue for several months shows. While the great majority comes by ones and twos we are pleased to note the following clubs received during the week, to-wit: Brunswick, Mo., E. H. Williamson, pastor, 12; Stanberry, Mo., G. W. Terrell, pastor, 27; Hagerstown, Md., H. C. Kendrick, minister, 6; Butler, Ind., Robt. B. Chapman, minister, 30; Huntington, Ind., Cephas Shelburne, pastor, 17; St. Joseph, Mo., A. C. Lowe, pastor, 27; Bucklin, Mo., A. Munyon, minister, 4; Amarillo, Texas, Jewell Howard, minister, 7; Savannah, Mo., Geo. McGee, pastor, 25; Grant City, Mo., W. A. Shullenberger, pastor, 23; Lincoln, Neb., 26, G. H. Exley, Agt.; Belpre, Kan., 7. We pledge ourselves to make every copy of The Christian-Evangelist a light bearer and life giver. Again we call on our friends to rally around us in our efforts to place The Christian-Evangelist in 100,000 homes before the Centennial.

BUFFALO EN ROUTE TO THE NEW JERUSALEM

By W. R. Warren, Centennial Secretary.

WHY ARE YOU endeavoring to get to heaven? Among the chief delights in that "city that hath foundations" is the reunion with those you have loved long since and lost awhile, fellowship with the great and good whose words and lives have been an inspiration to you and the enlargement of your being by acquaintance and friendship with other choice spirits whom time and chance have thus far not allowed you to meet. Well, Buffalo is en route to the New Jerusalem. There will be such reunions as will make your heart glad for many days to come. The great men are not all dead. Even the heroic pioneers of the current reformation have not all passed beyond. The call of the convention appeals only to the best. While its gates stand open as do those of the New Jerusalem, none enter there except those for whom it has been prepared, and it is worth while to know them. Sometimes you are lonely and discouraged in your work. Here your heart will sing for joy as you behold seven thousand of those who have not bowed the knee to Baal.

In the round of the year time and strength and money are demanded by many sordid interests, the world that now is presses hard upon you every day, the multitude about you run headlong in the broad way. Come aside with the Disciples of your Lord and give your soul a rest, a feast and a chance. It is but once in a year, and it is necessary.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
  Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
  The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
  For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
  Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
  And the song of victory.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Buffalo 1906 and Pittsburg 1909.

W. R. WARREN.

Two great states, side by side since their settlement and step by step in their progress, have led America in her advance toward world primacy. Each has an eastern and western metropolis. New York's western city gathers the commerce of the great lakes to its docks; Pittsburg's harbor, where the Allegheny and the Monongehela rivers combine to form the Ohio, floats more coal than any other water in the world; each is a converging point for railroads between the east and the middle west; one draws upon a vast field of coal for power, the other lays Niagara herself under tribute, and both reach out to the rich ore fields on the lake's shore for raw materials.

The four years of the centennial campaign culminate in four conventions—Buffalo is the first and Pittsburg is the last. How will the various and vast interests of the brotherhood come up to this first quarter-pole? What is the record of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, whose splendid and ready organization enabled it to get away first in the race? What report, in spite of its handicap, comes from the American Christian Missionary Society and its new secretary? How far towards the goal is the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and its world-wide task? How grows the million dollar fund for Church Extension? What progress have we made in the pure and undefiled religion that cares for the widow and the orphan? Have we quite forgotten the aged preacher? How many are we educating to succeed him? Call the roll of the states; what is each doing for liberty in Christ and union under him? Call out the men and women from the thin, white line of missionaries with which we face the world! Let us see their faces and hear their voices! Let us grasp their hands and enter into sympathy with their heroism.

Office of Centennial Secretary.

The Centennial and Pre-Conventions.

There ought to be 100,000 Disciples in Pittsburg during our Centennial. To secure this attendance, which will be a sensational feature of the close of our first cycle, our pre-conventions must be such as to cause many to form the "convention habit." Programs alone, though largely, are not to be solely instrumental in this. The physical comfort of attendants both while at the convention and en route there and returning will be a large factor in securing the numbers so essential to the visible success of the Pittsburg ceremonials.

The Christian-Evangelist is doing all in its power to make those going up to Buffalo enjoy their entourage and sojourn in the city.

We have arranged for a special train over the Wabash to leave St. Louis at noon October 11. This train will be equipped with standard Pullman, tourist sleeper, reclining chair, baggage, commissary and dining cars. The commissary car will serve inexpensive but wholesome lunches along the way, and prevent the necessity of patronizing the more expensive diner. The tourist cars will be new and clean and substitutes for the more costly berths none need hesitate to employ. The rate will be one fare plus $1 for the round trip. Passengers will have choice, without extra expense of going from Detroit either by rail through Canada or by ship across Lake Erie. On account of reaching Buffalo in time to receive assignments and attend the first session of the convention we strongly urge all of The Christian-Evangelist Special patrons to go by rail and return by water. There will be the same privilege of returning from Buffalo by water as in going. Every possible concession for the comfort of our friends will be secured. We urge all going from west of this city to plan to be here in time to join with us. Parties coming in special cars may arrange to have their cars attached to our "Special" over the Wabash.

The convention hall is not in the business and hotel district of the city. The Buckingham is the only hotel very near the Armory building. This is within two blocks of the convention and all the delegates it receives will be assigned by the manager of The Christian-Evangelist Special. The rates are $2 per day for room and meals for the limited number that can be entertained there. Hundreds of homes in the immediate neighborhood of the convention hall will receive those going with us for 75 cents and $1 per diem for room and breakfast. Other meals may be secured at the Buckingham or of the convention caterer. This is infinitely preferable to stopping at the distant hotels where rooms are higher and meals much more expensive to say nothing of the saving in car fare and time. These homes are equipped with all modern conveniences and the guests will receive therein a cordial "welcome home." Those intending to go with us may write us and we will secure their assignments and mail to them at once. Guides will meet The Christian-Evangelist Special at the Buffalo Wabash station and conduct them safely to their stopping places. Specially conducted parties to Niagara Falls and elsewhere are also on our program.

Our services are entirely gratuitous. No other reward is expected than the grateful appreciation of those whom we serve.

The Christian-Evangelist will in like manner minister to all our other convention assemblies preceding the great convention at Pittsburg fondly hoping in this capacity it may have at least a small part in pressing six figures into requisition in order to tell the number present at Pittsburg in 1909.

OUR CENTENNIAL HELPERS.

Such a grand paper as The Christian-Evangelist should be in every home.—Mrs. H. A. Wheeldon.

I cannot tell you how much good the paper has done me. I cannot do without it.—A. M. Gates, Hiram, Ohio.

I shall be only too glad to do all I can to increase the circulation of The Christian-Evangelist in this great city.—E. A. Long, New York.

I have been a reader of The Christian-Evangelist for thirty years and I would rather give up all my other papers than it.—F. H. Symonds, Admire, Kan.

I admire the spirit and appreciate the broad and forward view of the present day topics in The Christian-Evangelist..—B. E. Utz, Spokane Bridge, Wash.

I would that The Christian-Evangelist might go weekly into every home in Christendom not only among our own people but all the Lord's people however perfect or imperfect they may be. —Jas. H. Brooks, (evangelist.)

I have been a reader of The Christian-Evangelist the most of my natural life. My present subscription does not expire until January, 1907, then I shall renew. The Christian-Evangelist is all right.—P. H. Duncan, Latonia, Ky.

I wish I could get one hundred names for The Christian-Evangelist. The dear old paper ought to be in every home and I wish we could place it not only in Christian homes but in those where they know not God and his goodness. It is surely a great preacher. I will do all in my power to get a list of names.—Anna Garner.

Our members after being taught that federation—the union of God's chilrden—means the life of God and man together and the very foundation of a Christian's hope will believe that they cannot live as they ought on sectarianism. I cannot see how our contemporary can live with a clear conscience after printing what it did about Brother Garrison, a man that has given over forty years of his life to the cause of our Master. It must have been done for subscription's sake. It is not right. I have been taking the Christian-Evangelist for thirty years and shall continue.—W. A. Dodson, Denison, Kan.

Why, bless you, I would not be without The Christian-Evangelist a week for anything. You were a small chap when I began to read The Christian-Evangelist, George. I used to help mail it when Brother Hickey owned and edited it at Oskaloosa, Iowa. I know all about how The Christian-Evangelist came to its present high estate and prominence. I have gotten more than a world of good out of it. Really now as to helpfulness to me as a minister, The Christian-Evangelist has stood for many years next to the Bible. Yes, I am for The Christian-Evangelist, federation and all.—A. C. Corbin, Ashland, Oregon, (minister.)

I want to record it now, while soft beating in my heart, that The Christian-Evangelist, as one visible expression of the even flowing, thankful, sweet-spirited soul of the Editor-in-chief, comes to us in this remote part of the world as a choice benediction. As I follow the Easy Chair, I can recall even the intonations of the speaker as he uttered similar expressions of peace and hope more than twenty years ago. Many readers will not know, but Brother Garrison will recall the scene when the writer as a lad made the confession of his faith in Christ—the first visible fruits of his gospel ministry in New England. I want to thank my first pastor and my father in the faith for his most helpful influence through these years.—Edwin Carey Davis, Maudha, Hamirpur, India.

Roosevelt Again?

The president has said, as clearly and as positively as any man could say it, that he will not, under any circumstances, be a candidate for re-election in 1908. He said so on the night of his election in 1904. He has said so several times since. And his friends have repeatedly said so on his authority. However, he said not merely that he would not seek the nomination, but that he would not accept it. Still there are many persons not notably obtuse who assert that he will probably be renominated, and many others whose moral sense is at least as good as the average declare that he is under no obligation to refuse if the nomination is offered. It must be admited that there are numerous precedents for statesmen changing their mind and accepting nominations which they said they would not accept. Mr. Roosevelt himself, when he was governor of New York, said that he would not accept the vice-presidential nomination. But he did. He was convinced that the welfare of the party demanded it. There is so little surplus honor in politics that we should regret to see any system of sophistry established which would further weaken the binding force of promises. We hope Mr. Roosevelt will not subject himself to criticism by changing his mind. If, when the time for nomination arrives, it shall appear that no other Republican candidate would have a fair chance of being elected and that Democratic success would seriously interfere with the country's welfare, we believe Mr. Roosevelt would be morally justified in accepting a nomination. It would be manifestly improper and immoral for him to seek or to accept the nomination in the absence of such an emergency. And for the party to nominate him would, as it seems to us, be a confession of weakness.

Taft on the Tariff.

In a campaign speech at Bath, Me., Secretary Taft expressed sentiments which aroused the drooping spirits of the tariff reformers and encouraged them to believe that the Watson letter did not sound the death knell of their hopes. If Secretary Taft in public speaks favorably of tariff reform, it is a fair indication that the president thinks favorably of it. The personal and official relations existing between Mr. Taft and the president are such that the former would scarcely speak on such a vital topic without being sure that his sentiments were in accordance with the views of the administration. So, all at once, the air is full of rumors of a possible special session of congress to be called for the purpose of revising the tariff immediately after the congressional election. It would be an excellent time to do something which very much needs to be done.

The Naval Review.

Every great naval review—such as the one at Oyster Bay week before last, which was the greatest in all our naval history—gives the critics an opportunity. We hear it said that an expense of tens of thousands of dollars was incurred simply to give the president a pleasant day at his summer home and gratify his pride. It is pointed out that Lincoln never treated himself to a naval parade. Certainly he did not. But Lincoln's task was to keep the country's fighting forces at their best in a time of war. Roosevelt's is to keep them from getting rusty and useless in a time of peace. Reviews are profitable for the latter but not for the former purpose. Besides, given a navy already in commission, it does not cost much more to have a review at Oyster Bay than to have the vessels steaming about individually. Rear Admiral Evans says this review did not cost more than $300, which we suppose was expended on powder for firing salutes. One who objects to the costliness of a review must begin farther back and criticize the whole policy of maintaining a navy. Such an argument, whether convincing or not, may at least be consistent.

Howells on Spelling.

The "little folk of little soul," who are industriously trying to discredit the advocates of spelling reform and to pose as the only people who hold history and literature sacred, ought to be (if they are not) considerably embarrassed by the presence of great and scholarly names among the reformers. Professor Skeat, who knows more about Anglo-Saxon than the Anglo-Saxons themselves knew, and who is the highest authority on the history of the English language, is for spelling reform. So is Professor Murray, who is editing the monumental Oxford dictionary which will be the greatest and most scholarly of all dictionaries. So is Professor Lounsbury, who says that the only thing more contemptible than English spelling is the arguments by which it is defended. Mr. W. D. Howells, the high-priest of letters on this side of the Atlantic, expressed himself at large on the subject before the recent controversy arose. He says:

> "It is held creditable to spell in the fashion of lexicographers, but it is really discreditable, if to defy law and order is infamy. A child is punished if it obeys its instinct and spells phonetically, but it ought to be rewarded, and its instinctive orthography reverently studied in the hope of some hint for the amelioration of the abuse under which we all suffer. The actual English spelling does not spell anything, really; it is a kind of picture-writing, in which certain groups of letters symbolize certain sounds without representing them. The difference between our spelling and our speech is such that the lexicographer finds his burden divided between orthography and orthoepy, and yet doubled in the failure to show how the printed word shall be spoken. For the literary artist, who wishes to indicate variations, the system is worse than useless; he must frame a convention and trust the reader's intelligence for its acceptance before he can hope to suggest the accents he has in mind. Nothing worse could be said of our spelling than that it does not spell; that is quite enough to condemn it. If it fulfilled its office, one might not repine at its manifold difficulties; but it breaks down at the first step and at every step. It is a failure which nothing but the immense power of the race which suffers it could repair."

The Anglo-American Boat Race.

The great Harvard-Cambridge boat race which was rowed on the Thames a couple of weeks ago, resulted in a victory for the English crew. Three times in recent years American crews have tried to beat the English oarsmen in their own waters: the Cornell crew in (or about) 1895, the Yale crew in 1896, and now the Harvard crew. Each time the Englishmen won. While the races have in each case been simply between two universities, they have been accepted and properly, as genuine international contests. While all good Americans want to see their own team win in such an event, the opposite outcome affords some satisfaction to those who believe that the English system of athletics in institutions of learning is superior to our own. The English can still show the world its finest examples of the spirit of pure sportsmanship.

An Extension of Jury Trial.

A writer in a current magazine, claiming to be himself a millionaire, proposes that all wills involving property worth more than $50,000 should be submitted to the approval of a jury of twelve men before being admitted to probate. This jury should have power to disapprove and annul any parts of the will which it considers unjust, unwise or malicious, and to add new provisions if sufficient sums have not been left to charities and other public causes or to persons who had a proper expectation of being remembered. It is said that a large proportion of the wills which dispose of great estates are brought into courts anyway by the efforts of relatives to have the provisions altered, and that the proposed plan would be no serious extension of the government's function. It would, however, be a very serious and radical extension. The present theory is that a man has a right to dispose of his property as selfishly or unwisely as he pleases, and when a will is set aside or altered it is on the ground that it does not really represent the testator's wishes. If this theory were to be given up, it would be simpler to go the whole length and say that a man's property at his death reverts to the state to be disposed of as the state shall decide. It is not likely that such a principle will be adopted in other than a thoroughly socialistic state. Meanwhile, in spite of the occasional appearance of bad wills, it is gratifying to notice that few men dispose of large estates without showing some consciousness of a moral obligation to the community and of a duty extending beyond the limits of the family.

Where Jesus Placed the Emphasis.—V.

The Kingdom of God.

No reader of the Gospels, particularly of the three synoptic Gospels, can fail to be impressed with the prominence which Jesus gives to the kingdom of God or the kingdom of heaven. It is the first of the promised blessings in the Beatitudes: "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 5:3). In teaching his disciples to pray, the first formal petition is: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven so in earth" (Matt. 6:10). When he would solve for his disciples and for all the world the age-long problem of what is the greatest good, he said: "But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness" (Matt. 6:33). In later chapters he devotes a series of parables to explaining the methods and principles of that kingdom. It is evident, therefore, that the kingdom of God held the place of chief importance in the mind and in the teaching of Jesus.

What meaning does the kingdom of God or the kingdom of heaven have in the thought of Jesus? There is a wide sense in which the kingdom of God is sometimes used to signify God's overruling providence over all nations and over all the universe; but Jesus is using the phrase in a more limited and in a deeper sense. He evidently means by it that divine sway which God was to exert and is now exerting over the human heart and life by the revelation of himself and of his power, through Jesus Christ. It was in this sense only that the kingdom of God was "at hand," or near by. In the wider sense God's kingdom has always existed. With Jesus the kingdom of God is not some external organization which comes with observation, but an internal spiritual force renovating and ruling human lives, though ultimately objectifying itself in many ways, but notably in the Church, for the promotion of human welfare. It is "not of this world," according to the teaching of Jesus, and is not extended by force. It has no weapon but truth, no law but love, and no object but the salvation of men and the redemption of the earth from the dominion of sin. It aims to regulate all life, to control and perfect human society, to bring all men under its dominion, and to pervade and purify all the relationships and activities of human life, claiming all time, all places and all that relates to human welfare as the legitimate fields of its operations. The Parable of the Sower indicates the methods of its operation; that of the Mustard Seed, its progressive development in the world; that of the Leaven and the Measures of Meal, its contagious and aggressive nature; that of the Wheat and Tares, the obstacles which oppose it and its ultimate triumph.

The kingdom of God is not the Church, much less any denomination or section of the Church. It is coterminous with the Church at some points, but it is wider in its scope than any or all organizations. Many are in our churches who are not in the kingdom of God, and many are more or less under the influence of the kingdom of God who are not in any of the churches. To identify the Church, as an external organization, with the kingdom of God, has been a source of much error and of much intolerance and persecution. No doubt every true and loyal disciple of Jesus Christ, where opportunity affords, is both a member of Christ's church and a citizen of his kingdom. The Church is God's chief agency for the extension of his kingdom throughout all the world. When any local church or any religious movement consisting of a group of churches loses light of this fact and seeks its own glory and enlargement as an end instead of the advancement of the kingdom of God, it becomes sectarian in aim and character, and is likely to become a hindrance rather than a help in the extension of the kingdom.

A Snap-shot of the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist Cleaning Fish, Taken by his Wife.

As God's kingdom, contrary to the expectation of the Jews of Christ's time, is a spiritual kingdom, entrance into it is only by a spiritual birth. The characteristics of citizens in the kingdom of God are described in the Beatitudes, which antagonized all the prevailing notions of blessedness in Jesus' day, and many ideas and traits still prevalent in the Church. No man can be said to be in the kingdom of God who does not possess, in some measure, the Spirit of Christ and bring forth the fruits thereof in his life. The formal and open surrender to Christ's reign in the ordinance of baptism, important as it is, as an act of obedience, is not to be substituted for that newness of life which is the essence of the birth from above.

To restore God's rule over the lives of men, and to bring back the earth, which had become a revolted province, under the divine government, was the great mission of Christ to the world. That work is steadily going on. One has but to look back at the beginning, when the kingdom of God consisted of Christ and a few disciples unknown to the world and unrecognized by the powers that then were, and contrast that situation with the kingdom of God as it exists to-day, to see what vast strides it has made in the world, and to feel assured of its ultimate triumph. Tyrannous governments have been and are being overthrown; cruel customs and laws have been abolished; womanhood lifted up and coronated; childhood honored and protected; slavery overthrown; despotism undermined and human rights everywhere asserted; warring nations are studying the arts of peace and forming international courts to prevent war; while the despised and rejected Prophet of Galilee, who in his own day "had not where to lay his head," is the most potential personality and the chief controlling factor in the world's civilization. Surely these are evidences of the speedy coming of that time when all the kingdoms and governments of this world shall become the kingdom of Christ, and his dominion shall be from sea to sea and from the rivers to the end of the earth.

Some Key-words for the Buffalo Convention.

The greatness of a man does not consist in the amount of his avoirdupois, but in the greatness of his spirit. Even so a great convention is not one having a large attendance, though it may have, and ought to have that, but in the quality of spirit that pervades it. A mere aggregation of numbers, unless fused into unity by the divine Spirit, and lifted to heights of holy enthusiasm by great ideas and aims, is not a great convention. What are some of the great ideas and aims that should mark the coming conventions at Buffalo? These may be indicated by certain key-words which stand for ideas that make a convention great in the quality of its work and in its far-reaching consequences.

Consecration.—If we could think of a less conventional and less abused term that would express the same idea we would use it. What we mean by it, and what we would put into it, is the utter surrender of ourselves with all that we possess, to the will of Christ, to be used by him in the furtherance of his kingdom. It is the true and literal acceptance of Christ's Word that it is our first and supreme duty to seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness. What could a body such as the Disciples of Christ not accomplish, if it were to put itself wholly at the service of Christ, to be used by him for his purposes? This is what Jesus meant when he said, "For this purpose I sanctify myself, that they also may be sanctified." That is, he devoted, he dedicated, he consecrated himself to the salvation of the world, that his disciples might do the same thing. Has the church ever risen to the height of this great conception of its duty? Can it ever triumph over the forces of evil in the world until it does thus lay itself on the altar of Christian service? Is there anything else which the Disciples of Christ need more in order to succeed in their great mission, than this complete consecration of themselves—their talents, their knowledge of God's will, their means, and their influence—to Christ and the interests of his kingdom?

Unification.—This must follow our consecration, and can not extend any further than it extends. We need to "study the things that make for peace," both among ourselves and with all those who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. Division is a source of confusion and weakness. It is carnal, and is evidence of carnality where it exists. The existence of bitter controversies and uncharitable criticisms argues the need of a deeper spirituality. That is only saying that it shows the need of a larger measure of the Holy Spirit, who alone can bring about "the unity of the Spirit." No people in the world need so much the guidance and influence of the Holy Spirit as those who are pleading for Christian union, and who should therefore furnish a practical illustration of its beauty and its utility. By unification we do not mean uniformity of opinion, but "the unity of the Spirit," which is consistent with diversity of opinions and methods. What we need is to learn to love one another in spite of those little differences growing out of our temperaments, education and environments. Let the note of brotherly love, of "forbearing one another in love," of the need of cementing the bonds of unity among ourselves, while pleading for a wider union, be sounded clear and strong at Buffalo, and we are sure it will find a hearty response in the hearts of those who shall be gathered there. Better to leave undone some things that some of us feel ought to be done, than attempt to do them at the expense of brotherly love and unity. And then, let the great certainties of religion to which all believers hold, be duly accentuated.

Evangelization.—A consecrated and unified people are prepared for the work of evangelization. God can use such a people in the evangelization of the world with the best results. Their work of conversion will be thorough for they will convert to Christ, and not proselyte to a party. They will sow the seeds of unity broadcast among the people, and not those of strife and division. The evangelization of our great home field with its rapidly-increasing foreign populations, and carrying the light of Christ's Gospel to pagan lands—what an enterprise is that to call forth the enthusiasm and energies of a great people who have surrendered themselves to the will and authority of Christ! No doubt this note will be sounded oft and with power. We have not been wanting in zeal for evangelism, but with many of us the idea needs deepening and widening. Let us give it increased breadth and depth at Buffalo, until it shall be broad enough to include the whole world, and deep enough to meet the needs of the vilest sinner.

Education.—This must follow hard on the heels of evangelization. "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," is an essential part of the commission under which we labor. It is the part, however, that has been much neglected. On that account it needs special emphasis. The training of converts in the knowledge of God's Word, and in methods of Christian service, and the development of their spiritual life is one of the most sacred responsibilities the church has laid upon it. It involves the establishment of schools for the training of ministers and other Christian workers, and the endowment and equipment of these schools. Herein, too, we have been deficient. Our educational needs to-day are among the most pressing. We can not longer ignore them without suffering severe loss. We are now, in fact, suffering greatly from this neglect. Whoever stresses the need of our struggling colleges at Buffalo will be doing real service for our cause. The consecration of our means to Christ's cause, to which we have already adverted, will be sure to result in larger college endowments, and in a larger number of trained ministers and business men for service in Christ's kingdom. Benevolence, too, would go forth with full hands to minister to the fatherless and the widow, and to all the needy servants of God.

If these great keywords, or the things for which they stand, be emphasized at the Buffalo convention, and if the beautiful and Christly spirit of humility shall banish all unseemly denominational pride and braggadocio, so that we shall be humbled at how little we have accomplished, with such a cause to plead, and yet grateful that he has so richly blessed our unworthy labors, the great convocation of Disciples who will gather there, will separate, feeling that they have been upon the very mount of God and have caught a fresh vision of his glory and a wider vision of our duty and obligation.

Notes and Comments.

It is the way of the world. The children are nearly always more progressive than the old folks. Great Britain has advanced as far as to have considerable measure of federation, and a "Free Church Council" was an established fact before some of our fearful brethren in this country seem to have even heard of the thing they have become so wrought up about. But Canada goes forward and works for union, and so does Australia, and now even South Africa, still raw from a bloody struggle, has taken hold of the thought of Christian unity. Here is the recorded action of the town council of Witwatersrand, made up of all the sects, save the Church of England:

> "That whereas organic union of the churches represented by this council is desirable to prevent overlapping and needless waste, and for the better and more effective spread of the Gospel amongst the different races of this country, and because it is our Master's expressed desire that his followers should be one, thereby to show to the unbelieving world that he is the sent of God; and whereas a provisional basis of union has been drawn up in Canada by the Congregational, Methodist and Presbyterian Churches, thereby showing that union is possible, this council resolves to appoint a representative committee to take into consideration the proposed Canadian basis of union, to report how far it is applicable to our conditions, and generally to collect information on the whole subject."

This "collecting of information on the whole subject" is a most hopeful sign. We are still wont to feel that we are despised or underestimated by many of our religious neighbors. But is it not possible that we are sometimes not fair to them? A better understanding of one another's spirit and aims must come before we will advance far towards Christian union.

A prize fight occurred in Goldfield, Nevada, a couple of weeks or so ago and the newspapers of the land told about it in lengthy columns and big letters. Some seven thousand people were present and about $80,000 were spent by the spectators. Even the Associated Press seems to think this kind of news worth while. Yet movements that interest a far larger number of people than read the sporting pages and that are vitally concerned with the substantial advance of our nation receive scant attention from this association and these editors. In the spring of this year, for instance, there was a gathering in Nashville, Tenn., of far greater vital interest to the people of this nation than all the prize fights in history, and yet a limit of 300 words was, we believe, set for the telegrams of the Associated Press, while not a line appeared, so far as we could discover, in any St. Louis daily. Apart from the question of ethics or patriotism, this was poor journalism, for the newspaper staff failed to furnish news that thousands were expecting. We do not expect journalists to be all saints, but the "newspaper nose" need not always be rooting in the devil's pastures. We do not believe we are unreasonable, and we gladly accord high praise to the enterprise and brilliancy of much newspaper work, but some of its failures are just as conspicuous. The Associated Press, for instance, never has done justice to religious conventions. We have watched it carefully in its treatment of our own annual gatherings. Only after loud complaint did the Methodist Conference get any satisfaction. There is scope on the staff of this really great institution for a broad-minded religious editor who would keep abreast of all that is vital and of interest to over fifty millions of Americans of every denomination.

PENTWATER MUSINGS.

O waves of an inland sea!
"And would that I could utter
The thoughts that arise in me."

With apologies to Tennyson for the adaptation, we quote the above lines as fitly expressing the situation here this morning, and the feeling which it awakens. All night long the wind has blown a stiff gale from the southwest until the early dawn, when it changed to the west and northwest, and now the waves are tumbling over each other in wild confusion, for they can not change their direction as speedily as the wind. This is the break of a long warm spell, and the change is welcome. Looking out across the wide waste of waters, and listening to the tumultuous roar of the waves as they break on the shore, one indeed feels his soul stirred with thoughts which can not well be uttered. It is in the power of a sublime scene like this, or the sweet and tender strains of music, or a great painting, to lift the soul out of its narrow limitations which inhere in the body, into the wider and illimitable ranges of the spirit which, while under its spell, knows not time, nor place, nor environment, but is swallowed up in communion with the invisible and the eternal. It is deep answering unto deep. It is the divinity within man, responding to the manifestations of the divine in the world about us. But who is capable of conveying in intelligible speech the thoughts which at times sweep over the soul, as the great waves this morning are sweeping over the surface of the lake! Perhaps not till the soul attains to perfection will its expression be equal to its impression, and its utterance be a complete revelation of its inward thoughts and feelings.

Looking far out toward the sky-line over the movable hillocks which the wind has thrown up from the bosom of the lake, one gets the impression of a vast, primitive, western prairie, where the tall grass is swayed by the breeze, except there is a touch of wildness and sublimity in the water-scene that does not belong to the landscape. Sitting here by the fire this morning and gazing out through the windows on these wild and tumultuous waves, one can but congratulate himself that he is on shore rather than being tossed about on those noisy billows. And yet far out on the lake and lifting up its masts against the sky is a sailing vessel wrestling with the waves and pushing on bravely toward its destination. It might have turned its course toward this port and soon have found anchorage in a quiet harbor, but instead its sails are set steadily for its more distant port. And, no doubt, these jolly sailors, accustomed to "life on the ocean wave" on the great lakes, enjoy these adventurous experiences of the stormy weather far more than being becalmed on quiet, listless days, when the soft, languorous breeze is scarcely sufficient to keep their sails from idly flapping. The lesson these hardy sailors teach is that he who would reach some distant, difficult port across life's stormy sea must not turn aside because of wind or wave to find some quiet harbor, but must push on to the desired haven. One is reminded of those heroic lines of Joaquin Miller on Columbus:

Behind him lay the gray Azores,
Behind the Gates of Hercules;
Behind him not the ghost of shores;
Before him only shoreless seas.
The good mate said: "Now must we pray,
For, lo! the very stars are gone.
Brave Adm'r'l, speak; what shall I say?"
"Why, say: 'Sail on! sail on! and on!'"

These gray skies, northern winds and boisterous lake bespeak the demise of the summer season on this shore. The loud anthem which the waves are sending up to-day is a fitting funeral dirge in memory of the dead summer. We are always glad to witness these tokens of the change of season before we leave these shores, for, while we enjoy these wilder moods of the lake, and welcome the cooler breeze which sweeps down from the north, they make us the more willing to forsake the beach, with all its pleasant summer memories and enjoyments, to take up the routine of duties in the crowded city again. We have had, however, a number of visitors to this park since September. Bro. R. M. Denholme, manager of the New Orleans "Item," has joined his family here and equally with them is charmed with the beauty of this place and will build here a tabernacle for a refuge from southern heat. The Campbell Institute colony at the club-house have been reinforced by several fresh arrivals and have been having a most restful and enjoyable season of fellowship and recreation. They, too, have decided that somewhere on the heights of "Garrison Park" they will pitch their tents hereafter for a few weeks of midsummer rest and fellowship together. A few evenings since, while the weather was yet summerlike, we built a council fire down upon the beach and all of us who yet remain on this shore gathered about it in a function known as a "marshmallow roast." It was a goodly company of friends whose faces glowed with the light of the bonfire on that balmy evening. When the marshmallows had been duly roasted on long sticks over the glowing embers and all had partaken, there were songs and conundrums and stories until the logs had been reduced to coals. Forming a circle about the fire and joining hands, we sang a verse of "Auld lang syne" and parted with happy "goodnights," closing what will probably be the last bonfire gathering on the beach for the season of 1906.

We are awakened from these autumnal reveries here by the lakeside—the last of our Pentwater Musings for the year—by remembering the near approach of the Buffalo convention and the great autumnal convocation of the brotherhood of Disciples yonder by another lakeside at Buffalo. We are giving special prominence to that convention in our columns, this week, hoping thereby not only to stimulate attendance, but to awaken a deeper interest on the part of the brotherhood in these annual gatherings, and to help us make the best possible use of them. The articles which appear on different aspects of the convention in this number, have been written at our request and we bespeak for them the careful perusal of our readers. To use wisely the opportunities of life is the great secret of success. This is equally true of religious movements as of individuals. A national convention of Christian workers, having in view the same great ends, is a great opportunity, and to fail to make the best possible use of it would be a serious blunder. These conventions are opportunities for social acquaintanceship; for hearing and for learning; for inspiration and for high resolve; for spiritual illumination and for deeper consecration; for a wider vision of the world's needs and a clearer grasp of great spiritual realities; for fraternal counsel; for cementing the bonds of fellowship and of unity; and for forming larger plans for the development of the Redeemer's kingdom. No one who fails to go to Buffalo with an open mind and heart, seeking a divine blessing for himself and his brethren, can get out of it the enduring good that is possible for one to receive from such an assembly. It is only when our souls are attuned to the Infinite that we are prepared to have joyful and profitable fellowship with each other, in worship and in service.

One night has intervened since the foregoing was written, and this morning calm has succeeded the storm, and quietness rests upon the lake and woods. The clouds have rolled by, and the sun is shining once more out of a clear sky. The air, however, is autumnal rather than vernal, and out in the still woods already the leaves of the maple and the hickory are putting on their autumnal tints. The latest visitor to the park is our active, energetic superintendent of the Christian Publishing Company, George L. Snively, who blew in upon us yesterday, in the midst of the storm, and who purposes to cross the lake to-night on his return home. Brother Snively has borne what would be a pretty heavy burden to the average man during the summer season, in the absence from the office of both the Editor and his Assistant, but work with him is what play is to most people—his joy and recreation. Brother Snively has climbed some of the heights of "Garrison Park" and had the magnificent view of lakes and woods, and confesses, as did the queen of old, that the half had not been told. By the time this paragraph reaches the eyes of our readers, we expect to be in St. Louis, and with this paragraph, therefore, we close our "musings" at Pentwater for the season. If anything herein recorded during the summer months has given any pleasure or feeling of restfulness to our readers, as many have indicated, we are grateful for the privilege of having ministered to their enjoyment. If anything of the contrary sort has appeared, we would gladly cancel it. Trusting we shall have the joy of meeting and greeting many of our Easy Chair readers in this beautiful resting place beside the lake in future summers, if God shall give them to us, we close this chapter of our summer "musings" and resume our accustomed place and duties yonder in that great metropolis that sits like a queen on the banks of the Father of Waters.

The Devotional Feature of the Convention

By James M. Philputt

It is of the highest importance that a more prominent place be given in our national conventions to the devotional feature. The paltry fifteen minutes for "prayer and praise" at the opening of each day's session, while most of the delegates are taking their seats, is a poor apology for what this service ought to be. Not only should more time be given to it, but it should come at a time when the great throng would get the benefit of it. Some hour in the afternoon would be more appropriate. A practical difficulty in the way is the fact that the program is always overcrowded. There is not time enough, as it is, for all the things that press for utterance. Luther used to say that some days were so full of work he had to take three hours for prayer instead of one—the more work the more time needed for prayer. The time spent in devotion is not lost, but gained. The mental poise and greater clearness of spiritual vision which come from devout waiting upon God will give increased facility and expedition to all other duties.

Let there be the opening song and prayer at the beginning of the day as at present, but in addition on at least two days of the convention there should be an hour given up wholly to quiet, heart-searching devotion, prayer and testimony and meditation, listening for the voice of the Master who ever calls to a deeper spirituality and a more consecrated service. Better curtail some of the addresses and cut down the reports than to miss the inspiration which would certainly come to the great assembly from such an exercise as this. At a recent Missouri lectureship when the audience was well nigh exhausted listening to addresses, Brother Garrison took the chair for a devotional hour. Many of us will never forget the restful uplift of that hour. The addresses, fine as they were, will soon fade away but the memory of that hour on the Mount of Transfiguration when we "saw no man but Jesus only," will be an inspiration for years to come.

Can we not have a few such "rest periods" in the midst of the great feast at Buffalo? Let them be led by men of acknowledged fitness. We can in this way hear the voices of many men and women of spiritual power for whom there is no room on the program.

We beg humbly to make this suggestion, sincerely believing that due prominence given to this matter will "from many a fault and blunder free us."

The Scope of Our National Convention

By W. F. Richardson

This is perhaps a fitting time for us to inquire as to the extent to which our national convention can go, in the consideration of questions that relate to the common judgment or concerted action of our people, where these questions do not have to do directly with the work of preaching the Gospel to the unsaved world. Space will allow of only the briefest treatment, and that rather suggestive than argumentative.

The constitution of the American Christian Missionary Society, in article II, states its object to be as follows: "Its object shall be the spreading of the Gospel in this and other lands." Nothing in this article of the constitution determines how much is included in this brief statement, but they treat of methods of securing and administering funds, and the like. Nothing is said as to what questions may come before the annual meetings of the society, but common sense, and the usages of such gatherings would indicate that such matters as have to do vitally with the carrying out of the specific object of the society would properly come before them.

Some questions, it is plain, could not receive consideration there. The Gospel that is to be proclaimed, the conditions to be imposed upon those who seek fellowship with the church and salvation from their sins, the rules that are to determine the spiritual lives of the children of God, and, the names they are to wear—all such questions are settled for us by the New Testament, and our very plea for the restoration of primitive Christianity forbids that we should follow the example of those religious bodies that settle questions of doctrine and discipline in their ecclesiastic assemblies. Happily we have had little trouble along these lines, and have kept our annual gathering true to its primal purpose.

Yet there have been many matters, not immediately connected with preaching of the Gospel to the unsaved that we have felt not only free, but impelled to consider in our conventions. The building of church houses, the care of disabled and aged ministers, the relief of the widow and orphan, the cause of Christian and ministerial education, the Bible school and Christian Endeavor work, have all received consideration. For some of these interests we have organized separate boards, directed by the society and fostered through their agencies. None of them has been counted alien to our great purpose of spreading the Gospel throughout the world.

Questions of a somewhat different character have found a place in our deliberations, without protest from any friends of the society. At different times, the work of the Bible societies, the Evangelical Alliance and similar Christian organizations, has been given a cordial hearing and hearty approval, so far as they have commended themselves to our judgment. Christian union has been a question of unfailing interest in these assemblies, and standing committees to further this holy cause have acted in the name and by the authority of the convention for many years. All these have been recognized as legitimate, though indirect adjuncts to the primary object of the society. It would have been folly for us to organize a separate convention for the consideration of each of these questions, and we have never considered it necessary. Why should it be needed now, when we are asked simply to say whether we are willing to co-operate with other Christian people in such aims for social and spiritual betterment as will not require any sacrifice of conscience, or surrender of our plea for Christian union?

Let us not forget two facts. First, that this general convention is our only really representative gathering. Our congresses, ministerial institutes and lectureships are for the preachers alone; but the annual convention is the people's convocation, and there they will in the future, as they have done in the past, express their serious judgment on the matters that have to do with our holy missionary enterprises. The other fact is that this convention neither exercises nor attempts to exercise any control over any church, preacher or individual member of the Churches of Christ. Its action is merely advisory, and it can only express the judgment of the individuals that compose it, or, at most, of the churches represented by delegates. Even then, the church is not bound by the action of such delegates, unless it has instructed them in advance. If the question is asked, "Why then have any action at all, since the churches and individuals will exercise their pleasure as to carrying out the judgment of the convention?" it is sufficient to reply that our whole great missionary advance has been made under this very condition of things, and our people have given due weight to the expressed judgment of the convention, as that of a body of consecrated and intelligent members of the body of Christ; while they have felt free to act in any other way they thought right, even if directly opposite to such action of the convention. They will do so in this case. Any action of the coming convention would be only an expression of the one really representative gathering of our brotherhood on the question of our readiness to co-operate with our brethren of the Protestant world, and would bind no individual or church beyond his or its own desire to co-operate. Hence it seems to me that no harm, but rather great good, would come from the recognition of the relevancy of this question of Christian federation to our great and glorious plea for the oneness of all the people of God; and I, for one, trust that our wiser brethren may find some way in which it may be brought before our convention, without stirring up the passions and prejudices to which we are all subject, but which surely can be laid aside when we consider a subject so closely related to the unity of the Lord's people, and the answering of the prayer of Jesus.

Shall We Have a Delegate Convention?

By T. P. Haley

Our national conventions have become the pride of our people, and the wonder of our contemporaries. The large attendance, the admirable addresses, and the apparent harmony of the proceedings are a constant surprise to the ecclesiastic bodies of the country.

That such diversified interests and so many of them should be considered and disposed of in less than a week is indeed most remarkable. That the several societies are able to so divide the time that there is apparently no friction is still more remarkable. They are in many respects very great meetings, and yet many of our most thoughtful brethren are wondering if there is not still a better way. This feeling is wide-spread and begins to find expression in many parts of the country. Is it not the part of wisdom to give heed?

The American Christian Missionary under different names is "the mother of us all." It has under its general management and control "Home Missions," "Church Extension," Benevolences, Ministerial Relief, the Educational Society. It has considered the question of federation and at times civic, state and national questions. In a word it stands for the general interests of our Zion throughout the country.

The Foreign society was at the beginning composed of life directors, life members, and annual members. It was hoped that its funds would be secured from these sources, but in its history it became necessary to appeal directly to the churches. The C. W. B. M. Society is composed of its auxiliaries, its life members, and theirs is more nearly a delegate convention than any of the societies, but they are not delegates from the churches. All the conventions representing these various interests have become essentially mass meetings. They are not representative bodies in any correct sense of the word. They are composed of all who can be induced to attend. Cheap rates, cheap entertainment, special trains over attractive routes are invoked by different agencies for all they are worth to swell the attendance.

The business for the most part is transacted by the different boards of the various interests and their action is generally ratified without discussion, by the votes of the masses—the churches that give the money, and that are supposed to be interested, are only indirectly represented.

It is not strange that many feel that the time is come for a closer touch of the churches with these conventions. While these societies are accomplishing great results, it is a matter of profound regret that up to this date we have not been able to secure the co-operation of a majority of our congregations, perhaps not a majority of our preachers.

The writer confidently believes that in order to secure this end and in order to the highest efficiency of the conventions, they should be made strictly delegate bodies; that no one should be recognized as a part of the convention who does not bear from some church or some association of churches certificates of appointment as delegates with authority to speak and vote for the churches.

This would secure, sooner or later, representation from all the churches among us.

It is considered a high honor, sought and coveted, among our religious neighbors to be chosen to represent their churches in their assemblies, conferences and associations. Why not among us? Perhaps even one delegate from each church would make the conventions cumbersome, but county and districts and state could easily arrange the matter of representation. The first great gain would be to give every church a voice in the deliberations of the convention. The second gain would be to keep all the preachers and churches in intelligent touch with all our enterprises. In the third place a majority vote in the convention on any question would determine every question of interest and go far toward the reconciliation of that element called the Antis. In the fourth place, the churches and not the editors nor the secretaries would decide the questions to be considered, for such a delegation could be trusted to consider and decide any and all questions that come before a growing people. All power resides in the people, and the people rather than the clergy can be trusted. It requires no prophet to see that the breach between the co-operating churches and noncontributing churches will continue to widen unless in some way we can be brought into common counsel. It would be wise to make it the chief concern of all agencies of the societies to secure increasing representation in our meetings. Only in this way can the unity which we have so earnestly commended to others be preserved among us. Let there be the utmost freedom in all our discussions, in conventions and trust the inevitable law of "the survival of the fittest." As this great country could not survive "half free and half slaves," so be assured that the unity of our great brotherhood can not be preserved half co-operating and half opposing or indifferent.

The Business Side of the Convention

By F. M. Rains

The business transacted in our national conventions is all important. Indeed, this is the chief reason for the convention. Most of the business, however, is necessarily done in committees. The time required would be too great and the process too tedious to conduct all the business in open convention. Hence the careful selection of well-equipped men and women to go over every phase and detail of the work. This is done in the quiet of the committee room, with most thoughtful attention. Results are reported and recommendations are offered. Such a report after due consideration by a competent and painstaking committee should command, and usually does command, great respect by the whole body. Amendments and substitutes will be offered for such a report after careful reflection and with due caution. The convention is no parlimentary gymnasium. To expedite real business is the constant aim. However, the reports of the committees are the property of the conventions to be disposed of as the combined wisdom of the great body may suggest.

It goes without saying that when one accepts a position on a committee he should serve faithfully. No personal inconvenience should be permitted to in any way prevent. This may involve the loss of a part of the program, even some of the very best addresses. No matter. Certain important work has been accepted and must be looked into carefully and from every possible angle of view. Neglect will retard and frustrate the objects of the convention.

Another matter. Due attention should be given to the annual meeting of the Board of Managers of the different societies. Every really interested member of such board will be present when possible. The work of a whole year is reviewed and plans are adopted or proposed for future activities. Sometimes the attendance upon such meetings is altogether too small. It is important that each member acquaint himself as far as possible before the meeting with the scope of the report to be reviewed. This implies, of course, investigation and preparation before the annual gathering. Of course, the boards will inquire diligently into the condition of the treasuries and learn all about the financial strength of the work, the obligations assumed, and the probable resources, etc. Business caution will also learn the exact facts as to the safety of trust funds and other invested funds, the bonds of treasurers and other safeguards as to permanency and absolute public confidence.

As our work in all departments grows, the conventions should be more and more on the alert in the selection of officers and boards of the various societies. As far as possible every such member should be thoroughly interested in the work and his efficiency should be above question. The importance of a live, up-to-date, wide-awake board or executive committee can hardly be overstated. No department of work will go beyond the intelligent interest and enterprising efficiency of the board having it in hand. The convention as a whole can hardly make wise selections, and hence the responsibilities of the various nominating committees.

The convention addresses are important, the social enjoyment is most delightful, the spiritual awakening and experience will be remembered with inexpressible joy, but the conventions must give due emphasis to the business side if they are altogether successful.

I believe this great international gathering will prove one of the most useful in our splendid history.

Educational Value of the Great Conventions

By HERBERT L. WILLETT.

There is no school in which the spirit and purpose of the Disciples of Christ may be so accurately learned as in the annual conventions which gather to consider the great interests of the brotherhood. Up to this central place representatives from all sections of the land and from beyond the sea come to bring their offerings of money and testimony and to exchange information regarding the progress of the cause.

The educational value of the convention is foremost that of affording knowledge of our missionary work. The reports of the board, the addresses of the leaders in our Israel, the recital of missionary experiences by those who have returned from their fields of service give the listener new and expanded horizons and reveal the opportunities set before the Disciples for larger things.

The social side of the convention is not without distinct educational value. The give and take of conversation during the intervals of the sessions, the revival of old associations, the forming of new acquaintances and the perception of the spirit of and personnel of the brotherhood are among the best experiences of the occasion.

One goes back to his home with a new sense of the greatness of the people with which he is associated, and a new consciousness of the opportunities confronting him. If he lives in a region where the Disciples are numerous he has the privilege of bringing to them the inspiration of a great gathering; if he is an isolated Disciple, he gains courage to bear an urgent and more vital testimony regarding Christian union on the New Testament platform.

The conventions are our greatest educational force.

The Local Arrangements at Buffalo

By R. H. MILLER,

Chairman of the Executive Committee.

The Entertainment Committee for the Buffalo convention has spared no pains to secure the convenience and comfort of the delegates. Buffalo is a great convention city. Conventions follow one upon the other without intermission. The hotels and boarding houses are crowded the year around. It is therefore difficult to secure reduced rates or to reserve accommodations in advance.

Nevertheless, the committee has secured reduced rates at nearly all hotels and also a limited number of advance reservations. Only first-class hotels and boarding houses have been selected.

It is well to keep in mind that Convention Hall, where all sessions of the convention will be held, is on the border of the residence section of the city. It is removed from the commercial hotels and the cafes and restaurants. The committee has tried, therefore, to get rates at the hotels near Convention Hall on the American plan, i. e., lodging and meals. Delegates are advised to take hotels when offered on the American plan. Considering the location of the hall, it has been necessary for the committee to make provision for the noonday and the evening meals near the place of meeting. Excellent cafes may be found in the downtown section within three-quarters of a mile of Convention Hall. But many will prefer to be accommodated within easy walking distance of the hall. We have provided for a lunch counter on the second floor of Convention Hall, where a nicely prepared box lunch will be served with tea, coffee, lemonade, ice cream and fruits at the lowest possible rate. This lunch counter will be open from 10 a. m. to 8 p. m., so that light refreshments may be had at any hour. On the second floor, with this lunch counter, will be the exhibit room for the missionary societies and the newspaper room, where will be the booths of our brotherhood papers. Both these rooms will be provided with abundance of chairs and divans. On this floor also will be a fine room for the ladies. This will be furnished as a drawing room, with every comfort and convenience. A room for the men, with spacious halls connecting all, will furnish place for all who will avail themselves of this kind of noonday rest and refreshment. For the more fastidious, who are not accommodated at the nearby hotes or the downtown restaurants, we have arranged for a temporary cafe, under the management of one of the best caterers in the city. This will be located within two or three blocks of the hall. Here a first-class meal can be secured at a reasonable rate.

A committee of 200 women have canvassed the residence section of the city to secure homes for the entertainment of delegates. This canvass has been conducted only in the better section of the city and within one mile and a half of the convention. The accommodations offered to the delegates to the Buffalo Convention will be exceptional in the class of homes opened to them.

A rate of one dollar for lodging and breakfast, and from 40 to 75 cents for lodging will prevail. A stub will be torn from the registration card at the registration desk at convention hall, stating the assignment and giving directions how to reach the place. When necessary pages will be provided to escort to the place of entertainment. All cars leading to Convention Hall will be marked "Convention Hall." A special folder explaining the mission and position of the Disciples of Christ will be furnished in numbers to each delegate to use in answering questions of the curious, and to leave upon the cars and in the streets.

Buffalo is not like other cities in climatic conditions. The beautiful residence section is free from smoke and noise. The air is pure and invigorating. The nights are delightfully cool and refreshing. One may come to Buffalo as he goes to a resort for health and renewed vitality. The side trips by rail, trolley and boat offer every form of diversion and pleasure.

A card of information will be furnished each delegate answering all expected questions as to hotels, cafes, resorts, car lines, transfers, places of meeting, parks, rates of carriage and auto hire, public touring cars and sight seeing cars, etc. All that can be done in advance to make a visit to the Buffalo convention profitable and pleasant will be done. We have tried to profit by the excellencies of management in past conventions and to improve wherever improvement is possible over them. The motto of New York state is "Excelsior." We shall try to make the convention worthy of that ideal.

MUCH CHEAPER

Grape-Nuts Accomplished What Ocean Travel and Medicine Could Not.

It's not what you eat, but what you digest that gives strength.

Many a man drags around year after year half dead, because his food is not digested, and he takes first one kind of medicine and then another without relief—because medicines can not take the place of well-digested food, and never will.

Give nature a fair chance, as a prominent German-American of Chicago did, and if you're in a bad fix from stomach trouble, read what he says and try it on.

"About a year ago," he writes, "I was afflicted with stomach trouble which so enfeebled me I had to quit work. I grew so lean I was merely skin and bones.

"I had the advice of six different doctors and two college professors. One thought I had cancer of the stomach, another advised a change of climate, and recommended ocean travel. I decided to follow this last and went abroad for three months.

"But my health became worse and worse. The least amount of food caused me awful pain, and I obtained relief only by having my stomach pumped out.

"Nothing did me any good. Soon I could take no food at all except strained oat meal; then a time came when I could not even take that. I lost courage and prepared myself to die. At that time my wife brought me a package of Grape-Nuts, but I had no confidence in anything any longer.

"She finally persuaded me to taste a few spoonfuls of the new food and to my surprise I retained it and had no distress. That made me feel fine and encouraged to make another trial for life. For several months I ate nothing else—every day a bowl of Grape-Nuts with cream, and thus I regained my health, my old-time weight and am now as well as ever. I could not live without Grape-Nuts. As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

That cruise ended I am at liberty to see things at home. Those letters were all written on shipboard and for nearly five months my pen has been resting. Meantime much has been going on in sight of my lofty perch. Federation still worries some folks; Mr. Roosevelt's spelling reform disturbs others; Mr. Bryan's views on government ownership of railroads are not without their elements of vexation and annoyance; the packing industry, the oil octopus, the dissolution of the Douma, Russell Sage's $60,000,000, Philadelphia's trust company and Chicago's Milwaukee avenue bank, the Thaw & Corey nastiness, the $50,000,000 being spent at the nation's capitol in improvements, and many other matters of interest have been passing in review. The nation has even paused to read millions of extras announcing a bloody prize fight, and telling how in the presence of 10,000 howling American savages a negro pounded a white man out in Nevada! The very dome hides its diminished head in shame.

In our little religious world there have been movements. Bethany Beach has had another season—the best in its history. The attendance was the largest and the assembly the most successful. E. B. Bagby was in charge of the program, and such names as Wallace Tharp, I. J. Spencer, J. A. Lord, J. W. Carpenter, Peter Ainslie, L. G. Batman, Mrs. Princess Long, the Netz sisters, H. Lookabill, H. H. Moninger, J. A. Hopkins, Charles M. Watson, W. R. Warren, J. E. Stuart, W. H. Graham, Walter F. Smith, Philip Johnson and H. P. Atkins will give some idea of the excellence of the bill of fare. Visitors were with us from fifteen states, as far north as Michigan and west as Missouri and south as Kentucky and North Carolina. Some new cottages have gone up and others are planned, and among new improvements a large hotel, electric lights, and ice plant.

The removal of E. B. Bagby from our midst is greatly regretted. The Franklin avenue church has done well to secure him. He has rendered splendid service here and built up a reputation that any man might well covet. The Ninth street church can ill afford to give him up. It is grieving over its great loss, and in all the throes of the choice of his successor. In the fifteen years of its life it has known no other pastor. It has been a great hive of young people, and our brother has been an elder brother to them. He has been an unusually devoted pastor as well as a faithful and efficient teacher, and naturally his people are deeply attached to him. And not only in the church but in the city Mr. Bagby has a large following. The influence of his life has been felt far and wide. His service as chaplain of the house brought him in contact with many of the leading men in government circles. His zeal for the work of Christian Endeavor gave him a wide acquaintance with the young people of all the churches. His evangelical fervor and success made him felt in all the general missionary operations of our Christian forces. His sound judgment, fervent piety, and genuine humanity made him popular with all classes. So the work under his stewardship grew steadily and the church to-day enrolls over one thousand souls. It is an excellent field for a consecrated man. The retiring pastor goes with the prayers and good wishes of all our churches. We feel assured that his success in his new field will be every way in keeping with his honorable achievements at the nation's capital.

E. B. Bagby.

Still I am old fashioned enough to believe in long pastorates. Yesterday I preached my thirty-first anniversary sermon. The text was Acts 9:31. Take it up in your regular ministry some time and see how fruitful it is. Rest, edification, practical religion, joy of spiritual life, multiplication. We have had a profitable year notwithstanding the preacher's absence during the winter. Fifty-four have been added at our regular meetings and over $8,000 have been contributed for the various causes that have appealed to us. Our Sunday-school has been larger than ever before in our history, and our people have grown in the graces and fruits of the Spirit. Some of our best beloved have fallen asleep in Christ, and others have removed to other parts of the Lord's vineyard, but the work in all departments has steadily advanced. Ten thousand causes of thanksgiving are ours for past blessing and ten thousand thousand causes of encouragement as we look to the future.

One of the best things this summer has been the improvements in our house of worship. It is one of the most attractive now in the city. Newly frescoed and lighted, with new cushions and carpet, and a new baptistry with white tiling and marble coping transformed into a thing of beauty and a joy forever, the whole church appears as a new sanctuary. Our people are happy and ready for such a year of service as we have never before known. Only four persons were present at this anniversary who were with us at the beginning. In this period the church has changed perhaps three times and it has been possible three times for the preacher to turn the barrel. Vermont avenue may need a change, but the pastor anchors here—a new state of things would appall him.

WELL PEOPLE TOO

Wise Doctor Gives Postum to Convalescents.

A wise doctor tries to give nature its best chance by saving the little strength of the already exhausted patient, and building up wasted energy with simple but powerful nourishment.

"Five years ago," writes a doctor, "I commenced to use Postum in my own family instead of coffee. I was so well pleased with the results that I had two grocers place it in stock, guaranteeing its sale.

"I then commenced to recommend it to my patients in place of coffee, as a nutritious beverage. The consequence is every store in town is now selling it, as it has become a household necessity in many homes.

"I'm sure I prescribe Postum as often as any one remedy in the Materia Medica—in almost every case of indigestion and nervousness I treat, and with the best results.

"When I once introduce it into a family, it is quite sure to remain. I shall continue to use it and prescribe it in families where I practice.

"In convalescence from pneumonia, typhoid fever and other cases, I give it as a liquid, easily absorbed diet. You may use my letter as a reference any way you see fit." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

BUFFALO CHURCHES AND PREACHERS

Richmond Avenue Church, Buffalo.

Church of Christ, Niagara Falls.

The first mission of the Church of Christ that was established in Buffalo was in 1867, and at the instance of interested brethren in western New York. Services were held in the Protestant French church at the corner of Tupper and Ellicott streets. In 1870 a regular church organization was effected with thirty-one charter members. Within a few years the body had attained strength enough to build a comfortable though plain house of worship at the corner of Cottage and Maryland streets. This building was occupied till 1887, when the beautiful stone church at the corner of Richmond avenue and Bryant street was dedicated to the worship of God, and has been up to the present the home of the mother church in the city. Early in the '90s a mission was opened on Jefferson street near Utica, and this has outgrown the mother church in membership and is known as the Jefferson Street Church of Christ. Another mission point was established at Forest avenue and Danforth street some years later, and a church was soon after organized, the membership of which is now in the neighborhood of two hundred. The membership in the city has grown from 31 in 1870 to about 1,200 in 1906.

There are churches of the New Testament faith and practice in the suburbs of Buffalo and near-by cities. In the Tonawandas we are represented by three buildings. Niagara Falls, East Aurora, Williamsville, Clarence and North Lancaster have each one church.

Jefferson Street Church, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Jefferson street mission school in Buffalo was started under the superintendency of Bro. Geo. R. Godfrey, in the third story over a grocery. A building was erected before the church was organized, so the new congregation started at once with a church home. Among the charter members are noted the names of Bartholomew, Williamson and Samuel W. Beeson, with their families, and Richard Bulgin.

Located in a rapidly growing section, the field presented for the labors of the church was an unsurpassed one. Its responsiveness was shown in a growth of membership to 278 in five years. The present membership is over 600. The congregation has been fortunate in its pastors, all of whom have been faithful servants of the Lord and efficient leaders of men. The following have served up to the present time: Hiram Van Kirk, D. W. Besaw, Lowell C. McPherson, J. P. Lichtenberger, J. M. Rudy, Benjamin S. Ferrall. Also in 1906, Mrs. Nettie H. McCorkle served as pastoral helper for six and one-half months.

From the first the church has been actively evangelistic and missionary. Meetings with large results have been held by the following brethren: J. H. O. Smith, Roland A. Nichols, J. P. Lichtenberger and Allen Wilson. Besides these, the pastors and other brethren have held excellent meetings.

In 1899 the pastor, Lowell McPherson and wife were given up to become missionaries to Havana, Cuba; and in 1904 the church became a living link by sending one of its own young ladies, Miss Meldrum, to Cuba. B. S. Ferrell is the present pastor.

The Church at North Lancaster, N. Y.

In November, 1833, Brother Jasper Moss came to Lancaster to proclaim the ancient Gospel. He preached two evenings at the stone schoolhouse, after which he and Brother Porter Thomas and Brother Yearnshaw preached at different intervals of time at the same place until April 3, 1834, when a three days' meeting was held. Many were baptized and began to meet on the first day of the week to search the Scriptures. Thomas Hutchinson was appointed to open the meeting and presided. During the summer many were added to the church, notwithstanding the opposition from sectarianism was very great. The number of additions was 84. Christian Vinecke was appointed bishop of the church. In 1848 a meeting was held and a building committtee appointed. One-fourth of an acre of land was purchased, a meeting house, dimensions 47 feet long and 32 feet wide, was built and completed, and is still in use by the congregation at the present time.

The congregation has ever since kept up its organization. During the fall of 1855 a meeting was held by William Hayes, and a large number were added to the church. Milton Bartlett was the minister for a number of years. J. C. Goodrich held a meeting about the year 1866 or 1867; many were added. Since then, James Encell, W. O. Moore, McKay, A. M. Harvuot, Sinclair, Simon Rohrer, E. C. Wells, Smootz Sutton have ministered to the church. L. B. Withee is the present minister. Being a country church, its membership is greatly diminished by removals.

Clarence Church.

Prior to the year 1834 Alexander Campbell traveled through Western New York preaching a few sermons at different points, Clarence being one of them. In 1834 Brethren Moss, Thomas and Yearnshaw visited Clarence and established a congregation numbering about 20, who met from house to house, but principally at the home of Jacob Strickler. In 1844 Daniel Strickler and Peleg Stranahan appeared before Emanuel Herr, justice of the peace, making affidavit to an article setting forth the facts that a society had been organized to be known as the First Congregation of Disciples of Christ, in Clarence. In 1844 the first meeting house was built at the west end of the village, on a lot given by Bro. Abram Shope. Many soul-stirring sermons were afterwards preached in the old stone meeting house on the hill by J. J. Moss, A. B. Green, Isaac Errett, Dr. Belden and others. In 1876 the church property was sold and a lot bought near the center of the village, and a substantial brick building erected, where the congregation still worships. The membership numbers about 50, about 35 being active workers.

The Church at Niagara Falls, N. Y.

On December 6, 1868, the Church of Christ located at Niagara Falls was organized by Tobias Witmer, David Greybiel and Joshua Goodrich. It began life in a school house in the country about three miles east of what was then the village of Suspension Bridge. The next year a small building was purchased in the city at the present location, Niagara avenue and Tenth street, and the first meeting was held in this building April 11, 1869. The new building, modern and commodious, was dedicated in September, 1898, by E. V. Zollars during the pastorate of F. W. Norton. The present membership numbers about 300. The property is valued at $15,000. The church holds a place of respect and influence among the other religious bodies of the community. It is progressive and missionary. Among those who have served as regular pastors are E. A. Pardee, J. H. Gordenier, John C. Encell, O. G. Hertzog, Dr. W. A. Belding, Andrew Scott, B. C. Black and F. W. Norton. The present minister, J. A. Wharton, has been in charge of the work for the past six years.

The Tonawanda Church.

The Church of Christ at Tonawanda, N. Y., was organized in March, 1853. This church was practically the pioneer among the churches known as "the Church of Christ" in Western New York. It has been instrumental in assisting to establish the work in Buffalo, Niagara Falls and North Tonawanda. It has been served by such men as Jasper J. Moss, J. M. Bartlett, J. D. Benedict, C. L. Straight, H. C. Parsons, J. C. Goodrich, George Lobingier, Levi Osborne, Frank Talmage, S. C. Humphrey and others of more recent years. The present membership roll comprises 420 names. The church is active in carrying forward the local work, and is a contributor to the missionary enterprises of the brotherhood.

Edward F. Randall, who is now the pastor, began his work as a Christian minister in October, 1892, at Cato, Cayuga county, N. Y. Four years were spent with that congregation. After 15 months' pastorate at Waterloo, N. Y., he removed to Swampscott, Mass., where an exceedingly difficult work was undertaken. After a brief interim, during which time he served the church at Troy. Pa., the work was again taken up at Swampscott and continued until January, 1904, at which time he was called to the work at Tonawanda, N. Y.

The Central Church of Christ at North Tonawanda was the outgrowth of a mission Sunday-school which was organized in a growing section of that city in February, 1899. It is situated in what is known as the Ironton District. There is no other English-speaking Protestant church within a half mile of this site, and previously to its organization little direct religious influence was being exerted on that part of the city. From the first the Bible school has had a prosperous growth, the numbers of the school increasing until it was crowded out of the first quarters, which was a remodeled store building. From its organization Mr. George F. Rand, president of the Columbia National and the Central National Banks of Buffalo, and the First National, of Tonawanda, has been its efficient superintendent. The school now has an enrollment of more than 500, and its average attendance last year was 334.

To answer the needs of this growing work, a church was organized in March of 1901, with 40 charter members. The church has steadily grown, until at the present time it has a membership of 300. It is active in evangelistic, missionary and philanthropic enterprises, and has a bright future. Plans were early laid for a large and modern building. In 1902 the present Bible school portion of the Christian Tabernacle was completed. This is a thoroughly modern structure, built upon the most modern and approved plans of Sunday-school architecture, and erected at a cost of about $20,000. The church is planning to build the remainder of the tabernacle in the near future. When completed, the tabernacle will have a capacity of 1,500, and will cost about $40,000. The church has had two pastors. The first was J. H. Hughes, of California, and the present one W. C. Bower, formerly of Indiana.

The Dunkirk Mission.

At the call of the New York State Missionary Boad to come to this important field, R. P. McPherson resigned as pastor of the church at Rossville, Ill, and took the work at Dunkirk, N. Y., two years ago last April, S. J. Corey, state secretary, having been on the ground a few weeks previous and organized a Bible school, with 10 scattered Disciples he found to lead them on. They were meeting in an upper hall which could only be used on Lord's day afternoon. Hence they had Bible school, communion and preaching all in the afternoon, with no morning or evening service. For one year and a half the hour for morning service was spent with the church at Fredonia. Since that time Brother McPherson has given all his time to Dunkirk, and they have been compelled to move the mission five times since its organization. They have leased the Odd Fellows' hall, in the new temple, for one year, which is a very comfortable room, furnished elegantly and well adapted for our work. There are 64 names on the record, and the Bible school numbered 105 before this last move. Three hundred dollars are pledged for a lot.

We desire the names of 1,000 persons who will attend the Buffalo convention October 12-18, who will sing in the grand convention chorus with the great Pan-American organ. We will mail in advance a copy of the grand chorus anthem, "Sing Unto God," by Vance, which will be used in an evening's program of the convention and a chorus badge will be sent in advance. Pastors, tell your church singers and urge them to attend. We expect 1,000 names by October 1. Send names to W. E. M. Hackleman, Indianapolis, Ind., musical director of the convention.

A. B. KELLOGG,
Chairman of Music Committe.

P. S.—The music of the convention program will be taken from "Gloria in Excelsis," the only real hymnal ever published by our people.

Postoffice, telegraphs, telephones are installed in Convention Hall.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions will have in several particulars the best report in the history of its work. This has been for it a year of building, and in the United States, Jamaica, India, Mexico and Porto Rico its equipment has been materially bettered.

H. A. Denton is one of the most successful and energetic of our Missouri preachers. He is well known to convention goers in our state as he is a ready debater. He is especially identified with Christian Endeavor work.

Miss Ada Boyd, for twenty-four years a worker in India's zenanas, will tell of her work in and about Bilaspur. Miss Boyd is one of the pioneer missionaries of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in India, and one of its most efficient workers.

Porto Rico will be represented by Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Ireland and Miss Nora Siler. These workers are all from Bayamon, which is the center of the work in Porto Rico. They have all been connected with the educational work of the mission, and will speak of their experiences.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions will hold its annual board meeting in the Delaware Avenue Methodist Church, Buffalo, N. Y., Friday, October 12, beginning at 10 o'clock in the morning. All state presidents and state secretaries are urged to be present.

Miss Mary Graybiel, who opened the work in Mahoba, India, will speak of the history of the work in the Hamirpur district. Miss Graybiel has been identified with our forward workers in India and will be heard with deep interest.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions urges all its friends and acquaintances to meet with it in the national convention in Buffalo, N. Y., October 12, 1906. The first meeting will be held Friday evening, opening at 7:45 o'clock. The work will continue through Saturday, morning and afternoon. Come and rejoice with this organization in the work of the year.

Dr. and Mrs. Rioch.

Missionaries under the Foreign Society who will be present at the convention are A. E. Cory and wife, of Wuwu, China, who are soon to return to their field; David Rioch and wife, of India, and Ray Eldred and wife, of Bolengi, Africa.

The Foreign Missionary Society, whose session will be held on Monday, has arranged an excellent program. Some men well known to the brotherhood, like J. A. Lord, of "The Christian Standard," and J. M. Philputt, of St. Louis, will take prominent part. The latter will be welcomed by the New York people as he spent many years of his ministry in that state. One of the speakers will be Wallace Tharp, who has charge of a great church at Allegheny City, Pa.

Miner Lee Bates is one of our young men who has undertaken the very difficult work of the pastorate so long held by B. B. Tyler in New York city. He is on the program of the Foreign Society.

S. M. Cooper, who has been the president of the American Christian Missionary Society since the convention at San Francisco, will be general chairman of the Buffalo convention. Brother Cooper is a business man, but has long shown a devoted interest in the organized work of our churches.

Harry D. Smith, one of the most popular of Kentucky preachers, will, we are sure, give us some "straight talk" in his address on "Higher Ideals in Christian Stewardship," which is on the program of the A. C. M. S.

W. E. M. Hackleman will have charge of the music and into no hands could it be committed with more assurance. The selected hymns have been chosen from "Gloria in Excelsis," the new hymnal published by the Christian Publishing Company.

Miss Ella Maddock, Deoghur, India, who has had charge of our leper station since the death of Miss Jane Adam, will tell of her work for these unfortunates.

W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, Mo., who will speak of Jamaica has had unusually good opportunities for becoming acquainted with the people of that beautiful island. Some of his adventures, while there but a few months ago, were most interesting. We are sure he will take his audience into his confidence, telling his hearers not only of the churches of Jamaica, but how to ford its swift rushing streams, to climb its steep mountains, and to quote its pointed proverbs.

Prof. H. J. Derthick, of Hazel Green, Ky., who addressed the national convention on the subject of educational work in the Kentucky Highlands, has long been an earnest worker among the mountain people. He knows the mountains and will open a most fascinating chapter in their history.

Dr. Mary Longdon.

Our Budget

—Ho, for Buffalo!

—A convention city without a peer!

—October 12-18 is the date.

—In other columns of The Christian-Evangelist you will find much about this great international gathering of the Christian churches.

—How will you go? If you would like to enjoy the fellowship of the party in the "Christian-Evangelist Special" we will try to give you a place, if you will write us at once. See further particulars on page 1191.

—The church at Ozark, Mo., is still without a pastor.

—There is in hand one more article of the series, "Modern Religious Persecution."

—Grant A. Waller, of Utica, Ohio, has been called to the pastorate at Zanesville, Ohio.

—C. A. Hill has been called to fill the pulpit of the Island Church, Wheeling, W. Va., until January 1.

—The Foreign Society has received a gift on the annuity plan from a friend in Missouri. This is the second gift by this donor.

—W. O. Breeden writes that with two more payments the church at DeQueen, Ark., will be out of debt. They have just called a pastor.

—The office force is eagerly awaiting the return of its Chief, who, all being well, will, with Mrs. Garrison, be back in St. Louis before these lines reach our readers.

—We had a pleasant call from C. C. Peck, who was for some time located at Arkansas City, Kan. Brother Peck was on his way to the state meeting and may again locate in Kansas.

—Cecil J. Armstrong has been pastor of the church at Winchester, Ky., since his graduation from college. His success there has made other churches wonder whether they could not persuade him to leave. We believe that Missouri has its eye on him at the present moment.

Cecil J. Armstrong, a Convention Speaker.

—J. R. Blunt will leave Richland, Mo., to take up the work at Marionville about October 1. Richland is a good field for the right man. Brother Blunt speaks very highly of the brethren there.

—A. R. Wallace, of Seligman, has been added to the state forces in Southwest Missouri. He will be sent to help county boards where they are not strong enough to employ a man during the year.

—Charles W. Mahin writes that the church at Rock Creek Centre needs a minister for one-fourth time. Write him at Angola, Ind., if you desire to be put into correspondence with the proper parties.

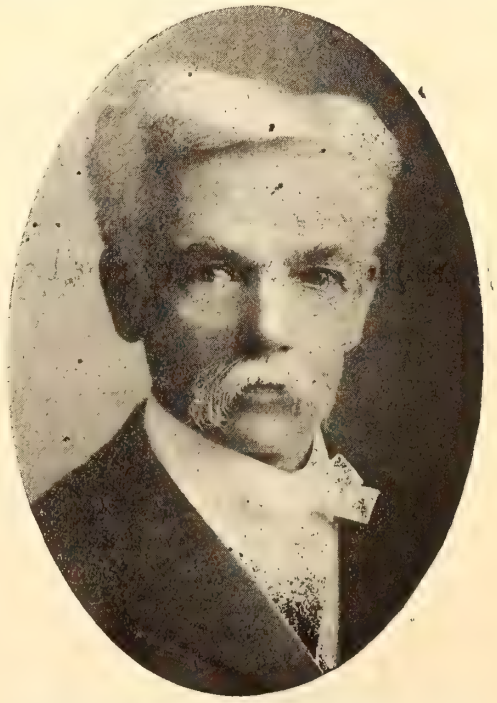
—Alfred Munyon has just entered upon his tenth year's pastorate of the church at Kirksville, Mo. That speaks well both for the church and the preacher. We need more of these more permanent pastorates.

—T. M. Myers, Lexington, Ky., writes that a new church has just been dedicated at Charlotte Furnace, Ky., where he has been holding a meeting with a large attendance, and 10 additions up to date.

—Dr. Luttenberger sends us a picture post-card from Munich, containing a representation of the Frauenkirche—one of the finest churches in Europe. Dr. Luttenberger may attend the Buffalo convention.

—C. A. Burkhardt, one of the young men of the South Joplin church, was recently set apart for the ministry, this being the third ordination in that congregation since it was organized less than three years ago.

—We are glad to learn that the board of the church at Bethany, Mo., has just recommended to that church that it become a living link in the Foreign Society. The average attendance at the Bible school has been increased through the summer months and a contest is to be begun with the schools at Albany and Bethany. T. J. Golightly is the pastor.



B. H. Hayden, Pastor of the Forest Avenue Church, Buffalo.

—All offerings for the Board of Church Extension should be sent to G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Waterworks building, Kansas City, Mo. Remember that the books close at noon September 29.

—J. V. Coombs and J. Walter Wilson have united their work in the evangelistic field and are now holding a meeting in the large tabernacle at Kent, O., where A. A. Doak is pastor. Their permanent address is 413 Majestic building, Indianapolis, Ind.

—The new church at Walla Walla, Wash., which will cost $40,000 when completed, has been opened for services.

—J. J. Bare will take up the work at Sumner, Ill., September 16, giving part of his time to Bridgeport and Pleasant Hill.

—Secretary F. M. Rains dedicated new churches as follows: Armington, Ill., September 2, L. E. Chase, pastor; Heyworth, Ill., September 9, John P. Givens, pastor; South Louisville, Ky., September 16, E. B. Richey, pastor.

—The Junior Christian Endeavor Society of Armington, Ill., is the banner society of that state, it having given a larger amount per member for missions than any society in Illinois. Mrs. L. E. Chase is superintendent.

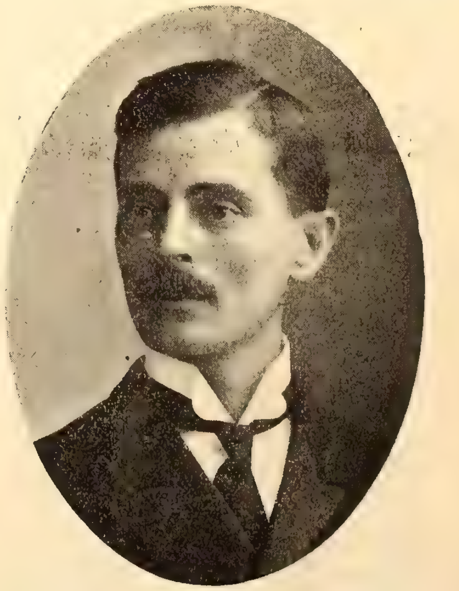
—Ralph McCorkle, who goes out under the Foreign Missionary Society, was a visitor at The Christian-Evangelist office last week. He has promised to let our readers have the benefit of his experiences in the foreign field.

—We are glad to hear that Robert H. Newton, who has been laid up for some time with an attack of appendicitis, is at last on the mend and he hopes to be able to be at the convention and go with "The Christian-Evangelist Special" party.

—Evangelist H. F. MacLane, of Hiram, Ohio, has been speaking lately at Trumbull, Ohio, and Sandy Lake, Pa. He will begin at Ladonia, Ind., September 23. He is also to take part in the simultaneous meeting at Indianapolis the last of October.

—Thursday, September 27, is "Bible College Centennial Day" in the Kentucky state convention. The college at Lexington will go on a special train. A large attendance is expected from the Sunday-schools in the state. The Baptist and Presbyterian seminaries have been invited, and a strong program has been arranged, President E. Y. Mullins being among the speakers.

—W. F. Turner is a man of whom Missouri is proud. He has done remarkable work at Joplin—the great mining centre of our southwest.



W. F. Turner, a Convention Speaker.

—We have not received the news authoritatively, but a newspaper telegram announces that C. C. Morrison has resigned his pastorate at Springfield, Ill., and it has been accepted. It is informally stated that he will take unto himself a wife soon.

—H. W. Milner has resigned his work at Harrison, Ohio, and will be ready soon for a new field of labor. He enjoyed recently the helpful association of Joseph Armistead, of Norwood, Ohio, and R. W. Abberley, of Walnut Hills, in a fine rally day service.

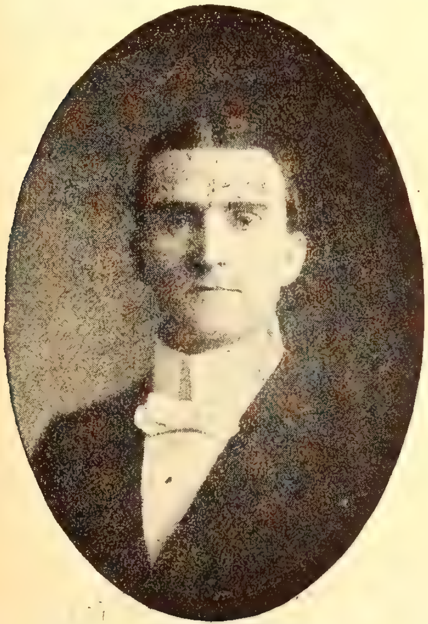
—D. T. Stanley has accepted a call from the Kensington Christian Church, Philadelphia, Pa., and has already entered upon the work. He writes that he has been given a royal welcome. A reception was tendered him on Thursday evening in which all the churches of the city took part.

—S. M. Bernard, who is located at Boulder, Colo., which is the site of the State University, has just taken what we believe a very excellent step in giving four Sunday evening addresses for the new student. He discusses him "Away from home, among friends, spending money and laying a solid foundation."

—The church at Salem, Ind., is enjoying happy times. Every dollar of the $4,500 that have just been spent on the building has been paid. A $1,200 organ has been installed, Mr. Carnegie paying one-half of it while the other half has already been raised by the church. W. Y. Allen, the pastor, has been called for his sixth year.

—The First Christian Church of Bloomington, Ill., has just given a reception for their new pastor, Edgar D. Jones, and his wife. Special invitations were issued to the members of the Second Christian Church and the resident pastors and their wives. It was a very happy occasion and the indications are that under the leadership of Brother Jones this church will accomplish much for its city and our cause.

—Dr. Jennie Fleming, of Columbia, Mo., has just been appointed a missionary to India by the Foreign Society. She sails from New York in company with Dr. C. C. Drummond and family, October 13. She will do the work of a trained nurse in the Christian Hospital at Harda, India. The church at Columbia, Mo., of which she is a member, and C. H. Winders is pastor, will provide her support after this year.



Ray Eldred, African Missionary Who Will Speak at the Convention.

—The Assistant Editor is back at his desk, with steadier nerves and some color in his cheeks. He is grateful to all who have made it possible for him to take a needed rest, and would make especial mention of his co-laborer, George L. Snively, who so willingly took up the burden of the office work and handled it so admirably. We are grateful, of course, to the Protector who brought us safely back from the midst of danger and we thank friends who have expressed their interest in our narrow escape from going where some of our belongings probably went—over the great falls of the Yellowstone.

—Robert E. Henry, writing of the work at Moline, Kan., where he is pastor, says the church is prospering and he asks the co-operation of any one who knows of members of the Christian church who have moved to Moline or neighborhood, to notify him of this fact. The church is but five months old and its Church Extension offering is nearly $10. Among those who recently joined the membership are two of the leading citizens, one of them being the postmaster as well as the editor of the largest city daily.

—Bernard W. Bass, who recently resigned the pastorate of the Tenth Street Church, at Paducah, Ky., made us a pleasant call on his way to take up work at Prineville, Ore. This is a small but growing community in the northwest and Brother Bass believes that it offers a fine field for an energetic Christian worker. He will be the only minister of the simple New Testament plea within a radius of 100 miles. Both the churches at Paducah are now without preachers.

—Efforts are being made looking towards the establishment of a high grade college or university for our brotherhood within the new state of Oklahoma. E. V. Zollars, late president of Texas Christian University, for so long identified with Hiram College, has been selected as the head of this movement. The location of the university has not been determined and bids are asked to be sent in before October 1 to W. A. Humphrey, Guthrie, Okla., at which time the Board will meet.

—Talk is crystalizing into a definite plan at Versailles, Ky. R. J. Bamber, the energetic pastor of the Christian church, is leading a movement to erect a handsome, modern $25,000 house of worship. It is proposed to raise a fund of $15,000 to be added to the material in the present building and the value of that site, should it be deemed necessary to secure a new location. This matter has not been decided. Five thousand dollars have already been raised, and, according to the local newspaper, there is little doubt that the entire amount will be secured this year.

Mrs. Ray Eldred.

—We are glad to hear a good word from the old church at Bellaire, Ohio, which is just starting out under a new pastorate. The good people have just given a royal welcome to W. D. Van Voorhis and family. Words of kindly greeting came from every department of the church, and representatives of the Pastors' Union added their words of welcome. The brethren are planning to send a strong delegation to Buffalo, and are hoping to get I. J. Spencer to lead them in their fall campaign for soul winning.

"Help us to get into our own church home."

DID YOU TAKE

a Church Extension Offering the first Sunday of September?

The Offering began then but it should not end until every church sends an Offering. Select the best Sunday to suit local conditions, but to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

SEND AN OFFERING

The Annuity feature of Church Extension is profitable to you and the Board. You receive 6 per cent and the Board builds churches with your money.

—The Board of Church Extension received the following annuity gifts during August: One hundred dollars from a friend in Kansas; $500 from friends in Montana; $100 from a friend in Lodi, Cal.; $50 from a brother in Oklahoma, and $166.66 from a sister in Michigan. All remittances on the annuity plan should be sent to G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Waterworks building, Kansas City, Mo.

Convention Hall.

—Ellis Purlee writes us very enthusiastically about the meeting that is being held at Coffeyville, Kan., by Thomas L. Cooksey, who is assisted by Sister Lucille Park, a member of the congregation there, and one of our best evangelistic singers. Already forty-two additions are reported after twelve days of service. Brother Cooksey is a good preacher and an indefatigable worker and as the town is a live and growing one and the people have the spirit to pay heed to what is good and right, we have no doubt that our cause will be greatly advanced when the meeting closes.

—As we go to press there comes the sad news from W. O. Stephens of the death of B. B. Sanders, the pioneer evangelist of the Texas field. He died at his home in Austin September 14, of apoplexy. He was in the midst of a most successful meeting when the stroke came. Brother Sanders was 66 years old and had been an indefatigable worker. Brother Stephens writes: "He was the most successful, the most widelv known and the best beloved of all our Texas preachers. He left not an enemy behind, for he was a good man. There are thousands of homes in Texas to-day that are filled with weeping because 'Daddy' as we loved to call him, has passed away. His life and work have made a permanent impression upon our cause in this great state." We hope to receive a fuller account of the life work of this good man.

How the Foreign Society Stands.

The receipts of the Foreign Society for the first eleven months of the missionary year, or to September 1, amounted to $221,333, a gain over the corresponding eleven months last year of $848. The gain in regular receipts amounted to $7,623. Let it be borne in mind that the books close September 30. The receipts must amount to about $35,000 during September or there will be a loss.

This Testimony

Will surely interest many readers of this paper.

James G. Gray, Gibson, Mo., writes about Drake's Palmetto Wine as follows: "I live in the Missouri Swamps in Dunklin County and have been sick with Malarial fever, and for fifteen months a walking skeleton. One bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine has done me more good than all the medicine I have taken in that fifteen months. I am buying two more bottles to stay cured. Drake's Palmetto Wine is the best medicine and tonic for Malaria, Kidney and Liver ailments I ever used or heard of. I feel well now after using one bottle."

A. A. Felding, Knoxville, Tenn., writes: "I had a bad case of sour Stomach and Indigestion. I could eat so little that I was 'falling to bones' and could not sleep nor attend to my business. I used the test bottle and two large seventy-five cent bottles, and can truthfully say I am entirely cured. I have advised many to write for a free test bottle."

J. W. Moore, Monticello, Minn., makes the following statement about himself and a neighbor. He says: "Four bottles of Drake's Palmetto Wine have cured me of Catarrh of Bladder and Kidney Trouble. I suffered ten years and spent hundreds of dollars with the best doctors and specialists without benefit. Drake's Palmetto Wine has made me a well man. A young woman here was given up to die by a Minneapolis specialist, and he and our local doctor said they could do no more for her. She has been taking Drake's Palmetto Wine one week and is rapidly recovering."

The Drake Co., Wheeling, W. Va., will send a test bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine, a purely vegetable compound, free and prepaid to any reader of this paper. A letter or postal card is your only expense to get this free bottle.

—A church of fifty members with plenty of life in them is the result of the work of H. E. Wilhite and wife, of San Bernardino, Cal. They have recently been at Belpre, Kan., where their efforts have been greatly blessed. Several thousand dollars have been subscribed towards a building and Elder T. F. Clarke is ready to correspond with some young minister who would like to undertake to enlarge this work. Orville D. Clarke writes that the little town has now two churches—one Bapist and one Catholic—and that in the last two years the Disciples of Christ have erected four beautiful churches of worship within the county, which is in the heart of the wheat belt. The brethren are anxious to have a permanent pastor just as soon as possible.

—The Hammett Place Christian Church of St. Louis will celebrate the thirteenth anniversary of the formation of the congregation on Friday evening, September 28, in a social gathering, and on Sunday evening, September 30, with a more elaborate program suitable to the day and appropriate to the occasion. Former members of the congregation are now settled in every section of the nation and an invitation is extended to them to arrange to be present, if possible. The congregation was formed under the name of Beulah Christian Church, September 29, 1893, under the guidance of O. A. Bartholomew. E. M. Smith, now of Centralia, Mo., was the first pastor, followed by W. A. Moore, now of Tacoma, Wash., and Samuel B. Moore, the present pastor.

—William J. Russell is in continual demand for platform work. The reason for this is not far to see. Brother Russell is a cultured speaker, has a fine presence and always has something to say. It is a pleasure to know that he is not too dignified to do pastoral work nor even to help on the canvass of a religious newspaper. A representative of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was recently in Frankfort, Ind., and received not only the cordial well wishes of Brother Russell but his active co-operation in the two days of canvass, when some 52 copies of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST were put in the homes. Brother Russell writes in the following terms of our representative: "It was a blessing to me to be associated with this quiet and unassuming man. He is courteous to all other religious publications. He is a perfect Christian gentleman. The educational value coming from these fifty-two copies of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST can not be estimated in words." This is the kind of spirit we like to meet. The universal testimony is that where a good religious paper is circulated extensively in a congregation, that congregation is the one where the best fruits of the Christian life are manifested.

—We hear with deepest regret of the great affliction that has come to W. B. Clemmer and wife. Their only son, Clyde, aged 17, was drowned while Brother and Sister Clemmer were in a vacation meeting at Sterling, Colo. The youth was spending a few weeks with friends near Noble's Lake, Iowa, where his death occurred. He was a junior in the high school and of special promise. We do not wonder that Brother Clemmer writes: "Our loss seems greater than we can bear," but he adds—and here is one of the great facts of our religious experience—"strength is being given day by day." THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST voices the feeling of a great brotherhood when it expresses its sympathy with our brother and sister in their great loss. We got to know something of the worth of W. B. Clemmer aboard "THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special" last year. A recent experience of one of our own staff with the waters brings us into a peculiarly close fellowship with him and his wife at this moment. Writing of the meeting at Sterling, Leonard G. Thompson, the state secretary, says: "Brother Clemmer had shown rare skill as an organizer, and, conquering many difficulties, had quickly brought the meetings to the point of success. Sister Clemmer in her quiet, gentle manner, had not only ably seconded her husband's efforts, but had won many friends. All our people were shocked that our brother and sister's summer vacation and their splendid meetings here, should have been brought to such an abrupt and sad end."

A Good Letter.

L. O. Knipp, pastor of our church at Plymouth, Pa., has prepared a letter which we commend to the brotherhood generally. Other churches should find a suggestion in it. While we have no objections to congregations presenting their pastors with fancy clocks, walking sticks or even easy chairs in token of appreciation, we believe it would be a wise policy where these gifts can not be made in addition to the sending of the pastor to our national conventions that personal gifts be omitted in favor of a railroad ticket and convention expenses. The Plymouth church has sent its pastor regularly to these national gatherings. They even paid his expenses all the way to San Francisco. Brother Knipp is very appreciative of these courtesies and the congregation has discovered that the church is the gainer in the end. We append Brother Knipp's letter:

To the Official Board of the Christian Church:

Dear Brethren.—In a few weeks, October 12 to 18, we expect a large attendance at our International Convention at Buffalo. This is the first time it has been so close to our doors; for this reason we expect the largest attendance of delegates we have ever had from this section at any of our conventions.

Will you please encourage the members of your church to attend?

It is also desired that every preacher in my section attend, and to accomplish this, I ask you, as I am asking all the other churches, to please send your pastor as a delegate and tell him your church will pay his expenses. It will not cost you very much, and in this way you will show him your appreciation of his labors.

Earnestness, consecration and eagerness for souls will be characteristic of this convention, which he will enjoy, and your church will be the gainer many times over.

Trusting a favorable reply be received from you very soon, I am, sincerely yours,

L. O. Knipp.

"The Church of Christ."

Special attention is called to the page advertisement in this issue of The Christian-Evangelist of the book entitled, "The Church of Christ."

This work of a layman in the church is presented strictly on the merits of the book itself, and for this reason the name of the author is not given. It is a remarkably strong, clear and logical presentation of the origin, doctrines, purposes and problems of the church and is finding its way into the hands of an ever-increasing circle of readers.

Concerning this very lucid and helpful book, F. D. Power, of Washington, D. C., has written as follows:

> "It will be seen the book covers a wide scope. It is written in a very succinct and satisfactory style, however, its positions well buttressed by scripture texts and illustrated with scripture examples. Some of its teaching will, no doubt, meet with criticism, but its clearness and candor and eminent Christian spirit must commend it to most readers of every school of religious thought as a suggestive and valuable contribution to the literature on this subject. Whoever its author may be, it is evident at once that he is a devout student of the Holy Scriptures and a genuine lover of his kind. An impartial and serious examination of this volume will, we are satisfied, aid in the solution of the most trying and tremendous problems which confront our modern church. The claim that the Church of Christ should be one and identical in organization, teaching, and practice with the New Testament church before the beginning of a creed, sect, or party; and that such unity, acording to Christ's own word, is essential to its complete and final triumph, and must bring in the glad day when the kingdoms of the world shall become our Lord's kingdom, is surely a mighty one and worthy of the prayerful consideration of all lovers of the Christ. Our unknown author has done a good service, and we trust he will meet with a wide reading."

—W. W. Sniff, of Rushville, Ind., is one of the progressive young preachers who will help the foreign society. Brother Sniff was once located in St. Louis and also served the Franklin Circle Church at Cleveland, O.

—R. H. Bacon, who has been at Verdon and South Elrod, S. D., during the summer, is returning to Drake University to finish the liberal arts course. Brother Kerr, of Ohio, is to take up the work at Verdon on September 23.

—During the recent revival meeting at the Christian Church, Winchester, Ill., much interest was aroused on the subject of baptism. The Presbyterian preacher delivered a discourse on one Lord's day in defense of his church's views, and the pastor of the Christian Church and many of his people were present. The following Sunday night, Pastor Sharpe reviewed this sermon and very completely demolished, we should think, the contention of Mr. Gibson, who declared that immersion was not the Scriptural mode of baptism. Brother Sharpe's address was given the extent of over three columns in the county paper, and it was a very succinct and clear statement of Scriptural baptism.

—F. D. Eisenhart writes us about the work of Arthur Long, who has completed five years in the pastorate at Burlington, Iowa. He went there from Canton University, and during his charge has had 543 additions, the membership of the church now being 560. In every way there has been progress, and at the present moment a new building is under process of construction, with the expectation that it will be dedicated in November. The membership, enthusiastic and working in harmony, is accomplishing much for the church and the city. Brother Long was not only appreciated by his own church, but he is president of the City Ministerial Association. We re-echo Brother Eisenhart's wish that Brother Long may have another five years of just as successful work in Burlington.

Help, Men of God!

With your help home missions will win a great victory this year. Gifts from individuals and churches generally contributing, but not having sent an offering this year, will put our receipts far in advance of those for last year. Just now we have about the same amount as for the same time a year ago. But hundreds of our friends are yet to be heard from. A little from each will make the grand total one of which to be proud.

Help, men of God! Send the offering without fail before September 30. Make checks payable to The American Christian Missionary Society, and send to Y. M. C. A. building, Cincinnati, O.

Wm. J. Wright,
Corresponding Secretary.

The New Jersey Federation of Labor protests against the quiet Sunday because union musicians lose their jobs at the beer gardens, union barkeepers lose the day's pay, and the sale of union-made cigars is curtailed. Anything for the union. Morals? Away with them. Fortunately, all organized labor does not take this attitude.

REV. J. W. BLOSSER, M. D.

A Noted Minister and Doctor of Atlanta, Ga., is Meeting with Wonderful Success.

Those who have long doubted whether there really is a permanent cure for catarrh will be glad to learn that a southern physician, Rev. J. W. Blosser, M. D., of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a method whereby catarrh can be cured to the very last symptom without regard to climate or condition. So that there may be no misgivings about it, he will send a free sample to any man or woman without expecting payment. The regular price of the remedy is $1.00 for a box containing one month's treatment.

The Doctor's remedy is radically different from all others, and the results he has achieved seem to mark a new era in the scientific cure of catarrh, foul breath, hawking and spitting, stopped-up feeling in nose and throat, coughing spells, difficult breathing, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis and the many other symptoms of a bad case of catarrh.

If you wish to see for yourself what this remarkable remedy will do, send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walnut St., Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive the free package and an illustrated book.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Ohio.

The church at Bellefontaine will begin a meeting Sunday, September 16, with Pastor Roy L. Brown in the pulpit and Frank C. Huston as leader of song. The church is in good condition for a meeting, and this team ought to bring good results. S. L. Lyons has resigned at Rushsylvania to take some post-graduate work at Oberlin Seminary. He will preach for some church nearby if it can be so arranged. The Central Church, at Marion, has called as its pastor B. C. Piatt, who was until a short time ago pastor at Ashland. The Ohio letter man preached at Marion on the Sunday the call was extended and found a very energetic and enthusiastic body of Disciples who are perfectly united in their work. There are great possibilities for the Marion church. They have a fine new plant that is modern in every way. This union of preacher and people ought to mean much for the kingdom. Secretary Bartlett, with helpers, is now on the tour of the state in the interest of the fall offering for Ohio missions. J. J. Tisdall, of Cleveland, goes along to lead the singing. I. J. Cahill, of Dayton, and T. W. Pinkerton, of Kenton, have been lending assistance in the arguments for Ohio missions. The response thus far has been very encouraging, and with a pull all together Ohio will free herself from debt by January. W. E. Adams is getting acquainted with his new field at Perry by holding an August meeting. A soloist from Wellsville, N. Y., added to the interest. The meeting was developing a good interest when last heard from. W. L. Neal, who has always been an Ohio man up to two years ago, but is now of California, has been visiting in Ohio with his children and his old parishioners at Wooster and Marion. Of course we all know that he would like to be back in Ohio permanently, even if he does not admit it. There will be a large number of Ohio people at the Buffalo convention. On every hand we hear people talking of the trip. We shall be very greatly disappointed personally in not being there. A meeting in Pawnee City, Neb., will make it impossible. The church at Canton has a new assistant. H. E. Parker, of Cleveland, has been employed as leader of all music and financial secretary of the church. Thus the church supports three paid workers—Pastor Welsheimer, Miss Staub, assistant, and Musical Director Parker. They will hold a meeting with home forces in October. We were all shocked to see the news in the daily papers of the death of C. Manly Rice, pastor of the Island Church, Wheeling, W. Va. Brother Rice died August 29 at the home of relatives in Lorain of typhoid fever. He has been among the Ohio brethren for several years, serving as pastor at Greenwich, Wooster, Lisbon and then to Wheeling. He was a man of much ability and great energy. He was called in the prime of life. Our sympathies go out to the bereaved family and the Wheeling church. The funeral service was held at Lorain, Brother Fields, of the First Church, Wheeling, preaching the sermon, and the pastors at Lorain acting as pallbearers. The church at Painesville has extended a unanimous call to S. H. Bartlett to again become its pastor, and he has accepted. Brother Bartlett left the Painesville church to take the Ohio secretaryship. He will preach on Sundays after the Ohio offering is taken November 1, but will not give all his time to the church till next May, when he gives up the Ohio work. There is perhaps no man who will be better able to take hold of the work at Painesville and push it on successfully than Brother Bartlett can do. The church has Herbert Yeuell for a meeting in January. The Third Church in Youngstown had a corner-stone laying Sunday, September 16. John E. Pounds, of Cleveland, was the speaker. They are erecting a $10,000 building, or rather additional building. Frank D. Draper is bishop of this diocese. John Mullen writes that he has regained hs strength by a sojourn in the balmy breezes of Texas, and will return to Ohio about November 1. Brother Mullen is a splendid, capable man, and some Ohio church will do well to be on the lookout for him. He has served the church at Dalhart, Texas, temporarily while there. Hiram College will open the year's work September 25. The outlook for the year is reported to be very good. They expect 100 in the freshman class. The contract has been let for a $10,000 house on the west side at Warren. This means a second church in that city.

C. A. FREER.

Western Pennsylvania.

Changes in the Pittsburg ministry have come rapidly. L. W. D. Wells resigned at Wilkinsburg and took the work at East Orange, N. J., September 1. George W. Knepper, of Somerset, will succeed him October 1. George Watson resigned at Squirrel Hill to accept the call to Van Wert, Ohio. G. E. Jones will enter Bethany College this fall to more fully fit himself for his work. E. E. Manley, of Belmar, has given a 90 days' notice that he will leave that field. He lately dedicated a $15,880.06 church, and has done fine work there. John A. Jayne has resigned at Observatory Hill to enter the lecture field and do journalistic work, in which he has already been very successful. These men will be missed from their fields and from our fellowship. Brother Knissef has entered upon his work among the foreigners of our district. Thirty languages are spoken in Allegheny and two adjoining counties. A special train will leave Pittsburg at 10 a. m. on October 12 to carry the delegates to Buffalo via the Pittsburg & Lake Erie. Arrangements will be completed this week for one of the best hotels for headquarters. The ministers meet every week at our headquarters in the Bissell block. Disciples passing through the city or visiting here will find a rest room and a place to meet friends at any time. It is near the depots and in the shopping district. Visit us. The officers for the year are: President, John G. Slater; vice-president, A. W. Place; secretary, J. D. Dabney; treasurer, Grant E. Pike. Our annual convention will be held in Homestead September 24 to 26. Carnegie Hall, which seats 1,200 people, has been secured for the night sessions. We expect to fill it.

Cincinnati.

After a vacation of two months the Cincinnati Ministerial Association is again running in full blast with R. W. Abberley, J. W. Hagin and A. A. Sebastian at the head. Under the leadership of these faithful brethren we are expecting great things.——An evangelistic wave has struck our city. O. P. Spiegel and J. E. Sturgis are in a fine meeting with A. M. Harvuot at Evanston. Central, J. L. Hill, pastor, began a meeting Sept. 16, with W. H. Pinkerton as evangelist. Madisonville, W. H. Sallier, pastor, will begin Oct. 17 with G. W. Thompson and W. C. Smith evangelists. Northside, J. N. Green, pastor, will begin October 1, with H. C. Runyan, evangelist. Walnut Hills, R. W. Abberley, pastor, will begin in October, with Herbert Yeuell and Leroy St. John. Other churches are planning for meetings, but the dates are not yet announced. J. I. Irwin has accepted a call to the church at Bellevue, and is already at work. This church has been without a minister for several months, but at last has secured the right man, and an abundant work will be looked for. George A. Miller spent his vacation holding two meetings in which there were about 35 additions. W. H. Dickerson, pastor of the Maple Street Church (colored), Lockland, has been engaged by the C. W. B. M. to take charge of the buildings and also to teach in the Bible school at Louisville. He is a man worthy of the position, and the school is to be congratulated in being able to secure him for this work.. C. C. Smith is home after summering in Jamaica, and he came into the association meeeting September 9 with an interesting message from the island. H. W. Milner has resigned at Harrison, and will take up work elsewhere about December 1. He has had a successful ministry at Harrison. The sixth annual family Sunday was observed in the First Church, Lockland, where the writer ministers, September 9. H. H. Moninger was the speaker for the occasion, and the day was observed in the interests of the Sunday school work. A local Sunday-school association auxiliary to the state association will no doubt be organized as a result of this day's services. No church can have Brother Moninger for a day without being greatly benefited.

The Annual Convention of the Indian Territory.

The ninth annual convention of the Indian Territory Missionary Co-operation was held with the church in South McAlester August 27-30.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions occupied the first day. They had a fine meeting. Sister Atwater, national representative, was present throughout the session and rendered valuable assistance.

Prof. E. V. Zollars conducted Bible study each morning and afternoon, which was very much enjoyed by the delegates.

J. H. Mohorter, of St. Louis, gave an earnest and helpful address in the interest of our benevolent institutions. R. H. Waggoner, national superintendent of Y. P. S. C. E., spoke in the interest of Christian Endeavor work. George W. Muckley, of St. Louis, presented Church Extension in his most fascinating style, while W. J. Wright, in two great addresses, represented American Missions and Evangelism. L. B. Grogan, of Chickasha, read an historical paper dealing with the origin and history of the organized missionary work in the Indian Territory. In addition to the Bible lessons, E. V. Zollars delivered an address on the matter of a school in the central west. The convention unanimously endorsed the idea, and appointed a committee to act jointly with a like committee to be appointed by the Oklahoma convenion, in taking immediate steps looking to the founding of such an institution.

F. L. Van Voorhis reported for the board. Among other things he said: "The advance of the past year over any previous year is almost incredible." The report of the corresponding secretary, S. R. Hawkins, showed a threefold increase over any previous year, in the amount of money raised for the support of the work, nearly six hundred additions, ten churches organized, about one dozen housed, twenty-eight meetings held under the auspices of the board and much other work accomplished.

Others who took part on the program and added to its interest and effectiveness were as follows: A. B. Carpenter, Atoka; George H. Farley, Muskogee; Randolph Cook, Tulsa; J. C. Mullens, Hartshorne; J. S. Hawkins, Pryor Creek; E. M. Harris, Wagoner; A. M. Harrol, Sapulpa; A. P. Aton, Holdenville; J. J. Stobaugh, Tichomingo; J. H. Crutcher, Middle Grove, Mo.; George Wolfe, Mattoon, Ill.; R. E. Rosenstein, Norman, Okla.; C. C. Ayers, Muskogee; W. H. Ligon, Broken Arrow.

It was a great convention. A history-making convention.

The writer has been re-employed to serve as corresponding secretary. Already I have plunged into the work, determined to do not only as well the coming year, but better. Brethren, pray for us, and help us.

The Nebraska Institute and State Meeting.

It is the rule with our Nebraska preachers to spend two weeks in study and fellowship together just before the Nebraska state meeting. Their institute is held in Bethany, in one of the rooms of the Cotner University building. Chancellor Aylsworth gives each year a series of lectures. This year Prof. H. T. Sutton also gave a series of missionary studies. Both are able men and their work was highly profitable. Each year an out-of-state lecturer is secured, and I have twice had the pleasure of serving in this capacity. This year, besides a number of evening lectures of a general nature, I gave two courses of studies, one on comparative religion and one on the literature of the Bible. The names of 37 Nebraska preachers have been handed me as having been members of the classes. They are, I feel, the most earnest, reverent, open-minded men that one may meet. They are Christians and students, and it is a benediction to know them. Bro. H. C. Holmes, of Fairbury, is secretary, and I believe Brother Schell is president of the institute.

Following the institute, the Nebraska people have their state convention in Bethany. They own a beautiful piece of land, sheltered by great trees, on which they have erected a handsome pavilion at a cost of about $2,000. On the ground there were a hundred tents occupied by Disciples who came to spend the week and get and give in a great convention way. In spite of the almost continual rain, there were great audiences, and the people abounded in a spirit of joy and hope.

President E. V. Zollars was elected as the out-of-state lecturer and state meeting preacher for the coming year.

This Nebraska movement should be studied by other states in which it might prove feasible. Without disparagement to other states, I may say that I have seen nothing that answers the needs of a state convention so well as this, and there are few state conventions that are so largely attended. W. J. LHAMON.

Columbia, Mo.

A Conspicuous Seccess.

Sunday afternoon, September 16, at 3 o'clock, there was held in the Hamilton Avenue Christian Church in this city, a large and enthusiastic meeting of the Bible-school workers of greater St. Louis, under the auspices of the Officers' and Teachers' Union, of this city. This organization is one of the results of the series of institutes held by State Superintendent J. H. Hardin in St. Louis last winter. The purpose of this organization is to foster closer co-operation on the part of Christian Bible school workers in St. Louis. It has done much in this direction, and last Sunday afternoon's meeting was an expression of its work so far. State Superintendent J. H. Hardin made the first address on the program on the subject, "What Our People are Doing Throughout the State" Other addresses were made by Dr. Chalfant, Dr. Lindsay (of the Anti-Saloon League), President Hanson (of the Union State Sunday-school Convention), and by Pastor McCreary (of the Hamilton Avenue Church). Reports were tabulated on a sheet, and this tabulation will be published and circulated in large numbers. The reports were, in the main, encouraging, but showed a great deal yet to be done.

Niantic, Sept. 14.—We are preparing for a meeting in October. J. Will Walters, pastor, will do the preaching. Chas. E. McVay will have charge of the music.

Chicago, Sept. 13.—I wish to give a brief account of our meeting at Belpre, Kan., which closed September 2. We had no organization there when we went and but few members. These few were anxious for a meeting, and we began August 1. The interest increased until the Baptist Church building was quite well filled, and on special occasions standing room taken. The result of the meeting was 50 additions, many of these the most prominent people of the town. The mayor and his wife, as well as nearly half of the business people of the little city, united with the Church during the meeting. Several of these people are well to do financially. We raised $2,700 toward a building, which they begin at once, to cost not less than $4,000. Our church is the strongest in Belpre now and will grow. As soon as the new building is dedicated we are to return and hold another month's meeting. The church has a strong official board and is anxious to employ an able man as pastor. They will give the right man $1,000 salary. None but successful men need apply. S. G. Clark will answer all communications. A telegram from Brother Martin calling us to Chicago for a meeting hastened the close. We are here in South Chicago in a big tent meeting, with fairly good prospects. The audiences are increasing, with three additions the last three nights. It will require a long effort to accomplish results here. We must have a successful meeting this time, as they have never had a big meeting from the standpoint of additions. The church is weak in numbers, but willing to do all it can. The brethren are very hopeful of this meeting resulting in great strength to their ranks. There are 50,000 people in this section of the city, and this one small congregation of Disciples to represent our idea.—H. E. Wilhite.

Angola, Sept. 10.—We held a short meeting at Rock Creek Centre Church, with 12 additions—ten by confession, all over 15 years of age, nine men. The church has heavy odds against it for different reasons, but the membership is faithful and energetic. Our next work is at Ambia.—Charles W. Mahin and Wife.

Bloomfield.—Thirty-three baptisms and 5 by transfer in an eighteen days' meeting at Stiles, Ia. Bro. Dan Hastings ministers one-fourth time there, but was hindered from being present at this meeting, taking my place at Bloomfield while I was with his congregation. Unionville, Sept. 11.—We had 9 additions in our three weeks' meeting here. The town is one where a strong man like J. B. Lockhart is needed, for evil influences abound.—W. L. Harris, evangelist.

Kansas City, Sept. 10.—Our meeting at the West Line Church closed Wednesday night with 34 added—30 by baptism. I preached at Lewisburg yesterday, and 2 were added by letter.—Clyde Lee Fife.

It was a great pleasure to me to see many men and women whom I had known all my life take their stand with the church. I am glad my Christian life has been such as to command the respect of people I have known so well. I am a stronger and better man because of this meeting. There are ten Christian churches in this county, and not a resident pastor.—H. A. Northcutt.

Nebraska.

Kearney.—Our work is prospering. Seventy-one persons have been received into the fellowship in sixteen and one-half months, 25 of them being by baptism. We began our second year April 16, since which time 9 have been baptized and 16 received into fellowship. We have had no revival meeting, but expect to hold one this fall.—F. D. Hobson.

Craig.—Closed a five months' supply at Craig with 3 by statement and the baptism of a man who was within a few days of being 80 years of age. This was his first public profession of faith. There were 11 baptisms and 8 otherwise added during the five months. I will do student work this year while attending Cotner University, Bethany.—O. L. Adams.

TEMPERANCE LESSON.—Gal. 5:15-26; 6:7, 8.

Memory verses, 7, 8.

Golden Text.—Wine is a worker; strong drink is raging. Prov. 20:1.

In the epistle to the Galatians Paul devotes himself to pointing out the contrast between the law and the gospel. As in the epistle to the Romans, where the same topic is argued and developed more elaborately, he shows not simply that the Jewish law has been superseded because it was inadequate, but that the whole conception of law is inadequate for the guidance of life. The Jewish law was inferior to the Gospel, not because its specific commands were ill ordered, but because it was law.

It is sometimes said that the Bible is essentially a law book. This is exactly the opposite of the truth so far as the New Testament is concerned. The Gospel was not given as a new and improved law, but as a new and higher system based on wholly different principles.

There was always danger—as there still is—that the abrogation of law would be considered by some as an opening of the way for all sorts of evil and injurious conduct. So, while Paul warns his hearers to "stand fast in their freedom," he must also warn them not to "use their freedom for an occasion to the flesh."

The contest between the flesh and the spirit, is the theme of this passage. A certain duality in man's nature has been recognized by nearly all moralists. The classic expression of this "war in the members" is given in Romans 7:15-24. Tennyson states it in "The Two Voices."

The root of all intemperance is giving way to the rule of the baser of these two elements, being guided only by the impulses and desires of the flesh and disregarding the contrary influences of the spirit. For one man, this lawless and uncurbed leading of the flesh may be in the direction of alcoholic indulgence. For another, toward sensuality. For another, covetousness. For another, anger or resentment or undue pride. All are alike intemperance.

Let us beware of thinking that our temperance lessons are directed only against the sin of drunkenness. They are aimed against all of those sins into which we may fall—and into which most of us do fall from time to time—through failure to allow the higher and more spiritual motives which are embodied in the Gospel to have full force and effect in directing our lives.

SKIN-TORTURED BABIES

Instantly Relieved by Warm Baths with Cuticura Soap and Anointings with Cuticura.

The suffering which Cuticura Soap and Ointment have alleviated among the young, and the comfort they have afforded worn-out and worried parents, have led to their adoption in countless homes as priceless curatives for the skin and scalp. Infantile and birth humors, milk-crust, scald-head, eczemas, rashes, and every form of itching, scaly, pimply skin and scalp humors, with loss of hair, are speedily, permanently and economically cured when all other remedies suitable for children, and even the best physicians, in most cases, fail.

"Like sunrise lances through the wood,
So through our hearts, through nations, climes,
Flash till the clash of heavenly chimes
Shall hail o'er earth and dawn of good.
Rise, orbed in glory! Saviour! King!
Jehovah! Jesus! Truth! Light! Love!
Lion of Judah! Lamb and Dove!
Reign thou, till earth like heaven shall sing!"

The atrocities of the Boxer uprising, infanticide, the debasement of China's motherhood, the oppression of the poor, punitive fiendishness, and all the exposures made of China's interior life show that the pall of darkest Africa is no blacker than hangs over central China.

While our churches do not have one missionary to each ten million of China's population we are making notable gains. The college at Nankin presided over by our Bro. F. E. Meigs, is a lamp at which thousands of young Celestials will light their torches for the dispelling of pagan gloom and chill.

Confucianism, the moral stay of China, is a philosophy rather than a religion. Its heart is "Whatsoever ye would men should not do unto you, do ye not unto them." But men need more than negatives to inspire them to righteousness and salvation. Those who know of Christianity, even if they have not embraced it, feel the need of its positive affirmation, and long for its warmth and love. Virtue will no more flourish under it than will roses under an electric light. Both need the sunlight of the true and living God.

Buddhism is the purest and most nearly spiritual religion of the Orient, but the good in it is not sufficiently virile to maintain itself against the destructiveness of heathenism. It has lost its power with the people. Its edifices are falling into decay, and few new ones are reared. It long served as a trellis for the religious impulses of the people. Naturally the best that is in them would cling to Christianity if an opportunity were given, and to give that opportunity is one thing for which Christian Endeavor exists.

In encyclopedias, if you have no better facilities, read the story of James Gilmour, the Scotch lad who gave twenty years to the regeneration of China and whose biography is a missionary romance delighting the very angels. He cured the foul diseases of the people and pointed them to the Great Physician. He helped them to better homes on earth and led them toward the heavenly home. Notwithstanding all he did he owes more to China than the empire does to him.

Taonism that once had millions of devotees now has lost its hold on thoughtful Chinese. They disdainfully speak of it as a superstition and its priests as mountebanks and parasites. They laugh at its intercourse with departed spirits and defy its incantations. Yet the people fondly follow in thought and love their dead, and would gladly believe in a power greater than human to so manipulate the great forces as to bless mankind. When Christianity is made known to them the Taonists will build its temples and flock into them by millions.

A SUM IN ADDITION.—

2 Peter 1:1-11.

"Purer yet and purer
I would be in mind,
Dearer yet and dearer
Every duty find;

"Hoping still, and trusting
God without a fear,
Patiently believing
He will make all clear;

"Calmer yet and calmer
Trial bear and pain,
Surer yet and surer
Peace at last to gain."

Let us add to the number who will say, "you have helped me"; to the sad whose hearts we have lightened; to the uncertain we have guided through the mists; to those we have exalted from lower to higher levels of thought and idealism; to those who in heaven will say, "I dare not hope I should have been here had you not applied the blood of the Lamb to my guilty soul."

A sum in addition as far beyond the power of human imagination as the incomprehensible distances of astronomy is, "How many would be added to the saved if for the next decade every disciple of Jesus should lead a convert to the foot of the cross." But something more profitable than this computation is a resolution in every disciple's heart to bring the greatest possible number to the Master.

We should add hundreds of missionaries to our present force before Centennial and many provinces in many zones to our present "spheres of influence." "Go" has not been subtracted from the great commission. Possibly, "or send" has not been wrongfully added, but "go or send" must be added to the practice of many churches and individuals to save them from confusion at last.

We have but two hospitals in the United States under the auspices of our church. Some of the denominations have more in a single city. To these should be added enough to have one conducted in every considerable town before we have done "more than others" to prove our loyalty to the Great Physician who came to save men from hunger and poverty and cold and sickness and disease as well as from sin and an adverse judgment and doom at last.

It is by accretion rather than by addition we increase in spiritual stature and possessions. We grow as a flower or tree rather than as a wall or a fabric. In us is a principle of life that must increase uniformly and in entirety in order to advantageous growth. We must develop arm, limb and body uniformly or there is physical distortion. The same is true if we increase in one moral virtue to the neglect of others. Let us earnestly seek to develop in all the graces of the Christian life.

Adding repentance to faith, and confession to repentance and baptism to confession is not a mere mechanical process. They are as vitally connected as the succeeding years of a child's stature. Faith does not cease growth when repentance is produced, nor does repentance wane when the subject is baptized. Faith ought to increase with the years and that spirit that leads one into the baptismal fount ought to intensify so long as one is in the world. The best additions are in the form of enlarged graces rather than the appropriation of new ones.

WHAT THE PUBLISHERS SAY.

A strong and original plea for the Simple Religion that is unencumbered by the artificiality of man-made creeds and denominational divisions, which simply adopts Christ and His teachings in their original clearness, comprehensiveness, and purity.

For the Clergyman, a book full of stimulating and suggestive thought on the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. The reasoning is clear, logical, forceful; the whole work is intensely Biblical, and reverently loyal to Christian doctrine throughout; a help and strength to every minister.

For the Layman, a book of striking, original thought on the most vital and perplexing subject before the religious thinkers of the present generation. A book with the charm of simple fact and clear statement written by a practical man of wide commercial and political experience.

WHAT INDIVIDUALS SAY.

Heaven-Sent Message to the Churches

"The author has placed the world's religions before us as so many pebbles, and after showing the utter imbecility of all save one he takes up the pearl of great price and with a stroke recounts the triumphs of Christ and the cross through His church. Any Christian living a thousand miles from any church could take this book and with its description of the church and its references to the Bible organize the Church of Christ and invite men of any faith to meet in Him. It is a timely volume. May the dear Lord bless the Layman and his heaven-sent message to the churches."—Charles Reign Scoville, A. M., LL. D., Evangelist, Chicago, Ill.

This is a profoundly interesting, enlightening, and stimulating work.—Judge Frederick A. Henry, Cleveland, Ohio.

"The philosophy, history, and doctrine of the Remedial Scheme' in its complete evolution are stated in clear, good English; while parts of this telling rise to good English; while parts of this telling rise to real eloquence."—William Harrison Graham, Member of Congress, Allegheny, Pennsylvania.

"The book merits a place unfilled before in church history and literature, and should be in the hands of every preacher and teacher of Christian truth, and pray and work for the union of all God's people, and under His blessing will accomplish great good."—J. J. Barclay, Bethany, W. Va.

"It is the greatest religious book so far published in the twentieth century."—M. M. Cochran, Attorney at Law, Uniontown, Pa.

All in All to Me It Is a Great Book

"'The Church of Christ' is like a pearl of great price in a setting of gold. We have nothing in our literature in my judgment at all comparable to it. For a clear, logical, comprehensive, and Scriptural exposition of the New Testament revelation of the origin, principles, purposes, and organization of the Church of Christ as God's agency in this world for the redemption of lost men it fills a place peculiarly its own and from which, in my judgment, it will not soon be removed. . . . It is timely. It is a book greatly needed at this particular juncture when the truly good and religious people of all denominations seem to be feeling darkly for some solid foundation upon which to rebuild a united church; and if it can secure anything like the circulation its worth merits it will certainly prove a large factor in bringing about the fulfilment of the Savior's prayer and the desire of all truly pious hearts. The book is first-class literature, lofty in thought, pure and elegant in diction, attractive in style, comprehensive in range, with brevity of statement, punctuated with eloquent perorations and beautiful climaxes. It commands the attention of the thoughtful reader from chapter first to the finish. All in all to me it is a great book."—Elder William F. Cowden, Tacoma, Washington. .. ..

"This book is a work of great merit, and I trust it may be circulated by the millions."—A. McLean, President Foreign Christian Missionary Society, Cincinnati, Ohio.

"The book is delightful reading. It is on my study table side by side with the Bible."—Rev. S. H. Perdee, Randall, N. Y.

WORDS OF PRAISE FROM FAR-OFF COUNTRIES.

Can Scarcely Be Excelled

"I have read with deep interest 'The Church of Christ.' The author's exegesis is remarkably clear and satisfactory. Some passages can scarcely be excelled for strength and beauty by any in the English language."—J. M. W. Farnham, D. D., Corresponding Secretary of the Chinese Tract Society, Shanghai, China.

"I have read 'The Church of Christ' with pleasure and profit. I consider it a book with a great living message to the divided Church of Christ. What the author has said is both logical and true. I believe this book will prove to be a great factor in helping to ismplify and unify the faith and practice of the church. Let all who read this book teach, pray, and work for the simplicity and unity of the Christian family and then the Kingdom shall come with power. May the Great Head of the Church speed and bless the message in this book."—J. A. Simpson, Missionary to Africa, Presiding Elder M. E. Church, Greenville, Linoe Liberia, Africa.

"I consider his account of the early church to be careful and independent."—Prof. Marcus Dods, Edinburgh, Scotland.

The book is precisely what is needed at the present juncture, not only under the Stars and Stripes, but away here in the land of 'The Golden Fleece,' under the Southern Cross. It is the finest compendium of the matters relating to Salvation, both on its Godward and manward sides, that we have seen.—Charles Watt, Auckland, New Zealand.

"There is a great deal of material that commands serious thought and attention, and I trust that it will have a wide circulation. It cannot fail to do good."—Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, D. D., F. R. G. S., Founder and Director of East London Institution of Home and Foreign Missions, London, Eng.

A Pleasant Surprise and Promiseful Prophecy

"That 'A Layman' should choose such a theme and handle it so well is a pleasant surprise and promiseful prophecy. I am glad the book has been written and published. It is attractively printed, highly readable, and will turn the attention of many again to the original sources of evangelistic endeavor."—W. W. Coebrane, Asipaw, N. Shan States, Burma.

WHAT THE RELIGIOUS PAPERS SAY.

"Theologically and ecclesiastically this book is the book of the twentieth century, so far. It will take rank with 'Ecce Homo' and 'Ecce Deus' as an epoch-maker. It is written by a cultured and constructive mind, is free from cant, provincialism, and iconoclasticism. It is an instruction—it is an inspiration. . . . The pulpit has lectured the pew long enough, now let us hear from the pew. It is a treat for the pulpit to hear from such a source in such a way, and no less for the fellow pew-holders."—Claris Yuell in "The Christian Standard," Cincinnati, Ohio.

"From a literary standpoint the book is a gem. . . . It is really a remarkable book."—"Christian Union," Des Moines, Iowa.

"We trust this book may find a wide circulation."—"Missionary Tidings," Indianapolis, Ind.

Succinct and Satisfying

"The book covers a wide scope. It is written in a very succinct and satisfactory style. An impartial and serious examination of this volume will aid in the solution of the most trying and tremendous problems which confront our modern church."—F. D. Power in the "Christian-Evangelist," St. Louis, Mo.

Eloquence Has Never Been Surpassed

" . . . Divine things have never been handled with a more reverent touch. . . . There is not a suggestion of the combative spirit, or of what Longfellow has well called 'the struggle for triumph more than truth.' . . . The closing chapter is one whose eloquence has never been surpassed."—"The Christian Worker," Pittsburg, Pa.

The Work of a Genius

"It is the work of a layman who is certainly a man of large culture and genius and for the present is anonymous."—"The Christian Advocate," St. Louis, Mo.

Based on the Bible

"The warp and woof of the whole argument are drawn from the Bible liberally quoted."—"Outlook," New York city.

A Clear Defense of Christianity

" . . . This book is a clear defense of the history and fundamental doctrines of Christianity. . . . There is a very strong tendency on the part of many good people to discard all church organizations, and this book, while faithfully enforcing fundamental truth, will strongly emphasize that trend." Baltimore "Methodist," Baltimore, Md.

Current Literature

WHAT A YOUNG BOY OUGHT TO KNOW. By Sylvanus Stall, D. D., and WHAT A YOUNG GIRL OUGHT TO KNOW, by Mrs. Mary Wood-Allen, M. D. Virginia Publishing Co., Philadelphia. $1 each, net.

Questions concerning the origin of life should always reach the child through its parents. The writers of these books, realizing how few parents know just the best way to present this difficult and delicate subject to the mind of an inquiring child, have set themselves to this task. The whole subject of the perpetuation of life among plants, fishes, birds, and animals is set forth in a manner as delicate and pure as it is scientific and satisfactory to both parent and child. These books have been used and are highly prized by thousands of parents in this country and Europe, and we can cordially commend them as of the greatest value. Many a girl and boy will be saved from wretchedness and ill-health by having these books put into their hands at the right time, with a word of friendly counsel from the parent.

THE DUTY OF IMPERIAL THINKING. By Wm. L. Watkinson, D. D., LL. D. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. Pages 270, Price $1.00 net.

Dr. Watkinson is himself an imperial thinker. He has one of the brightest minds in the British pulpit to-day. He is one of the few men in the Methodist pulpit who have the real literary touch, but he makes up by genius for a great deal that is commonplace. He is fresh, sane, full of the sweetest sap, is always worth reading, and these chapters on "things worth while" can be cordially commended for their helpfulness and their charm.

STUDIES IN THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MARK. By Ernest DeWitt Burton, University of Chicago Press. Pages 248. Price $1.00.

This book is for the use of classes in secondary schools and the secondary division of the Sunday-school, and it is one of the "Constructive Bible Studies" published by the University of Chicago. It is written from the standpoint of the modern Biblical scholar with two purposes in view: first, to bring a knowledge of the life of Jesus to the student, and to help him to form the habit of coming to each of the books of the Bible with the question, "What does it mean?" The prefaces to the pupil and to the teacher are themselves extremely valuable helps in the way of Gospel study, to say nothing of the light thrown on the text. There are a large number of review questions and an analysis of the Gospel, as well as a dictionary of words used in the Gospel.

THE WOMAN IN THE ALCOVE. By Anna Katherine Green. Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. Pages 372.

This is a good story of mysteries. Those who are fond of the detective style of novel will get all they care for. People who really have no connection with the murder are plunged into compromising positions by their own carelessness, while the person who did the deed is hidden until the very end of the narrative. We find nothing particularly elevating in the book, though it has an interest of its own. One would not class it with great fiction.

THE GARDEN OF NUTS. By W. Robertson Nicoll. A. C. Armstrong and Son, New York. Pages 332. Price $1.25.

Dr. Nicoll is one of the best known editors in the field of religious literature. He commands a widely circulated religious newspaper and is the literary advisor of one of the largest religious publishing houses in the world. The present volume consists of two parts, the first being a lecture at the Glasgow Summer School of Theology, and the second consists of expositions reprinted from the British Weekly. It was in this paper that Dr. Nicoll developed his own mystical writing. He has evidently been a close student of mysticism that in this utilitarian, rushing age we may well pause to consider. The literature of the subject is not easy of access. The very heart of mysticism is the sense of the necessity of the divine union, the realization of Christ on earth, the true, certain, and absolute knowledge of God the supreme. Dr. Nicoll disavows all intention of expounding all the dangers which inhere in mysticism. He leaves that to the individual student. The mystical interpretors expounded the phrase, "The Garden of Nuts," as pointing to the prophecies, allegories, parables and poetry of the Old Testament. He uses the words as a convenient title for the brief series of articles on what he believes to be the true, precious, and divinely sanctioned method of interpretation. It is an appeal for the illustration of the Scriptures from the Scriptures. While many will rebel at the fanciful interpretations which mystical writers have given to the Scriptures, we can say that Dr. Nicoll, both in his style and in his expositions, will be found full of charm and suggestion.

HELPS AND HINTS IN NURSING. By J. Quintin Griffith, M. D., Ph. D. The John C. Winston Company, Philadelphia. Pages 482.

Three points are specially emphasized in this book: first, it seeks to be a guide for times of sickness; second, for caring for infants and children; third, for preserving health. It is not intended to tell you how to prescribe medicines. That is the province of a physician, but it gives a great deal of practical information and good advice such as will prove valuable in any home.

At the Grave.

It is a world of seeming:
The changeless moon seems changing ever,
The sun sets daily, but sets never,
So near the stars and yet so far;
So small they seem, so large they are!
It is a world of seeming.

And so it seems that she is dead;
Yet so seems only; for, instead,
Her life is just begun; and this—
Is but an empty chrysalis;
While she, unseen to mortal eyes,
Now wins her way in brighter skies—
Beyond this world of seeming.

PART III.

CHAPTER XII.

Of course Rhoda had not beeen paid anything for her poem, except with the pleasure of seeing it in print. But she would not have exchanged the bliss resulting from that experience for a good many dollars. One's thoughts seem so much more distant and beautiful when in printed lines, even if some of the lines are dim and even if advertisements are jostling them with one elbow. The thoughts in our brain are like people who have not yet dressed themselves, and though there is as much flesh and blood in them while in their night dresses, they are not presentable until clothed for the public eye. And there is the thought that thousands are reading what you have imagined in your solitude, though likely enough thousands are skipping your effusion, especially if it be poetry. And there is the hope, perhaps not boldly acknowledge by yourself, that here is the first step toward fame and fortune—but always fame first; and that you have at last begun. It is only after you have seen thousands of your words printed that you begin to realize that the world is going ahead as if you were not in it. As for me, I can look at this printed chapter with a soul quite unmoved. But Rhoda was all fresh and innocent and hopeful. Thrilled with her first success, she sat through a long sermon and thought it short. This alone will reveal somewhat her exalted condition. In the evening they visited Wizzen and Mrs. Weed. The wagon still stood in the depths of the excavated vacant lot. The twins climbed down the winding path which led among frowsy weeds and broken bricks and heaps of ashes and gravel. They were received joyously by Mrs. Weed, whom Rhoda embraced with true affection; but Wizzen, though glad to see them, was very much preoccupied.

"Oh, Wizzen," said Raymund, "what do you think? Rhoda has had a poem published in the biggest daily in St. Louis!"

"Has she?" said Wizzen. "Look here, Raymund, you have come at a good time. I've sold the off horse and the fellow is coming for him pretty soon." Wizzen stood beside the off horse, which looked very despondent, as if grieving over the approaching separation.

"It's in seven stanzas," said Raymund, "and printed at the very top of the column."

"Yes," said Wizzen. "Now, the trouble is to keep this off horse on its legs and able to follow the feller that's bought it."

As he spoke the off horse tried to lie down, but Wizzen grappled it by the head, crying, "No, you don't! Here, Raymund, reach me that liniment."

Raymund handed him the bucket indicated, and Wizzen dipped his cloth in it and began to rub the off horse's legs. "I've put in some whisky," he confided to Raymund, "and I hope it will hearten up the beast till the feller can git here. He bought it with his eyes open, and give me ten dollars, which may be its value and may not, depending if it can be kept on its legs." The horse tried to lie down again. "Hand me that bottle," cried Wizzen. "Now, I'll get it into his mouth. Look out; he is pretty active when he's first swallowed! Run up to the road, Raymund, and see if you kin see that feller coming. He ought to be here."

Raymund obligingly climbed the hill and looked about for a man whose eye betokened a horse buyer. "How is it?" shouted Wizzen. Raymund shook his head. "Well, hail me if you see him," cried Wizzen, and he thrust the long-necked bottle in his pocket ready to use it at the proper moment. The off horse lay down.

"Poor horse!" said Rhoda, peeping from the wagon. "Is it suffering?"

"It ain't suffering," said Wizzen, judiciously, "except as you may say that any person suffers which he knows he has got old and feeble and will never be the boy he oncet was. Git up from here, you varmint!"

Raymund came running down the hill, waving his hat.

"Git up, I tell you," shouted Wizzen, angrily. "Stir your rusty old bones, you long-lived patriarch! I would be a giving up at my time of life if I was you! Here, take this bottle back of your jaw teeth. Be lively, now!"

When the purchaser had led the off horse away with exceeding difficulty, Wizzen said: "Now, where is that there poetry?" It was taken from Mrs. Weed, who had read it with much appreciation, and handed to Wizzen. He carried it to the wagon tongue, seated himself, and bowed over it. They could see him laboriously spelling out the words, and trying various pronunciations after each spelling. At the end of half an hour or so he rose and handed Rhoda the paper. "It's a great piece," he said. "That's what I call genius. If you ever get out a book of that sort let me know. I'm in the market to buy. I like poetry."

"I didn't know that," said Rhoda, much gratified and a good deal surprised.

"Oh, yes," said Wizzzen, "I've made up a lot of it, myself. When I was younger I used to amuse myself by them rhymes. It come handy to me—sorter born in me, I reckon, which they say a poet such should be by nature." Mrs. Weed, showing a curiosity to know what was being said, it was communicated to her through the ear trumpet. "I didn't know of his being a poet," she said, nodding toward Wizzen, "but of course he could be if he set his mind on it." So Rhoda began to see that what she had done was not so uncommon after all. When it was time to leave, Rhoda ostensibly drew forth the huge silver watch, Wizzen's gift of three years ago. Wizzen never saw it without looking upon the ground in an embarrassed way and picking up something for critical examination. Rhoda had never mentioned the watch to Wizzen, for his manner forbade such a daring trespass upon his sensitive nature, but she liked for him to know it was constantly in use. After leaving the vacant lot, the twins went to Washington Park, where "A Crown of Other Halves" was read several times over, and then the young author and her admirer looked at the rest of the paper. And that is how they suddenly learned that both Boggs and Mrs. Van Estry had been arrested in Kansas City. There was a long article about them with big pictures that were made up of long lines and white space in the crevices. It appeared that both had been discovered stealing goods from a big department store in order to convey the same to a second-hand store of evil reputation. This had brought out other circumstances in the lives of the thieves, that proved them guilty of many evil deeds, and seemed to connect them with a murder of some years past. Had Boggs and Mrs. Van Estry simply stolen forks and rings they might have been sent to the penitentiary for a number of years without great loss of time. But because they had done so many wicked deeds, and it seemed almost sure that they must have killed the man whose murderers had thus far escaped detection, it would be necessary to have a very long trial with a great many witnesses; and as both criminals had money to appeal the case should it go against them, it would necessarily be years before they could be imprisoned at Jefferson City, and likely enough they would finally get off free. "But I am glad they are arrested," said Raymund, "for whatever becomes of them, they can't ever bother us again. Now, let's read your poem once more. I will look at it, while you read it."

* * * * * * * * *

The weeks spent with their Uncle William were not without many bright hours for Raymund and Rhoda. They regularly attended a church near enough to save carfare, and they found friends in the Sunday-school teachers, as well as in the minister. The latter even called

ALL WILL WANT

QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS

BY S. D. GORDON

The author of "Quiet Talks on Prayer" (now in its 55th thousand), and "Quiet Talks on Power" (now in its 80th thousand).

Cloth, 12mo. 288 pages. Net 75c.

"QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS" is an attempt to group up in simplest Anglo-Saxon English the statements of the entire Bible regarding Jesus. The purpose is wholly practical, that one may get at a glance, for his own thought and heart, the swing of the Bible from end to end on its central theme.

Mr. Gordon's life work has been leading up to the theme of this new book.

TOPICAL ARRANGEMENT

FIRST—The purpose of Jesus' coming; the plan of his coming; the tragic break that occurred in the plan; the surprises that worked out of that break.
SECOND—The Person of Jesus from three points of view: the human; the divine; the winsomeness of his personality.
THIRD—The seven great outstanding experiences which reveal Jesus: the Jordan Baptism; the Wilderness Temptation; the Transfiguration as an emergency unusual; the Gethsemane struggle; the Victory of Calvary.
FOURTH—Study Notes. One of the most important features of the book, making it possible for the earnest reader to follow for himself Mr. Gordon's essential methods.

at the shop, but he was not encouraged by Miss Pinns, and as for Mr. Hodges, he had less and less to say about what should be done on his premises. Miss Pinns took in a good deal of money at the pawn shop, and the old man made considerable out of his renovated clothes. What became of the money was not clear, for Mr. Hodges was always complaining of being poor. One day as Raymund stood in the dingy street taking some of the coal soot, but thinking that he was taking the air, a young man in a cadet's uniform slowly approached, his bloodshot eyes fixed upon the sign of the three golden balls. Raymund thought he had surely seen him before, but could not remember where. The young man drew a handsome gold watch from his pocket and looked at it and then at the show window where other watches were displayed. He hesitated. Raymund could plainly smell whisky on the other's breath, and he understood the feverish glow of the cadet's eyes. At the corner of the street stood some young fellows waiting, and they cried to the uniformed young man to hurry up, that he would have no trouble winning his money back. So Raymund knew he wanted to pawn the watch to gamble. Suddenly he remembered what his landlady in Kansas City had said about her son being at West Point, and then he knew why the face had looked familiar; it was strikingly like Mrs. Bannerton's.

"Excuse me," said Raymund, stepping up; "I work at this place. Is there something you would like? Are you Mr. Bannerton?"

The cadet started violently and colored to the roots of his hair. "No, I'm not," he said, so angrily that Raymund knew he was. "Then excuse me," said Raymund. "You look so very much like a lady in Kansas City, whose son is studying at West Point, that I thought you might be the one. She keeps a lodging house."

"When did you see her?" asked the young man, looking at his watch and then at the window, and then at the half-drunken men who were waiting.

"It has been over two months," said Raymund. "I stopped there about a week. She told me about her daughter being at a Boston conservatory, and how willing she was to work and save and endure 'most anything if she could keep the daughter there. She said she had kept lodgers to support her son until he had been educated enough to get into West Point. She was so hard-working my heart used to ache to see how tired she was, but whenever she thought of her children it gave her extra strength. She didn't keep any servants—cleaned the rooms herself, washed off the front stone steps on her knees real early in the morning before the others were awake. I was raised on the farm, and used to get up pretty early—that's how I know."

The young man thrust his watch in his pocket. "I'm off on a month's furlough," he muttered.

"Are you?" said Raymund, brightly. "Going home, I suppose, to the old folks?"

"Yes, I am," cried the young man. "I won't have another vacation for two years."

"Well, that's fine, to have the month," said Raymund. "You don't want to lose a minute of it from your kinfolks, I suppose?"

"I just struck St. Louis this morning," said the other. "I'm going to pull out on the first train. He reached out his hand and grasped Raymund's in a manner half ashamed. "Say, old man," he said, hurriedly, "er—ah—God bless you!" Then he hurried in an opposite direction from that of his former companions.

Newly-Hatched Americans.

The humors of citizen-making are described by a New York Sun reporter who paid a visit to the Federal court to see the naturalization of a contingent from Italy who had been coached as to the answers they should make.

Whenever the commissioner suspects a candidate is unworthy, he does not show it in his demeanor. He first puts the question:

"Do you renounce allegiance to the king of Italy?"

"Sure," answers the Italian.

"Will you take up arms against our president?"

"Sure," comes the reply with promptness and a note of sincerity indicating long practice.

"Will you trample upon the American flag?"

"Sure."

"Will you sack and burn Washington?"

"Sure."

"Will you gloat over the nation's ruin?"

"Sure."

At this point, when the candidate thinks all is well, the commissioner puts a sudden and definite end to his hopes.

A Queer Little Hen.

There was once a little brown hen,
A dear little, queer little hen,
Her work was to lay
Her one egg every day,
And she did it, this good little hen.

She'd fly up in a tree, and right then,
Seated high on a branch, this queer hen,
Her egg she would lay,
Just one egg every day,
This good little, queer little hen.

'Twas a strange thing to do, I must say,
Lay an egg from a tree every day.
And what good was the egg?—
Just tell that, I beg—
That fell from a tree in that way?

But some people do things just as queer;
I know it; I've seen it, my dear.
They have a good thought,
But it just comes to naught;
From the wrong place they drop it, my dear.

There's a lesson for you and for me
From a hen that laid eggs in a tree.
If we do a right thing,
If a good thought we bring,
Let's not choose a wrong place, you and me.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

This is our third number devoted to the story of orphan Charlie's ice cream social. I hope we may find time this week to finish with the letters of our guests. By the way, I saw articles in two papers last week telling about this social; how everybody was invited to stay at home and send a dime for a dish of imaginary ice cream, all money to be used toward Charlie's education. But now the social is really over; the last spoonful of ice cream has been scraped out of the freezer. It has been so successful that I think perhaps we will make it an annual affair and hold another next August 3. Mrs. J. O. Johnston, Stewartsville, Mo.: "I have gathered up a little party to bring to the social. I kept it in mind during my visits, and spoke of it publicly at Sunday-school with the inclosed result—$3. Had we been rich, I suppose we should have written you a good big check." (Oh, no, in that case I should have expected but a dime. Mrs. Johnston sends names of all who contributed, and amount of each, all of which is recorded in my Av. S. account book. Among them I note an old schoolmate of mine, Harvey Loller, who promised us, when we were boys, that he would one day write a history of the world that all the world would read. He hasn't got to it yet, so many other things have been crowded upon him, but, bless his heart! he got to our orphan's ice cream social, which is more than could be said of those who used to remark [with irony] that they'd buy Harvey's history when he wrote it.) Bessie Tracy Ryman, Liberty, Mo. (who entertained Charlie a month last summer): "I send $1.40. It is so hard to interest people in such things. I collected 30 cents outside my own relatives, and have talked $30 worth at least. Ha! ha! I value my speeches pretty high. We had pineapple ice August 3 and collected at home. I will send the names, so you can see who responded. I do not write this for publication; 'my pen is poor.'" A Grandmother, Modesto, Cal.: "Inclosed find 10 cents. I wish I had the ice cream here this warm morning. I wish I could send enough money to educate the dear boy, but am glad I can send even this. I pray the richest blessings upon the Av. S. for the good it is doing the young folks and the old folks as well. I hope you may not get sick from eating too much ice cream." (Well, they say you won't drown if you don't go near the water.) "I wish Charlie a glorious visit with you and Felix." Ruth Peters, Joplin, Mo.: "I thought I would send some Sunday-school papers to you to be forwarded to Drusie. You may expect some more. I am a daughter of Ella J. Dunham and a great granddaughter of Lawson Moore, who lived near you in Plattsburg. Papa preaches for the South Joplin Christian Church." (We loved Bro. Lawson Moore, who lived just across the street from us. He died when I was a boy, but I always think of the old brick house as "Brother Moore's house," though many a year has slipped by since he crossed the railed front porch for the last time, his witty tongue stilled.) Inez E. Humphrey, Palmyra, Ill.: "The Juniors of the Palmyra Christian Church, Mrs. Annie Mahan, superintendent, send $1 for Charlie and $1 for Drusie. Since its beginning I have been interested in the Av. S., and though I have never succeeded in keeping its rules 12 weeks, have read a number of poems and pages of history through trying. Primary teachers have many, many things to do. May our Heavenly Father bless the Av. S." Mrs. S. A. Penn, Wellsville, Mo.: "We are delighted that we can attend (in the spirit) Charlie's social. Our family consists of papa, mamma and four little boys, and we are all present, with prayers and best wishes" (and a dollar). L. B. Miller, Detroit, Mich.: "As a result of the self-denial social for Charlie at my home, I am sending $6.30. It is not nearly so much as might have been wished, but the night was hot, threatening a storm, and, as you say, 10 cents is 10 cents, and it takes a good many to educate a boy. This is chiefly from the Woodward Avenue Christian Church, and we are not very strong yet; were organized last March. NOT for publication." (Couldn't help it, but hope I left out all the part you wouldn't want printed.) Mrs. Sallie Riding, Meadville, Mo.: "I have read the Av. S. letters from the beginning and have often thought I would help, so when you got up that ice cream social I thought 'Now is my time!' So this afternoon I had company and told them about it; as they were all friends of the Av. S., I raised 85 cents. I hope you won't make yourself sick eating ice cream." (People are mighty uneasy about me! When have I had any ice cream?) "My prayer is that Charlie may receive a good education and grow up to be an honor to the Av. S." Evelyn Hord, Excelsior Springs, Mo.: "Mrs. A. E. Watson and I send our dimes. The 40 cents is for Drusie. I had to stop keeping the Av. S. rules, as my eyes were weak, but they are all right now, and I may begin again. I will have the pleasure of teaching 60 pupils this winter. I taught last year and like it." Clarence and Carl Per Lee, Grand Rapids, Mich.: "We send $3, half for Drusie, half for Charlie. We are still alive, you see, earning money for your missionary and orphan." (Are you still selling newspapers?) "We still take interest in the Av. S., and think the Bronze Vase fine. We hope Rhoda and Raymund will some day escape the sharp eye of Mr. Boggs. We have heard from Drusie twice. Once she sent a sample of Chinese writing, which, however, we were unable to read. We have received a wrapper which had apparently been around a three-cornered box. It reached us empty. Can any one inform us what was in it?" Jean Chambers, Kensington, Ky.: "I finished my fourteenth quarter long ago, and was nearly through with the fifteenth when I got disgusted at the way I was reading—waiting until Saturday night every time, and then of course not having time to read much—so I wouldn't count it. We are a little late getting to the social, but there was plenty of ice cream left. It was very good, although the saucers were small, but that's to be expected at a social." (I don't think I would talk, if I were you, as I helped you to ice cream three times!) "This dollar includes all the family, including grandma." Nannie D. Chambers, same state: "We enjoyed Charlie's ice cream supper very much and I send you in this the money due him for our part. I wish I could have eaten mine in Bentonville, but perhaps ours tasted just as well here." (If it was made out of Kentucky cream I feel quite sure it did.) "A few minutes ago I heard Jean singing your new song, 'Fishing in the Ozarks.' We think it is fine. We learned it as soon as it came out, and have sung it a good many times." (The general reader will note my opportunity for a little advertising along here.) Antoinette Thompson, Pittstown, N. Y.: "Are we too late for the social? Mrs. Harriet A. Cook, of Troy, N. Y., wants a saucer of ice cream, so do I; so we send a dime each. If you were in that picture of your house that was printed in The Christian-Evangelist, somebody would have to have sharper eyes than I to discover it. I think after all that airing you gave me in the paper I deserve to have a good picture of you—don't you think so?" (We have recently had a picture struck of Felix. Incidentally, I was in it, too. Perhaps we can produce it on this page in about a month. Then you can feast your eyes.) "I am much interested in "The Bronze Vase." I wish all the ministers and the otherwise great men who go to the Buffalo convention would wear placards so we could know them. I wonder if you are going?" (Am I an otherwise great man?) M. M. Limbry, Sait Lake City, Utah: "I am heartily in sympathy with the work of the Av. S. It is a great education along the lines of missions and good works. I send $1, half for Charlie, half for Drusie. I am glad the ice cream social was such a success. I have known you through The Christian-Evangelist for years." Des Moines, Iowa: "It is very warm here, and I feel that a dish of ice cream is just what I need. Here is my dime and may it help Charlie, though ever so little." Mrs. V. L. Gallaher, Danville, Ill.: "Here are six dimes for Charlie's social, with names of donors. I wish it were many more." Elenora Ross, Commerce, Mo.: "Accept the inclosed dime for the social. It was a happy thought." Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Ewin, Burdett, Kan.: "We are a little late, but we had threshers on September 3, so know you will excuse the delay." Nellie F. Hawes, Atlanta, Ill.: "I send $2 from Mrs. S. A. Boruff, and the same from myself, equally for Charlie and Drusie; also another dollar from a friend for Charlie." May E. Parker, Marine, Ill.: "I send my dime hoping that at Charlie's social there may be a great meeting of dimes." C. M. Reynolds, Latah, Wash.: "We three send 30 cents for Charlie's social." Denver, Col.: " Two dishes, please!" Kinsley, Kan.: "Ten cents for a dish of ice cream, as it is very hot here this evening." Exline, Iowa: "Fifty cents for Drusie and Charlie." E. J. P., Fern Acres, Vashon, Wash.: "God bless the Av. S. work! This is our first contribution; 50 cents for Charlie, same for Drusie." Mrs. Hattie V. Welton, Iowa City: "It is a little late, but I must have a dish of ice cream. May God bless the social, the givers and the receiver! I read The Christian-Evangelist, you see!" Winifred C. Welton, same locality: "Mamma's dish of ice cream was so good that I want one, too!" Mrs. Fannie Newman, Lexington, Mo.: "That social is a fine one-sided affair, but think I can afford the price for three saucers." Mrs. C. A. Walker, Denver, Col.: "As I can't come to the social, I send 50 cents. I am glad Charlie had a splendid visit." Mrs. Amie Chapman, Wilton, Iowa: "I send $1.10 for the social for Orphan Charlie's education, and may God bless you and him." Sallie Huffaker, Holt, Mo.: "We are coming, sister Mary, my cousin, Mrs. Garrett and myself. This is the strangest social I ever heard of—no cake! I suppose you have the headache and can not cook it. Well, I guess we will have to hurry or our ticket will expire." Mrs. W. A. Mason, Nevada, Mo.: "Two dishes of ice cream, please, for my husband and me. Glad Charlie spent part of his vacation with you." Mrs. J. W. Penn, Shelbyville, Mo.: "I send $1 for Charlie's social. You may eat the cream. May God's richest blessings be upon all engaged in the noble work of the Av. S."

And now the story of the social is told. Have I left out any name except my kinfolks? To be sure, 36 people from Plattsburg, Mo., attended our celebration, but they are almost kinfolks, for you see that is the home of my childhood. Dora Thompson, who graduated there at the high school last May, chaperoned a big crowd of my old neighbors down to the Ozarks. Miss Jenny Bagby's letter has already been printed. Here at Bentonville, the Endeavor Society gave $2.30, and several gave individually. Emma Simpson Bland used to be a regular keeper of our rules. Her grandmother sent $1 for Charlie and Drusie. Susie Scearce kept the rules for ever so many quarters; she and family sent $1.10 for Charlie. A cousin down in Oklahoma made her presents felt. As for my own immediate family, we found Arkansas soil pretty hard and thin, but we scratched up a little. Utah was the eighteenth state to come to the social. From New York to California the dimes came trooping in to Charlie's ice cream social. Now, the last penny is in, and the books are closed. We took in $91.50, which means that we sold 950 dishes of imaginary ice cream for our orphan's education. Don't you feel like crying "Hurrah"? I do! Then, why not? HURRAH! New Honor List in two weeks.

J. W. Monser's "The Literature of the Disciples" at 35 cents is one of our best book propositions.

It is universally conceded that E. L. Powell is one of the greatest orators of our church. His volume of magnificent addresses, "The Victory of Faith," is published by this House and being sold at $1.00.

You will search in vain through The Christian-Evangelist for those fake cancer cures, speculative and other questionable advertisements appearing without apology in the columns of our contemporaries. Will not our readers who appreciate this recommend the paper to a neighbor?

Advance orders are being taken for Editor Garrison's new book—"The History of Christian Union." This is uniform in size with his other works on the "Holy Spirit" and "Helps to Faith," and sells for the same price, $1.00. It is an invaluable addition to every library. We hope many editions will be required to supply the demand.

While for church services Gloria in Excelsis is a peerless collection of church music and is as low-priced as it is possible to make it, we sell cheaper books—Living Praise, Popular Hymns No. 2, Silver and Gold, Praises to the Prince, Gospel Call, sold in limp cloth, $2.00 per dozen; in boards, $2.50; in cloth, $3.00; purchaser to pay shipping.

To other incomparable features of the Dowling series of Bible school supplies there will be added a Teacher's Quarterly for each grade. Many schools grown weary of other publications have signified their intention of sending to us for the best next quarter. Start in the new year aright by supplying your young people with the Dowling Lesson helps and papers.

Many will write in great haste, "Reserve Pullman berth lower six for me without fail," but it will be too late. Immediately notify us whether you are going on the reclining chair car, tourist or Pullman sleeper that we may make your reservation at once. Everything possible will be done for the comfort and entertainment of our friends going up to the great convention via The Christian-Evangelist special over the Wabash.

Thousands of copies of The Christian-Evangelist are being used each week by pastors and evangelists in protracted meetings and all testify to their efficiency as soul savers. These are furnished at a price so low as to place them within the reach of every congregation seeking through special meetings to exalt Christ and greatly up-build the church. Write us for terms and instructions about the "pink circulars" furnished gratuitously for general distribution.

For months we have published each week clubs of new subscriptions to The Christian-Evangelist at the regular price of $1.50. There has been no diminution in the number published each week through the summer. While The Christian-Evangelist's peculiar organization and standing with the people brings most of our new subscribers by ones and twos as friends interest their neighbors, we are pleased to submit the following clubs received last week: Rockwell City, Iowa, H. Brown, pastor, 3; Mobile, Ala., Claude Hill, minister, 4; Trenton, Mo., S. J. White, minister, 5; Peru, Ind., C. H. Devoe, pastor 17; Eaton, Ind., L. O. Newcomer, minister, 17; Portland, Ore., E. S. Muckley, pastor, 23; Bethany, Mo., T. J. Golightly, minister, 23; Maryville, Mo., H. A. Denton, pastor, 27; Frankfort, Ind., W. J. Russell, pastor, 53. This is gratifying to a House that is trying to make every number a light giver and a life saver, and our joy is that it is equally gratifying to thousands of friends endued with the true missionary spirit.

The difficulties of the English language are well illustrated in a story recently told of three French boys who were doing Shakespeare into English from their French versions. When they came to the line from "Hamlet," "To be, or not to be," the three translations came out as follows: "To was or not to am," "To were or is to not," "To should or not to will."

The fallacy of asking too many questions is generally followed by much embarrassment.

I was stopping at a large hotel, and one day as I came out and took my hat from the hands of the hat keeper I said to him: "How do you know that is my hat?"

"I don't know it, suh," said the boy.

"Then why do you give it to me?" I insisted.

"Because," replied the boy, "you gave it to me."—Lippincott's.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
  Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
  The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
  For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
  Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
  And the song of victory.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

General expectancy in itself would almost send us such articles as follows from A. W. Taylor. The world is more concerned about what we as a people are doing through this close of our first century than about what we are believing and teaching. There were times when a great deal of heterodoxy of living and doing could be atoned for in public estimation by orthodoxy of belief, but they are gone. These days will pardon many whims and heresies of doctrine if the life lies in the direction of the great Philanthropist. Men now care little whether the wheels of the clock move by weights or springs so the hands on the dial plate point to the true hour of the day, when they inquire the time.

We are the Church of Christ, not by claiming to be such, but by being it, doing its work, reproducing its ministries and continuing its life as they were in the days of the personal presence of the holy apostles and their immediate successors. A glaring omission in our reproduction of primitive Christianity is observed in respect to church benevolences. We are not keeping pace with many of the great Protestant denominations in this regard, while the Catholics have far surpassed us all. The Baptists are doing more in St. Louis alone to reproduce the healing ministries of the great Physician than we Disciples are in all the United States.

We shall not long be under this reproach. Preachers like A. W. Taylor and givers like Joseph H. Parker will not permit it. But the most heroic expressions of persistent agitation and exhortation and liberality will be required to enable us to make a creditable showing of Christian benevolence by Centennial time.

We would deeply regret, however, to see this Pontiac sanitarium enterprise launched under any other auspices than of our National Benevolent Association. The multiplication of boards and sources of appeal must for the highest interest of the great cause of this Restoration itself be firmly restricted.

We hope Brothers Taylor and Mohorter may soon have the white banner of Immanuel and the purple insignia of our church benevolences waving forth an invitation in the name of the Lord to all indigent sufferers from over a wide area to come to the Master's cure for healing.

We have received numerous letters approving a recent protest on this page because of an Illinois church's discrimination against ministers beyond their fortieth year in calling a new pastor. But without exception they have been written by ministers beyond that outlawed age. We fondly hoped for many letters from Disciples enjoying the ministry of men of mature years testifying to their acceptance to the church and the good work they are doing and the preference of congregations for the riper rather than the callow ministerial years.

We invite readers whose pastors are between fifty and seventy years to testify whether they believe them incapacitated by reason of such age from rendering helpful service. We believe testimony can thus be secured convincing our church boards and committees on receiving preacher resignations that in the ministry as in medicine, law, merchandise and other professional and commercial vocations, a man's best services are beyond rather than under fifty. We trust the outcome of this discussion will be a higher valuation of the labors of our older brethren and their longer retention in places of usefulness, and thus an actual doubling of our ministerial forces be accomplished as we enter upon the second century of our history. Let the communications relating to this theme be brief and consist rather of the testimony of facts than of arguments based thereon.

We confess some alarm and disappointment as we note the absence of men of hoary heads in our conventions. It means that many have gone from the ministry to commercial and industrial pursuits preventing their attendance on the conventions. Many absenteeisms are due to the erroneous belief of our elderly brethren that their presence and constitutional conservatism are not appreciated nor their help in carrying on the work of the Lord greatly desired by their younger conferees. Let us set in motion influences that will recall many of these veterans, prematurely mustered out of the ranks, back into service, and that will overcome a prejudice we believe to be groundless against preachers who have passed into the youth of old age that is driving hosts of boys who would otherwise grace our ministry into other callings, so that Pittsburg, 1909, will rejoice in seeing thousands of men whose heads may indeed be whitened by the frosts of years, but whose enthusiasm for righteousness is as fervent as at forty, and whose fruitful services will be profoundly appreciated by a great and ever growing constituency.

These discussions must be free from disparagements of our young preachers. They who, resisting the blandishments of this materialistic age, enter upon the ministry of the Word, are worthy of all praise. If arrows pierce their souls let them be sped by demons rather than by Disciples.

To make our Centennial great and our second century more glorious than this God needs them all—youth and its zeal and strength, and age with its experience, wisdom and power.

That Centennial Monument.

BY ALVA W. TAYLOR.

A rare opportunity presents itself to us for a Centennial monument, in line with Brother Powell's recent suggestion, in the Freeport Sanitarium. Dr. White, who is the founder of this institution, is an ardent Disciple as well as an eminent surgeon and general practitioner. He has built up at Freeport this splendid institution with a property and equipment of between $50,000 and $60,000. It pays him 30 per cent on the investment each year, yet this benevolent physician offers to turn the whole property over to the church for a nominal return on his actually invested capital and receive only a salary as its manager, a much less salary than his income and the growth of the institution would justify commercially. He has recently associated with him Dr. Kost, of the Dixon Church, an eminent surgeon in north Illinois, and these two men propose to devote themselves to the philanthropy of building up a national institution under the auspices of the Disciples of Christ, to build up for us, in other words, an institution that will become our Battle Creek if proper support is received. The property is being put into the hands of a board of trustees and is to be managed like our other benevolent institutions. Expert treatment will make it largely self supporting and the aim will be to make a sanitarium for chronic diseases especially.

Here is the opportunity of the church for a great Centennial monument. What could better mark the close of a century's work and inaugurate that of a second than the endowing of a great ministry of the helping hand like this? To it any church could send its poor who need medical skill at the mere cost of their railroad fare. There societies can furnish rooms and support beds for those upon whom the Master had such compassion, to the healing of whom he gave so much of his time. Indeed he was the great Physician to the world of his day so much did his ministry become one of healing. Here is our one neglected ministry in his name. We could fittingly set our whole Gospel forth to the world at a time when all eyes will be turned our way by setting forth the Master thus in such a ministry of healing. The world looks askance at the Christian people to-day who practice not Christ's charity among men. Let us justify ourselves in this and convince men of mercy and love even as did he who was the Great Physician.

OUR CENTENNIAL HELPERS.

I am now in my second year with THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I am well pleased with it, and with God's help I will try to keep it in my home.—Arthur W. Inabinett, Charleston, S. C.

I consider THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a broad but quite orthodox paper. It is up with the times, but not beyond the unchangeable truth. It is a paper full of great thoughts for a great people.—Rochester Erwin (minister), Rochester, Minn.

I trust I shall be able to get many permanent subscribers here in Pomona for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I count it a privilege to do what I can to extend the circulation of such a worthy paper. The message is clear, convincing and essentially, vitally Christian.—Madison A. Hart (minster), Pomona, Cal.

Current Events

The President and Cuba.

The president has taken hold of the Cuban trouble with his usual vigor and, we may say—so far as his actions up to date are concerned—with his usual wisdom. In sending Secretary Taft to Cuba to look into the matter he gave an argument for peace, the force of which was at once felt by both parties to the quarrel. The Cuban government and the insurrectionary leaders both gave orders for their respective forces to maintain an attitude of defense and refrain from aggressive warfare for a time. The president's letter to Senor Quesada, the Cuban minister at Washington, which was sent simultaneously with the announcement of Secretary Taft's mission, assures the Cuban people of his interest in their welfare and his hope to see them continue in the enjoyment of independence; but it assures them also that he will not hesitate to perform his duty under the treaty, and intervene if a stable government is not maintained and if life and property are not protected. These conditions of peace and order, he says, have already ceased to exist in Cuba and unless they are speedily restored intervention will be inevitable. Since both parties in Cuba are far more afraid of American intervention than they are of each other, it was natural that the publication of this letter should have a very pacifying effect upon them.

The Right to Fight.

We sincerely hope that intervention will not be necessary and we believe that it will take much more than the present disturbances (so far as we are informed of their character and extent) to justify intervention. During the seven years of her independence Cuba has been reasonably free from discord and dissension. Indeed, she has, all things considered, done much better than we did during the seven years following the Revolutionary war. At the present time Cuba seems to be in the throes of a civil war as real, though not on as large a scale, as our own civil war. A civil war nearly always produces conditions more or less dangerous to life and property. It was so in the case of our own war. But the existence of a civil war with its necessary attendant injuries to non-combatants, does not prove that a nation is incapable of self-government. That would be indicated only by an indefinite continuance of such disturbances, or by the obvious indifference of the nominal government to the rights of foreigners, or by what the president calls the "insurrectionary habit." Among the inalienable rights of every nation, especially of every young and small nation which is trying to find itself, is the right to fight a little once in a while by way of learning how to settle differences without fighting.

The Oil Business.

Mr. Pierce, of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, has admitted in court that the Standard Oil Company owns a majority of the stock of his concern and that the profits of the business are between 600 and 700 per cent per annum. We have had a suspicion all along that there was money in the oil business, if carefully managed. The percentage of profit is partly accounted for by the fact that it is estimated on the basis of the capital stock, $400,000, while the actual assets of the concern are thirty times that amount. Even so, it must be admitted that the business is lucrative. Otherwise how did the company increase its assets thirtyfold without increasing its capital stock?

Gompers vs. Littlefield.

The election in Maine was chiefly interesting to outsiders by reason of the attempt of Mr. Gompers, representing the Federation of Labor, to defeat Mr. Littlefield on account of the latter's vote against the eight-hour law as applied to all government works. It was the first battle in the political campaign which the labor unions have announced their intention to wage in behalf of what they consider their rights. The outcome will doubtless be encouraging to the labor forces for, either through their efforts or from other causes or both, the Republican plurality throughout the state was much reduced. There will be many contests and the Democrats are claiming the legislature on joint ballot, which would mean a Democratic senator when Mr. Frye's term expires. Mr. Littlefield's plurality was reduced from about 8,000 to an uncomfortably narrow margin. The fight on the prohibition feature of the Republican program undoubtedly had much to do with the outcome. We are glad Mr. Littlefield was re-elected. He is a good congressman and has contributed more than most of his fellows to the advancement of reform movements by legislation. If the unions are going to make their fight on men of his quality they will not better their standing in the eyes of the disinterested observer.

Agnes Repplier and Madame Hunt, the former a brilliant essayist and the latter the president of the National Milliners' Association, have joined, by either design or coincidence, in a simultaneous campaign against the prevailing style of masculine head-gear. We suspect that these ladies have been moved to envy on contemplating the ease with which a man buys his spring or fall hat. Five minutes is about all the time that even a hesitant-minded man can spend on the operation, and three minutes is enough. The range of possible choices is limited. About the most intricate problem that can arise is whether the seven or the seven and an eighth will fit better after you have had your hair cut. The selection is as simple as the choice of a dessert at that famous restaurant where the list was "pie, apple-pie or pie." No wonder the eminent author and artist above mentioned are envious. They profess, however, that their protest is based on the purely aesthetic interest. Men's hats are ugly. True, so they are. The black derby and the silk hat of commerce and convention rival each other, and are otherwise unrivaled in hideousness. Only habit blinds our eyes to these deformities of taste and renders them endurable. But if not these, what then? Plumes, they tell us, and picture hats with jewels and buckles and feathers. Nay, give us rather the homely derby. It may be ugly but at least we can live up to it. Better to have a ridiculous and ugly hat which custom has rendered inconspicuous, than the most beautiful and ornate headpiece which will make all the rest of our clothes, yea even our speech and manners, seem ugly and base by comparison.

Tariff and Prosperity.

A well informed correspondent criticizes our remarks upon Speaker Cannon's speech. Mr. Cannon's assertion was that, in the history of this country, high tariff had always been accompanied by prosperity and free trade by hard times. We said it was not so and cited the decade from 1846 to 1856 as a time of low tariff and prosperity. Our correspondent points out that other influences were at work in that period which brought prosperity independently of the tariff. Most certainly. And that is the chief point of our argument. There are always countless other influences at work. It is no more fair to assert without argument (we did not assert it at all) that the low tariff produced the prosperity of that era, than it is to assert without argument that the present high tariff produces our present prosperity. Perhaps it does. But again, perhaps it does not, and our objection to the stand-pat attitude and to "Uncle Joe's" style of argument is that it ignores all other possible causes of prosperity and argues directly from prosperity to protection, without giving the other side a chance to analyze the situation as our very intelligent critic has done with the era of ante-bellum prosperity to which we referred. A stand-patter in 1850 would have been a free-trader because there was simultaneously (comparative) free trade and prosperity. A stand-patter in 1906 is a protectionist because there is simultaneously high tariff and prosperity. We object to the method of argument in either case as shallow and inconclusive.

Where Jesus Placed the Emphasis.—VI.

Our Human Relationships.

The kingdom of God, as we have seen, contemplates not simply the renovation of the individual man and bringing him into right relations with God, but its ultimate aim is the renovation and reconstruction of human society, The petition, "Thy kingdom come" is elaborated in the phrase, "Thy will be done, as in heaven so on earth." The kingdom will not have come in its fullest sense until this sublime end is reached. But this involves, of course, the bringing of men into right relations with each other—the relationship of fraternity and of mutual helpfulness. The "great commandment," according to Jesus, is to love God with all the mind, heart, and strength, and the second which is "like unto it" is to "love thy neighbor as thyself."

Everywhere in the teaching of Jesus this matter of our human relationships is emphasized. He would not have his disciples be content with loving one another. "Ye have heard that it was said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy; but I say unto you, Love your enemies, and pray for them that persecute you; that ye may be sons of your Father who is in heaven; for he maketh the sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust. For if ye love them that love you what reward have you? Do not even the Publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? Do not even the Gentiles the same?" (Matt. 5:43-48.) So highly does he prize the existence of fraternal relations between men that he places the restoration of such relationship, when it is broken up, even before worship. "If therefore thou art offering thy gifts at the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hast aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." (Matt. 5:23, 24). It is in harmony with this teaching that he says, "Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the sons of God" (Matt. 5:9). What shall they be called who sow seeds of strife and discord among people, and array neighbor against neighbor, and brother against brother?

We have not attained Christ's point of view concerning our human relationships, until we are prepared to accept this teaching of Jesus fully and without reserve. How often is the peace of a church disturbed, and its usefulness in a community neutralized, by alienations and strifes between its members. Sometimes the peace of a whole brotherhood is marred, its influence greatly lessened, and its progress retarded, by unseemly controversies which are void of the spirit of forbearance and brotherly love. How little is said or thought about the heresy of hating one's brother or of fomenting strife among brethren! And, yet, with Jesus, this was one of the gravest offenses which one could commit against the principles and spirit of His kingdom. When Jesus placed love, Godward and manward, above all other requirements as fulfilling all the law and the prophets, he gave us the solution of a thousand human problems. It will solve the question of war between nations, of conflict between labor and capital, of strife and jealously between section and section, and it points the way, unmistakably, to the realization of His own prayer for the unity of His disciples.

His "new commandment" which He gave to His disciples is that they should love one another as He had loved them. When this commandment is obeyed, the difficulties which lie in the way of Christian union will dissolve like the mists before the rising sun, for when we love each other as Christ loved us, we will allow no differences of opinion to disturb our fraternal relationship, and as to faith and duty, love will find the way to unity where logic and argument have failed. Jesus made love the badge of our discipleship to Him. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another" (Matt. 13:35).

Let the teachers of the Church universal begin to place the emphasis where Jesus placed it, on love as the great regulative principle of human relationships, and as the supreme force of the kingdom of God, and we shall soon see our mutual misconceptions, alienations, and prejudices, giving way to the irresistible power of love, and all our divisions giving place to "the unity of the Spirit" held secure in "the bond of peace." But not only so. Such emphasis would mean much for the home. It would exalt right relations between husband and wife, and parents and children, as vastly more important, in the sight of God, as an expression of true religion, than correctness of ritual in worship, and soundness in doctrinal creed. It would unmask the hypocrisy of church members who make long prayers and are exceedingly zealous for soundness in the faith, who, in their avarice, devour widows' houses, underpay and otherwise mistreat their employees and steel their hearts against the cry of the poor. It would make apparent the absurdity of any profession of religion by men who, in their eagerness to make money, ignore their civic duties when the welfare of the people is at stake.

The church that manifests a deep interest in whatever relates to human welfare in the community and in the world, is acting in line with Christ's teaching, and is placing the emphasis where He placed it. The "common people," too, will hear the message of such a church as it gladly heard that of the Master. It would vastly increase the influence and popularity of local churches, if in addition to a faithful and loving proclamation of the gospel, they would give greater heed to the conditions and principles which affect human relationships and seek to apply to them the teaching of Christ. While the church, like the kingdom, is "not of this world," it is in the world, and its business is to help men and women bear their burdens, perform their duties and resist the temptations which come upon them here in the world. Right living consists in discharging the obligations of our various relationships in life. Christ came to help men do that. Blessed is the church that echoes Christ's teaching on this subject and illustrates it in its life!

Greetings to Our New Readers.

The large influx of new subscribers to The Christian-Evangelist which has come in during the summer months, and which continues with each mail, justifies us in extending this word of hearty welcome to these new additions to our Christian-Evangelist family. We would like to write you each a personal letter, but you are too many for that; so we ask each of you to consider yourself as personally addressed in this greeting.

We welcome you to the feast we weekly spread. You may not relish everything on the table. Do not reject other dishes, however, because of that. Eat what agrees with you. Read articles on subjects in which you are not interested, and see if you do not become interested. A religious paper worth reading at all, is worth reading pretty thoroughly. Those who read it most get most good out of it and are sure to become regular readers. Read with open mind and heart, not necessarily to accept all you read, but to give the writer a fair show to present his thought.

When an article specially impresses you as helpful, speak of it to others. When you have finshed your paper hand it to a neighbor to read, pointing out something you think will interest him or her. In this way you may sow seeds that will bear fruit that you little dream of. A single article has often changed a life. If the paper helps you, try to get another to read it, and you will help him. We hope you will like us. If you stay with us long enough we are sure you will. You will soon come to understand that The Christian-Evangelist stands for loyalty to Christ—his teaching, his Spirit, his example; for Christian brotherhood and fraternity; for Christian union, and all the steps that lead thitherward; for education, for progress in knowledge and character; for a deeper spiritual life; for applied Christianity; for joining forces to fight the devil and all his agencies, and to help humanity up to a higher and happier life. If you favor these things you will like the paper.

Again, we welcome you to our circle of readers. Help yourselves to what you see, and if you do not see what you wish, call for it. May our relationship as Editors and readers be mutually pleasant and helpful, and therefore enduring. The peace of God be with you and rest upon your homes, and the light of his countenance cheer you all life's journey through!

The Churches and Religious Journalism.

There are many indisputable signs of an awakening interest on the part of ministers and the most intelligent members in our churches as to the value of a good religious journal in the homes of their members. We have felt sure for years that such an awakening was bound to come. The relation of religious journalism to the successful on-going of all departments of work in the kingdom of God is so vital that it is strange that this revival of interest in the circulation of our religious journals has not come sooner. It is only just, perhaps, to admit that we who control the character of our religious journals are, in part, responsible for this delay and for the apparent indifference of our ministry and church officials in the past on this subject. We have not made our papers as free from objectionable matter as they ought to be, to make them most helpful in the promotion of religious interest and brotherly love and unity, on the part of their readers. We are persuaded, however, that the chief cause for this indifference is deeper seated than this. There has been too little thoughtful study, on the part of pastors and other church leaders, of the causes which would deepen the religious interest of their members, and increase their interest and activity in the various lines of Christian work. They have not watched closely the effects, on the families of their churches, of the reading of a good, religious journal, and noted how efficient a pastoral helper it may become. This is being seen and felt now as never before, and we believe our editors are also making an honest effort to respond to this demand and to make their journals sources of strength and of unity among the churches, rather than of discouragement, suspicion and division.

As one expression among many of this awakening interest in the circulation of a good, religious journal, we take the liberty to quote from a letter we have just received from Dr. E. T. Davis. After congratulating THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on its policy of omitting objectionable advertisements and on its general policy, it says: "I believe the next great move to be for all the churches to supply THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for all the families in the congregation, just as we now supply seats, song books and preaching for all. At —— city we have 197 members, about one-third of whom attend church regularly. The church as a body pays for preaching to all the church, yet nearly two-thirds of the members fail to hear it regularly. Now suppose we have sixty families in the church and twenty take the paper themselves. That would leave forty copies to be paid for by the church. It will preach to them every week, even if they do not come to church. It would be a small expense to preach to all the church through our paper, and I don't see how an intelligent Disciple could read THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST every week and be contented to stay out from the fellowship and regular work of the church. I don't believe one-third of them would do it. One year of such teaching would be of more benefit to the congregation than the average yearly meetings which costs much more than the copies of the paper would. I hope THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will soon be as much a part of our church provision as preaching is now."

We believe the wisdom of this suggestion will commend itself to many of our churches. But whatever method may be adopted, we are sure that our best churches henceforth will see to it that their members receive and read at least one or more of our religious journals, that one being selected which, in the judgment of the pastor and his most intelligent members, will best promote the spiritual edification and growth of the church. When this policy shall be generally adopted its quickening effect on all departments of our work and on the spiritual status of the churches themselves, will be quickly noticed, and our cause will receive an additional impetus to go on its conquering way.

We shall be glad to take this matter up with such churches as may regard THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as an important agency for developing the religious life of their members.

Notes and Comments.

We are concluding the series of articles this week by B. L. Chase under the title, "Modern Religious Persecution—A Defense." The articles were admitted on the ground that they were intended to be a mild satire on the spirit of intolerance which now and then crops out among us, and from which none of us are, perhaps, at all times, exempt. The liberal can be as dogmatic in his way as the conservative, and so far as the articles have served as a rebuke to intolerance, regardless of where it manifests itself, they have served the cause of truth. Luther was perhaps right in saying that every man had a little pope in him, and each of us would do well to look after the pope that is within him as well as the popes that are without. Some of our readers have misunderstood the intent of the articles, regarding them as serious rather than satirical. This suggests that our writers who deal with that dangerous weapon, satire, should be careful to label their articles so distinctly that none will misunderstand them. Others, again, have interpreted the articles as being aimed specifically against certain men and papers. In so far as these articles give countenance to this interpretation, we think they frustrate the real aim of the author which was to rebuke a certain tendency and not certain specific individuals. At any rate, this has been our aim in giving space to the articles. We would not like to say that satire is never, under any circumstances, admissible in religious journalism, but we are free to say that we believe love to be a far more potent weapon with which to correct errors.

We print elsewhere an interesting statement by Brother Zollars concerning the plans for inaugurating a school in the soon-to-be new state of Oklahoma. It is encouraging to contrast this method of consultation and co-operation with the haphazard and independent style of procedure once in vogue. It has in it the promise of success from the beginning. Referring to the question as to whether the brethren in Oklahoma should attempt to build up and endow a college to compete with the State University, in its scientific and academic features, or, utilizing the State University for these departments, should concentrate their efforts in building up a great Bible college, and so endowing it as to secure the ablest teaching talent in the brotherhood, that would influence the whole student community with the great facts, truths and principles of the Bible, we can not refrain from saying that the latter policy seems to be reinforced by so many reasons that it is difficult to see why a different course would commend itself to the brethren in that region. If they had a million dollars with which to endow an independent school, we could see how there might be an argument for that policy; but given the fact, that all the money that is likely to be raised in a quarter of a century will be needed to properly equip and sustain a Bible college, why should this money be spent in providing rooms and teachers for the teaching of such branches as are equally well taught by the state and offered to them without additional cost? This is the economic reason, but it is by no means the only one. The value to a cause like ours that makes its appeal to the reason of intelligent people, of having its Bible college located at the seat of the State University where it would come in contact with the largest number of educated and ambitious young men and women in the state, is incalculable. Our specialty is Bible teaching. That is what we are here to do. Let us give ourselves to that work with a singleness of aim and an intensity of zeal that will command the attention and respect of the people. In states where we have independent schools already well established, it is wise to support them and carry them on; but in new states the brethren ought to avail themselves of the opportunities offered by our state universities for concentrating their means and efforts on those things which others can not do for us, and which God will hold us responsible for doing up to the full measure of our ability.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Our last Sunday at Pentwater was a strenuous one, both in labor and in anxiety. For several days previous a forest fire had been slowly aproaching us from the south, and on Sunday morning a favorable south wind caused it to make rapid progress toward "Garrison Park." We had agreed to preach at the Methodist church, in the absence of the pastor, and at the hour appointed we directed our steps thither, but met on the way a number of men carrying spades and buckets, going down to fight the fire. On reaching the church we found a good audience, but made up mostly of women. After a short sermon the men were urged to join their fellow-townsmen in fighting the fire, when the people were dismissed. Soon after reaching home, and while we were eating dinner, a party returning from the fire advised all the cottagers to pack their goods and have them ready to be carried to the beach in case the fire reached the Park, which then seemed probable. We immediately set about getting our household goods in shape for carrying to the beach. Parties of people were coming and going, bringing contradictory reports of the progress of the fire. As we were assured that there were more people down at the fire than could be used, we made such preparation as we could to fight it when it reached our premises, and waited with anxiety the coming of the night and of the morning. J. M. Ford and wife, of St. Louis, and R. M. Denholme and family, of New Orleans, who occupied cottages north of us, pledged assistance in moving our household goods in case the fire reached us before morning. A favorable change of wind gave us hope, and so we retired and slept the greater part of the night, not knowing, however, what the morning might bring forth.

In the early dawn of Monday morning the Easy Chair Editor walked down the beach about two miles to the point where the fire had reached near the beach and where it had been stopped by a small stream which flowed into the lake. Walking inland through the burnt district, we found that the fire had crossed the little stream and had made its way farther north. Going still to the east we came to a plowed strip of ground running nearly east and west and found that this had stopped the fire and, aside from burning logs here and there, the fire had died out and danger for the present was averted. And so, returning to the cottage, we put our house in order and departed on the afternoon train. Credit is due the authorities of the village and the fire department for the heroic services they rendered in avoiding what might have proved a very destructive fire to the resort property, about Pentwater. This warning, we are sure, will not be lost and measures will be adopted hereafter by which it will be impossible for a forest fire to approach the Park from any direction. The beautiful groves of pines and oaks and hemlocks which crown these hills and ravines are its glory, and their destruction would have been a loss which it would have taken years to retrieve. We left the place feeling grateful that the threatened danger had been averted and that thousands of others in the years to come are to enjoy the beauty and shade of these trees and the quiet restfulness of these hills, as we have done during the three summers past.

After a few hours' rest in the hospitable home of the Stows at Grand Rapids, the night train brought us to Chicago, where our arrival had been timed to participate in the closing meeting of a three days' celebration by the Englewood church of its twenty-first anniversary. A recent write-up of this church in our columns, showing its splendid progress, renders it unnecessary here to go into any details. It is a good thing for a church to observe its anniversary. A church that is conscious of serving the community in which it lives, and the kingdom of God of which it is a part, is likely to mark, by some appropriate service, the passing of its more important anniversaries. This church at Englewood has good reason to celebrate its twenty-first anniversary. It has come up through difficulties, conquered them successfully, has secured a splendid habitation for itself, is practically out of debt, has the prestige of success, and has achieved an honorable reputation. For seven years, or about one-third of the life of the church, the present pastor, C. G. Kindred, has been at the helm and to him much credit is due for the position which the church holds to-day. It was our privilege to address a large audience of people on Tuesday evening on "The Present Phase of the Christian Union Problem." There were several representatives of our ministers in the city present, and several ministers of neighboring Protestant churches of Englewood. The spirit of brotherhood seemed to exist between this congregation and its neighbor churches, and between Brother Kindred and his brother ministers about him. The singing was hearty, the spirit was that of gratitude for the past and hopefulness for the future. Our hearty congratulations are extended to both pastor and people on their splendid record and still brighter outlook.

And now here we are in old St. Louis and the Easy Chair is once more on its native heath. It is a good thing, occasionally, to go way off on the edge of the brotherhood and its activities, and look at them from a distance. But, for the most part it is better to be at the center where you can look out along all the radiating lines into the great field of activities, and where one can feel the pulse-beats of the brotherhood in its labors, conflicts, hopes and aspirations. Sometimes when there are fluttering sensations in the region of the heart, and there is fear of organic trouble, the careful physician puts his ear to the patient's heart and, distinguishing between muscular pains or nervous disorder, and genuine organic heart trouble, says, "Your heart is all right." That sentence removes a great load of anxiety. If one puts his ear close to the beating of the heart of the brotherhood, distinguishing between mental perturbations and misconceptions and the real desires and aspirations of the great mass of the brotherhood, he is bound to say, "There is no organic heart trouble; the brethren, as a whole, love the truth and desire to see it triumph, and what seems to the contrary is, unless in exceptional cases, only apparent. We believe in the moral sanity, spiritual soundness and clear-mindedness of the great mass of the brotherhood when they have time and opportunity of judging the great issues that come before us. It is this fact that gives us heart and hope.

After all, this optimism in the final outcome of things; this confidence that the great body of the brotherhood will ultimately settle these questions the right way, is only faith in the principle of democracy as applied to religion. We all believe in that principle in this country as applied to politics. Our form of government is based on that idea. Why should we hesitate to apply the same principle in matters religious? Of course this is contrary to the belief and practice of the Roman Catholic Church, and perhaps of some others which claim the right to do the thinking for the great mass of people, and require them to accept these ready-made doctrines and opinions. This, however, is inconsistent with Protestantism, however much some Protestants may indulge in it. The Disciples of Christ, however, claim to have carried the Protestant principle of the right of private judgment to its logical results, and they have, therefore, rejected all ready-made standards of doctrine, and insist that the people shall think for themselves, believing that ultimately they are more apt to think about right, than would a limited number. In other words, we believe that all the people are wiser than part of the people. It was Lincoln's democracy that made him believe that you couldn't "fool all the people all the time." Religious editors ought to have the same confidence in the common sense and insight of the masses of their brethren, and it would

Hebrew Poetry---Illustrating Nature Treatment in the Psalms

By JAMES EGBERT

Matthew Arnold said twenty-five years ago, "The future of poetry is immense, because in poetry, where it is worthy of its high destinies, our race, as time goes on, will find an ever surer and surer stay. There is not a creed which is not shaken, not an accredited dogma which is not shown to be questionable, not a received tradition which does not threaten to dissolve. Our religion has materialized itself in the fact, in the supposed fact; it has attached its emotion to the fact, and now the fact is failing it. But for poetry the idea is everything; the rest is a world of illusion, of divine illusion. Poetry attaches its emotion to the idea; the idea is the fact. The strongest part of our religion to-day is its unconscious poetry."

The truth of this is to-day evident wherever the river of poetic song has flowed. The Hebrew stream has cut its channel deep and has well fertilized its banks. It commends itself to the world as both poetry and religion. From the recognition of Arnold's statement Hebrew poetry takes its place well to the front in the body of the world's literature.

Of course, Hellenic genius is pre-eminent. But it is art for art's sake. If the poet is a great teacher, and an inspirer of truer and nobler ideals, then Hebrew poetry must take first place. The "Sepher Tehillim," book of praises, is the perfect flower of Israel's song. The Psalter is a collection of religious lyrics. Lyric poetry is defined as "that which directly expresses the individual emotions of the poet." The Hebrew heart was large and finely tuned to the Divine Key. In the Psalms we hear the varied strains responsive to the touch of God. We fail to find the polish of Tennyson and the skill and labor of Arnold and Wordsworth. In fact there is no nature description as such. We have but to compare modern versified translations with the Psalms to feel that power has been sacrificed to beauty of descrpition.

Take Addison's

> "The spacious firmament on high,
> With all the blue ethereal sky
> And spangled heavens, a shining frame,
> Their Great Original proclaim."

Here is conscious effort to make a fine picture. The emotions that swept across the Hebrew poet's soul lifted him at once into the "grand style"—

> "The heavens declare the glory of God;
> And the firmament showeth his handiwork."

The Hebrew poet had a genuine love for nature. His is the poetry of the heart rather than of the intellect. His poetry is his experience put into song. What he saw, heard and felt found place in his verse. There is no philosophizing or cold logical reasoning. He sings only because he must sing—because he feels so deeply. His song is direct, simple, natural, spontaneous. Israel's heart is found not in its law or its history, but in its poetry. To the Hebrew the soul was everything. Mrs. Browning wrote in the true Hebrew spirit when she said of form:

> "Let me think of forms less, and the external,
> Trust the spirit, as sovereign nature does, to make the form;
> For otherwise, we only imprison spirit, and not embody."

Form is used by the Hebrew poet only as a means to present life and action. If Arnold's principle be true that poetry is a criticism of life and that the greatness of the poet lies in his powerful and beautiful applications to ideas of life—how to live, then the Hebrews wrote genuine poetry. Life and action characterize all their poetry. Dean Church said: "The Vedic hymns are dead remains, known in their real spirit and meaning to few students. The Psalms are as much alive to-day as when they were written. They were composed in an age at least as immature as that of the singers of the Veda, but they are now what they have been for centuries, the very life of spiritual religion—they suit the needs they express, as nothing else can express, the deepest religious truths, ideals of "the foremost in the files of time."

The form of Hebrew poetry is rather obscure, yet John Milton, that master of lyric poetry, said: "Not in their divine argument alone, but in the very critical art of composition, the Psalms may be easily made to appear over all kinds of lyric poetry, incomparable." Meter, as we understand it, was unknown to the Hebrews. They used a method of parallelism or balanced structure. Herder describes it "the systole and diastole of heart and breath." Phrase is set over against phrase, clause against clause, verse against verse, thought against thought. We may call it thought-rhyme. This was learned from nature in the rise and fall of the fountain, the ebb and flow of the tide, the sound followed by its echo. It is much like the heaving and sinking of the troubled heart. The Hebrew poets having the noblest truths to express, went to nature to learn the art of expression. Great things engrossed the Hebrew mind. Impressively did he express because so naturally. To illustrate see in Ps. 35:5, 6:

> "Oh Jehovah, thy love is in the heavens,
> Thy faithfulness reacheth unto the skies,
> Thy righteousness is like the mountain of God,
> Thy judgments are a great deep."

The great things that absorb his mind are Jehovah, his faithfulness, his righteousness and his judgments. To express them he simply points the beholder to the four greatest things in nature, i. e., the heavens, the skies, the mountains, the great deep. No coloring is needed. Adjectives add nothing to nature which all can see for themselves. The environment of Israel was highly favorable for the treatment of nature in religious poetry. First of all they were not far distant from their primitive religious life. And the worship of nature is the root of the world's religion. The impressions that nature made upon the primitive mind developed the belief in spirits and thus came conceptions of religion. The song was but worship; it was the response of the inner to the external. Jupiter is simply the sky, Helios, the sun, Selene, the moon. Jahve to the primitive Semites was no doubt the God of the most powerful tribe, and undoubtedly a nature God, connected with storms and thunder and having his seat at Mount Sinai. Yet the Hebrews early, before they put their literature into permanent form, saw their God beyond nature. In this fact rests the power of the Psalms over the Vedic Hymns, the Zenda Vesta and other primitive poetry. Thus the Hebrews came up from nature to nature's God; from the visible to the invisible. The heavens ever remained a pleasing field for their contemplations. Thy gazed into them when they would satisfy that craving for worship and found the character of Jahve. Like the heavens he was unchangeable, bright, pure, silent and far off. If at times he hid his face behind a storm cloud, it was no fault of the heavens. The cloud was of earth and swept between. If at first they failed to grasp his true character, it was because they lacked development. Thus they left to others an open field for development of insight.

Still helpful to create a fine sense of nature was their land of Palestine. Not all beauty, but just enough to give a longing desire for the beautiful as it rested a polished gem among the rough. They lived under the oriental sky. They, too, had been shepherds and had passed over into agriculturists. Palestine had all the variedness of climate, of sunshine and cloud, of barren hills and fertile valley; it possessed all that ruggedness and change which play upon the poet's emotions.

Then, too, their exile was a powerful factor in making them feel the beauty of the home-land. Home never seems so dear as when one is exiled. Dante could sing when he remembered his beloved Florence. Israel had refused to sing and hung up her harps on the willows along Babylon's streams. But the harps refused to hang. Both nature and life were monotonous in exile. As her poets remembered the home-land of varied beauty, Israel's sweetest songs burst forth! Not alone did her history but her natural environment with all its vicissitudes conspired to give to the world the sweetest heart-songs ever sung.

The Epidemic of Backsliding

By William Durban

Prelude.

"Keswick" has come and gone. To a vast number of people "Keswick" has come to be a term of theologic symbolism. Mr. Albert Head, the chairman of the great gathering in our romantic Westmoreland Lakeland, when speaking in one of the tents, expressed his deep regret that "Keswick" had become a technical term. That is a fact. For to be in sympathy with this annual Keswick conclave is indicative of a certain ultra-Evangelical trend of mind, looked on by the majority of the churches as narrow, Puritanic and exclusive. But it is nevertheless remarkable how profoundly impressed with a sense of intense spirituality are all who attend Keswick. Many people who go with a strong tincture of prejudice find this speedily eliminated. The idea of narrowness is forgotten. The atmosphere is purely Biblical. And there is truly something in Keswick, with its 6,000 earnest souls attending meetings for a whole week, that defies criticism and answers to the deepest need of Christian hearts.

The Contemporary Apostasy.

There is heard just now in many quarters a lament which suggests that the deepening of individual Christian life, and the consolidation of Christian character is one of the chief needs of the times. And this quickening and deepening of spiritual life all who know the Keswick convention just alluded to well understand as being the main aim of that institution.

"We are witnessing an epidemic of backsliding," was the melancholy statement of a popular preacher in a recent meeting in London. I fear that facts are only too seriously in accord with this sad declaration. All through my own long ministry I can not remember a single great revival which was not followed by much disappointment. No preacher could ever have been more enthusiastically sympathetic with revivalists than I have always been and am at this hour. Such workers are supremely needed. They command an indispensable function. Often they fulfill it nobly. I do not believe in "the passing of the evangelist," so very cleverly descanted on at times by certain writers. But I have noted constant records of the sweeping and wonderful results immediately following evangelistic campaigns. I have never through the years of my experience seen any record of the numbers of converts who have quickly tumbled into the world. Now, what is the use of converts who make a conspicuous confession only to be hurled back by Satan into the vile pit of worldliness from which they suddenly sprang?

Candid Congregationalists.

I note that this bitter cry from ministers and leaders of religious thought and work is being most loudly and emphatically echoed by certain excellent Congregationalists at the present juncture. I have at times heard it from Methodists and Presbyterians. I am bound to say that less is heard from Baptists concerning grievous and numerous cases of backsliding. Also, there seems to be in proportion less of this lamentable kind of easy apostasy amongst our own people, the Disciples of Christ. Of course Baptists and Disciples are by no means unfamiliar with the evil and with the disappointment experienced in consequence. I can not help inquiring why amongst pedobaptists the facile and fatal backsliding should be specially rife. I do not think the answer is difficult to formulate. It was recently supplied very succinctly by a Congregational minister when he bluntly said, "We lose many converts easily because we gain them so easily." This simple statement is deeply significant and abundantly suggestive.

A Kindly Suggestion.

I have often felt disposed to reason out certain considerations with my pedobaptist friends, who, I am glad to say, are not few. On some occasions I have been indulged by their forbearance and their patience, when I have tried to dwell with them on the chief point involved in the exceeding facility of entrance into any church where the ancient mode of admission into Christian fellowship has been modified. Without doubt there has been in modern days a general tendency to make it easier and easier for any professing Christian to become incorporated with the visible and local church. And modern revivalism of the feverish and most popular type knocks down all barriers whatever. The rushing "pacemaking" of certain evangelists sweeps so-called converts into the fellowship in hundreds. There are many revivalists who despise units, although the Holy Spirit saves us all one by one. They even look with contempt on batches of a dozen or a score, and are unhappy or ashamed if they can not score success by recording hundreds of conversions every season. I have never forgotten how my old friend in Liverpool, the sainted W. P. Lockhart, said some months after a great revival campaign in that city, "We had a wonderful number of additions, but we have been turning out squads of those converts every month since Mr. A. B. brought them in." And yet the evangelist to whom he referred was one with whose name all England and all America was still ringing. May we not imagine that large numbers of the "converts" went back easily because they were brought in easily?

A Point of Philosophy.

Christianity is beautifully and profoundly philosophic. And I have long felt that its divinely metaphysical character is nowhere more conspicuously evidenced than in its ordinances, when we accept them in their original purity. The church of God was never intended to be open like a bleak wilderness. It is the garden of the Lord. It is a refuge for the wanderer. It is a shelter from the blast. But surely when we strip the fold of all fences, when we remove the protecting barriers from the harbor, when we take the door of the home from its hinges, when we fling down the gate of the garden, we then simply turn all into open desert, we let in the storm, we invite the wolf or the pirate, and we have improved all protection, privilege and special provision out of existence. The ordinances as instituted by Jesus and reverently practiced in the apostolic churches were simple indeed, but their meaning was manifold and their purpose was far-reaching. They have largely become misunderstood as to their original significance. When these institutions are rightly practiced they explain themselves, and they impart a

THE WAY OUT.

Change of Food Brought Success and Happiness.

An ambitious but delicate girl, after failing to go through school on account of nervousness and hysteria, found in Grape-Nuts the only thing that seemed to build her up and furnish her the peace of health.

"From infancy," she says, "I have not been strong. Being ambitious to learn at any cost, I finally got to the high school, but soon had to abandon my studies on account of nervous prostration and hysteria.

"My food did not agree with me, I grew thin and despondent. I could not enjoy the simplest social affair for I suffered constantly from nervousness in spite of all sorts of medicines.

"This wretched condition continued until I was 25, when I became interested in the letters of those who had cases like mine and who were being cured by eating Grape-Nuts.

"I had little faith but procured a box and after the first dish I experienced a peculiar satisfied feeling that I had never gained from any ordinary food. I slept and rested better that night and in a few days began to grow stronger.

"I had a new feeling of peace and restfulness. In a few weeks, to my great joy, the headaches and nervousness left me and life became bright and hopeful. I resumed my studies and later taught ten months with ease—of course using Grape-Nuts every day. It is now four years since I began to use Grape-Nuts. I am the mistress of a happy home and the old weakness has never returned." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

mingled dignity, majesty, solemnity, power and sweetness to the Christian religion. The popular modes of admitting converts to the churches involve so much trifling with the original institution that many go on to trifle the whole system away soon after they have cooled down. They are subjects of the religion of excitement, rather than of the excitement of religion. The great plea of the Disciples of Christ is bound as time goes on to meet with an increasingly kind and favorable consideration from other Christians. Gradually these will come to see that one great cause of the epidemic of backsliding lies in the too easy methods of sweeping recruits into the army. There surely would be fewer deserters were the initiation more serious. What after all is there to instill reverence in connection with the popular style of becoming a professed Christian? We should respectfully urge this question on our fellow-Christians in season and out of season, for it is concerned with vital issues.

Modern Religious Persecution---A Defense

By B. L. Chase

10. Deadly Heresies; Federation.

Closely connected with the recognition of other religious bodies as churches of Christ is another deadly heresy which now threatens to entrap a large part of the Disciples. It is federation. The one is the principle of which the other is the practice. Our wisest persecutors and keenest observers have recognized the scheme of federation as a trick on the part of the sects to prolong their life. They see that Christian union is coming just as the Disciples have preached it and planned it; which would mean their unconditional surrender to our position. They see that if union comes they will have to give up their creeds, their organizations and their names, and be absorbed as a part of the Disciples. They have simply got scared, and a clever group of their leaders got together in New York to devise ways and means for preventing the Disciples from carrying out their plan.

They saw how humiliating it would be for them to have to come on their knees begging the Disciples to allow them to take the right name, the right interpretation of Acts 2:38, and the right system of church organization. How humbling for them to have to say to the Disciples: "You are right and always have been; we are wrong and always have been. The whole Christian world has walked in darkness until the Disciples appeared, bringing a great light. None of the millions of Christians who have lived before the appearance of the Disciples had the perfect light—neither the Fathers, nor the martyrs, nor the theologians, nor the Reformers; neither Anselm, nor Aquinas, nor Wyclif, nor Luther, nor Cranmer, nor Wesley; for none of these could answer the question, 'What must I do to be saved?'" In order to save themselves this humiliating confession and submission, they invented this federation trap, by which they hoped to lure the Disciples off the track of sectarianism and prevent the union of all Christians. They wanted to perpetuate their names—Lutheran, Wesleyan, Presbyterian, etc. How would it make Luther and Wesley and Calvin and other great denomination builders feel to awake on the morning of resurrection and find none but Disciples of Christ who write their name with a little d!

They come now offering to work with us on the plan that each be left free to preach the Gospel as he understands it, and plant churches wherever there is room for one. No loyal Disciple will ever fall into this trap. It means that we will have to let the Methodists preach their doctrine and establish churches wherever they want to—the very thing we have come into the world to prevent. If we are right, the Methodists are wrong; if they are wrong, we should not eat or sleep until we have destroyed them root and branch. We ought to curse them in season and out of season, ridicule their teaching, and steal their members. We ought to refuse to have anything to do with the sects until they accept "our position"—until they accept our name, "Disciples of Christ," and write it with a little d, and preach our interpretation of Acts 2:38. It would be useless for them to try to work harmoniously with us, much less unite with us, until they agreed with our persecutors, who have determined that Moses wrote all the Pentateuch, that Isaiah wrote all the book of Isaiah, that Daniel was written before the Maccabean period, that the whale actually swallowed Jonah, that the name "Disciple" should be written with a little d, and that no preacher should call himself "pastor." Any man who can not compress his faith in the foregoing articles of faith should not come among the Disciples who write their name with a little d; for until he can accept these great essential truths, our persecutors will treat him as a "destructive critic," "an infidel," and "an alien."

We should have nothing to do with the sects until they come to the Disciples and say: "We will do whatever you want us to do; we will believe all you teach, and practice all you suggest. We will turn over our organizations for you to destroy or remodel as you may choose." Not until they do this can we federate with them, any more than light can federate with darkness, or truth with error. Any other federation would be treason. It is the other kind of federation that has captivated the most of our leading heretics and traitors. All the worst and most dangerous elements among the Disciples have gone into it—all but two editors—the "leading men" of our city churches, the college presidents and professors, the convention speakers and the prophets of the new era. But the "rank and file" are against it—those who subscribe for the newspapers, boom the subscription lists in the churches, plead for "sound" Sunday-school supplies, hate the denominations, persecute the critics, and preach the "old Jerusalem Gospel."

The sects have been looking up the statistics of our growth; they have been watching the reports of our evangelists for the numbers of persons added "from the sects"; they see that if we keep on getting their members and growing faster than any religious body, in about one

FAMILY RUNT

Kansas Man Says Coffee Made Him That.

"Coffee has been used in our family of eleven—father, mother, five sons and four daughters—for thirty years; I am the eldest of the boys and have always been considered the runt of the family and a coffee toper.

"I continued to drink it for years until I grew to be a man, and then I found I had stomach trouble, nervous headaches, poor circulation, was unable to do a full day's work, took medicine for this, that, and the other thing, without the least benefit. In fact I only weighed 116 when I was 28.

"Then I changed from coffee to Postum, being the first one in our family to do so. I noticed, as did the rest of the family, that I was surely gaining strength and flesh. Shortly after I was visiting my cousin, who said, 'You look so much better—you're getting fat.'

"At breakfast his wife passed me a large-sized cup of coffee, as she knew I was always such a coffee drinker, but I said 'No, thank you.'

"'What!' said my cousin, 'you quit coffee? What do you drink?'

"'Postum,' I said, 'or water, and I am well.' They did not know what Postum was, but my cousin had stomach trouble and could not sleep at night from drinking a large cup of coffee three times a day. He was glad to learn about Postum but said he never knew coffee hurt any one.

"After understanding my condition and how I got well he knew what to do for himself. He discovered that coffee was the cause of his trouble, as he never used tobacco or anything else of the kind. You should now see the change in him. We both believe that if persons who suffer from coffee drinking would stop and use Postum they could build back to health and happiness." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

billion years our growth will overtake the increase of population on the globe, and then there will be no one on earth but the Disciples. No wonder they are scared and are already looking around for plans to avert the awful catastrophe. They see that we mean business, and that we will wind up the affairs of every ecclesiastical and religious establishment in the resistless onrush of our growth.

The first thing we will do, they see, is to get possession of the government and make it a criminal offense not to subscribe for the official organ of persecution. We will get control of the legislative, judicial and executive branches of our city, county, state and national governments. We would then legalize persecution, and banish those who persisted in writing the name Disciple with a big D; put out the eyes of those who could see two Isaiahs; hang those who disagreed with the persecutors; put in the insane asylum those who preached federation or Christian union after the Disciples had absorbed all other denominations, and any one who said a soul could be saved without immersion would be drowned.

After a universal absorption of the denominations in the home field—after all the sects had either been converted or translated—we would march upon the foreign field and follow the same plan. We would treat the heathen more leniently than the sects, because their light being less their guilt would be less. In lands where we had never sent missionaries the heathen would not know how wicked it would be to write Disciples with a big D, or eat the bodies of their enemies slain in battle. We would first call upon all sectarians to accept "our position," or take the consequences. When we had rid the country of Methodist and Presbyterian missionaries we would then open the jails and pardon every cannibal condemned to death for eating the bodies of Methodist missionaries, and put into his hands a copy of "McGarvey on the Acts." If after twenty-four hours he did not know what to do to be saved, we would give him up as a hopeless case.

In due course of time, with the sword of the Spirit in one hand and the sword of the persecutor in the other hand, we would girdle the earth with our plea, and bring in the glorious unity prayed for by Christ and his apostles. Where would the Methodists and Presbyterians be then? There would not be any. There would be only Disciples of Christ who wrote the word "Disciples" with a little d No wonder the sects fear us and are planning to escape their doom. Every one who accepts federation now and begins to love the sects and regard them as Christian is a traitor. The sects are on the run before us, and if we are only faithful to the plea of the Disciples who write their name with a little d, we will take them, bag and baggage, at six o'clock on the evening of December 31, A. D. 999999999. God speed the time!

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

The anniversaries come next. Buffalo awaits the hosts of our Israel. For every one of our churches and preachers there is a call to prayer for the October meetings. For every one that can go up to the feast there is a special blessing. For every great cause represented in Buffalo there is upon our hearts a burden of solicitude. We should remember in our pulpits and in our prayer-meetings and in our closets these interests of our Lord's kingdom.

The coming conventions mark the high tide in our missionary offerings and work, and of our spiritual development as well. They are not to be a mere aggregation of people, a display of numbers and of material force. God forbid there should be aught of boasting or glorying in our achievements. In the fear of God and in humble thanksgiving for his great grace to us, in the spirit of confession and of consecration, in hungering and hoping and planning for larger things, in prayer, in a sense of our deep unworthiness, and yet of the unspeakable exaltation to which our Lord has brought us, in devout and heartfelt recognition of the fact that it is "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts," and in love and loyalty and lowly reliance upon our God for his blessing, we should come up to our Jerusalem to the annual feast.

For such a season then we should prepare our churches and our hearts religiously. From the pulpit and in the prayer-meeting supplication should be made unto the Lord for his presence and the guidance of his Spirit. Mention should be made of God's goodness to us, of our failures as well as of our successes, and of our sincere desire to be worthy of the great trust imposed in us. Earnest prayer should be offered, not only for our missionaries and their converts, for our givers and helpers, but especially for the multitudes that have no part in the work, for those who oppose themselves, for the many who fail to see clearly their duty to the cause of world-wide evangelization. What a blessed meeting indeed if all our Zion could come up as one man with the prayer: "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven!" What a triumph if this season of rejoicing and reconsecration could witness the thorough union and co-operation in every good word and work of all those who are pleading for the union of all God's people on the basis of New Testament Christianity! I am not so sure but that a day of fasting and prayer should be set apart in the midst of these occasions of rejoicing to invoke the divine favor on all who fail to measure up to their responsibility and privilege. Careful self-examination might reveal the fact that we dare not distinguish between missionary and anti-missionary for we are all guilty before God.

Whatever we make of this October gathering on the lake let it be one of spiritual power. Let every delegate and every visitor see that for him it is a mount of communion and transfiguration. Let prayer be supreme. Let this above all things be our petition: "Father, glorify thyself!" Standing by the grave of Gossner one said of him: "He prayed up the walls of a hospital and the hearts of the nurses; he prayed mission stations into being and missionaries into faith; he prayed open the hearts of the rich and gold from distant lands." We need such praying men. We have not yet learned the relation of prayer to missions. We have not yet heard the significant word of the Master; "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he may send forth laborers into his harvest." To Buffalo then on our knees.

The Jewish Passover, the first and greatest of the three annual feasts instituted by Moses, was "a holy convocation." With devout and humble service Israel assembled to glorify God for their deliverance. In the same spirit let us assemble. Let this be a holy convocation. With one great purpose to glorify God let his people prepare themselves and come to the feast. Let every report, every address, every song breathe the spirit of devotion. Let Christ and him crucified be first with every man and woman who participates in this solemn yet joyous assembly. Let the disciples of the Master show to all the great city that they have been with Jesus and learned of him. In the churches, in the sessions of the convention, in the hotels and on the streets, to all classes, let this spirit be manifest. This is our first great convention in the Empire State, let it be our best, noblest, worthiest.

Our general conventions are our mountain tops of vision, our milestones of progress. We have but to go back a few years and note the advancement. My first convention was in 1874. The meeting was held in Cincinnati and R. M. Bishop was president. My wife and I were entertained at No. 95, corner of College and Seventh, the president's home, over whose front seemed written, "Given to Hospitality." That was the convention that gave birth to the C. W. B. M. It was a great mass meeting. Little work was reported and for all general causes about $6,000 was raised. Thomas Munnell was heroically laying foundations. From $6,000 we have grown to $628,000 in 1905, counting merely the offerings of the foreign and home societies, C. W. B. M. and Church Extension, to say nothing of state missions, Christian Benevolence, Education and Ministerial Relief. What a step forward in less than a third of a century! My next convention was in 1876 at Richmond, where Isaac Errett made his great address on Foreign Missions. This society had been organized the previous year and came in with its report of $1,760. Last year its offering was $255,923. Who shall say this is not a worthy record in three decades? In those days, which are, after all, not far away from every one of us, most of the annual income was secured by persistent appeals at the convention itself and in the Richmond meeting after Errett's masterly presentation of the cause of world-wide evangelization, and one of his unequalled appeals for subscriptions to increase the paltry $1,960, one of our leading preachers took the floor saying: "You have been talking about foreign missions, now let us see what you will do for home missions," and made a tearful and strenuous call for aid for a little mission church in North Carolina! It was a curious jumble of big things and little, the sublime and ridiculous.

The steady march forward and upward is seen and known to all men. And the growth in our general work has inspired all our enterprises and made every state and district organization and every local church stronger and broader and richer in good works. At that time, for example, there was no state organization in Maryland and the District of Columbia. I called a few of our brethren together in convention, and we organized, and have accomplished a great service in this missionary territory, raising thousands of dollars and establishing a score or more of churches. Let us be thankful. We have laid some beautiful foundations, let us go on with the superstructure. There can be no true Christianity without the missionary spirit. Let us be men of one idea and that idea the conversion of the whole world to the Christ.

What the Brethren Are Saying and Doing

By B. B. Tyler

The Very Reverend H. Martyn Hart, D. D., dean of St. John's Cathedral (Protestant Episcopal), Denver, is a character. The dean takes himself seriously, but few others do. He has spells, the dean has. He had one on a recent Sunday. He discoursed, in the Chapter House, on "The Immorality of Colorado." He thinks that Colorado is one of the most immoral of the American states. Colorado is bad—Missouri, Illinois, Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, etc., etc., are worse. The dean has been in pursuit of statistics showing how very, very wicked Colorado and all the states in the North American Republic are. The divorce evil is the greatest of the plague spots in the body politic. There are, the dean says, one-fourth as many divorces in this state as there are marriages. This is a bad showing, on the face of the returns, for the Centennial state.

The dean is an Englishman. He gets his daily news, it is said, from the London "Times." In his discourse, on the Lord's day, he contrasted the morals of the United States with the morals of Great Britain, to the disadvantage, of course; of the Republic. England is bad; the United States is worse. The doom of our experiment in a government of the people, by the people, for the people, is inevitable if we continue to move in the direction in which we are, at present, going, is the decision of this good man. The contention of the dean may be correct. I do not, in this place, join issue with him. Grant that his allegations rest on a bed rock of facts, that they are indisputable. What then? Is this the kind of preaching that will introduce a better order? The huge interrogation point is my reply, for the present.

Here is a letter from another good man, also born on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean, in which he says:

"Can't we get our editors reconciled, and let us all set about preaching the Gospel, which is God's power to save, in dead earnest, and begin to practice Christian union as never before?"

Good! If I were editor of the "Christian Standard" and he were editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, we would be "reconciled," and both papers would be thoroughly Christian. This is the way out of this Wilderness of Sin. Plain as anything can be!

But the editors we now have are not as bad as they might be. There is a bit of comfort in this thought. They are not infallible. Sometimes they seem to think that they are, but, in this opinion, they err. Let us be patient. "All things are working together for good." Even our editors will come out all right!

The suggestion that we "all set about preaching the Gospel" ought to be unanimously adopted, by a rising vote, and reduced to practice without delay. The brother from whom I quote is doing this with wonderful success. As he preaches the Gospel it is the power of God unto salvation." There are ways and ways of preaching the Gospel.

In the above suggestion is found the divine panacea for Dean Hart's troubles, "Preach the word." The Christ is the power of God and the Wisdom of God. Enthrone the Christ in the thoughts, hearts, consciences, lives of men, by a faithful, constant, loving presentation of him to the people, and he will himself right the wrongs which we all lament. Jesus is our example. He did not spend his time in lamentations over the degeneracy of men. What says the record? He went about doing good and preaching the Gospel of the kingdom. He commanded the twelve to do the same when he sent them to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, on a tentative mission, throughout the province of Galilee. When he was on the eve of his departure from earth to heaven he commanded those whom he had carefully trained for this great work to go into all the world and preach the glad tidings to the whole creation. "So they went forth and preached everywhere." Read the sermons in the book of Acts. There are no statistics showing how bad men were. Men were wicked then; men are sinful now. They know it. In their hearts they are conscious of their evil estate. Assume the sinfulness of human nature and preach the Gospel of love, sympathy, courage, hope. Declare the joyful message as the great evangelists have ever told the story of God's love, and men by the score, by the hundred, by the thousand, will pass out of slavery into liberty. Give us a thousand James Smalls in these United States and God alone knows what the glorious result would be.

Jesus "began both to do and to teach." Doing and teaching go hand in hand. Doctrine and deeds; this is the Christian way. It is the Christian way because it was, and is, and ever more will be, Christ's way. Teaching and life are joined together in a holy wedlock. Divine wisdom, grace and authority have united them, and no man may lawfully put them asunder.

The Young Men's Christian Association in Denver owns a health farm. This is an effort on the part of this great organization to apply the teaching of Jesus. The Association Health Farm is a concrete illustration of "applied Christianity." The two-fold object of the Health Farm is (1) to offer "open-air treatment" to consumptive young men sent to Colorado by their home physicians, and unable to afford the privileges of a regular sanitarium, and (2) to provide the most needy of these with employment capable of helping them financially during their stay, and at the same time suited to their physical condition. For information address Mr. W. M. Danner, 1119 Ogden street, Denver, Colo.

About three years ago there appeared from the press of McClure, Phillips & Co. a booklet of 75 pages entitled "Letters from a Chinese Official." These letters set forth in a racy style what claimed to be an eastern view of our western civilization. The same house now gives to the public a volume of 97 pages entitled "Letters to a Chinese Official," by William Jennings Bryan—of whom you may have heard. Mr. Bryan replies definitely and effectively to the Chinese arraignment of our civilization. He contrasts, among other things, Confucianism and Christianity. This booklet ought to be read by those who are afflicted as was Dean Hart last Sunday. Mr. Bryan speaks eloquently of the "growth of Christianity from its beginning on the banks of the Jordan, until to-day, when its converts are baptized in all the rivers of the earth."

"Baptized in all the rivers of the earth" is good for a dyed-in-the-wool Presbyterian as is William Jennings Bryan. His brief account of the progress of the Christian religion is thrillingly interesting. Read these two little books.

What Conventions Are Doing For Me?

By DAVID H. SHIELDS.

Mayor of Salina, Kan.

The mere magnitude of our national conventions has greatly enlarged my view of what God is doing in the world. The earth is never quite the same to a man who has once stood on the summit of the mountains.

The unity of purpose of this vast throng has assured me that the prayer of Jesus shall be answered and that God will finally win. This assurance has sent me back home from time to time girded for fuller service.

The fellowship of these great gatherings has enriched my life. Having met the men who are leading us onward, life is a finer thing since, and the sense of isolation has passed away. If a man attends one of these conventions in the right spirit he will never get the idea that he is the only righteous man left and that they are seeking to kill him.

Why Attend the Convention in Buffalo?

By THOMAS PENN ULLOM.

1. It seems to me to be the duty of every minister to attend our national convention in Buffalo. Here in a very short time the best thoughts and the best ways of doing things by our best men and women will be brought to a focus, so that the impression made upon the delegates is nothing less than reconstructive.

2. A change of environment if for only a few days will give vigor of intellect, sweetness of spirit and recreate the physical organism.

3. The necessity of an annual submergence in such an atmosphere as is generated in our national gatherings is absolute to every one who desires to keep on the front line and out of the rut. Some one has said that a "rut" is the grave with both ends knocked out. I am not ready for it, so I'm going to Buffalo, N. Y.

Minister's Reply.

Quite a time ago a statement appeared in the papers regarding a minister's experience in rebuilding his lost health by correcting his diet, and without drugs.

The original statement is here reprinted followed by some extracts from a letter he wrote to another minister who made inquiry of him.

He Proved the Good Thing and Holds Fast To It.

A young preacher found the change from life on the home farm to the city and college very trying, especially the transition from the wholesome country food to the boarding-house fare. How he solved the food question is interesting.

"I soon came to face a serious problem," he says, "I began to decline in health, grew thin in flesh and weak in body and mind. The doctor diagnosed my trouble as 'indigestion,' but was unable to give me relief. I tried patent medicines with the same result. I was weak and growing weaker, and had no capacity for study. For 4 years I fought a hard battle—fought it poorly, because of my physical and mental condition.

"A Postum Cereal calendar fell into my hands. I hung it over my study table. It bore the inscription 'Brains Repaired' cross the face. I used to lean back and gaze at it when weary with study, till at last it occurred to me that my brains needed repairing. Why not try Grape-Nuts food and see what it would do for me? I acted on the thought, beginning a few months ago.

"Gradually I found that it was making me stronger and better. Then I decided that as Grape-Nuts was helping me I would stop coffee and take on Postum. This I did, and the two are simply working wonders! And while the improvement has been only gradual, it is permanent. I do not gain a little for a few days and then lapse back—I keep what I gain.

"From the use of the two, Grape-Nuts and Postum Coffee, I have acquired a quickened vitality, capacity for harder work, clearer and more energetic mentality and can study better. My flesh has become firm and healthy and to-day I weigh more than for years before. I am a new man. As pastor of the Christian Church I preach Christ from the pulpit and in my pastoral work, as a man among men, I also preach Grape-Nuts and Postum. I have proved them to be good, and am holding fast to them.'" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Rev. ———

Dear Sir and Brother:

"Your letter at hand and contents noted. Yes, a minister's life is very busy, but his duty is to "do good" and no man in real need should be considered by him as a stranger. Therefore I take pleasure in writing you the facts as I know them, in hopes they may be suggestive and place you in a better position to understand my troubles and the blessing derived from Grape-Nuts and Postum, for I honestly believe these were the "black-winged ravens" that brought, or induced the return of the natural activities of the body which condition we call "health."

"Until I was 25 years of age I could and did eat anything I wanted at any time day or night. I entered the "College of the Bible" at Lexington, Ky., and after three months took the measles which settled in my stomach, and in a short time was compelled to give up my work. I re-entered College the next September but bad stomach and hard study kept me torn up. I fought along for over a year taking pepsin, and several other preparations besides medicine from the doctors. I was a sufferer, did poor work and did it at all times in the face of the aggravated condition of my stomach which made me so very nervous. I starved myself, eating very little but soup and this was even painful to me.

"One day a calendar came to my study which was placed over my table and it bore a peculiar message—'Brains Repaired.' Mine were gone and my nerves gone. I doubted whether they could be properly restored. At last my wife urged me or rather sent and purchased two packages under protest (if I remember well). I began eating. I had been drinking coffee but had given that up and was taking water. As coffee was injuring my wife's health I proposed she try Postum which she did to her relief and my surprise. I soon began taking Postum also. I had been eating Grape-Nuts and drinking Postum but a few days until I was feeling better. Even then I did not think of giving Grape-Nuts the credit. I kept eating and still grew stronger in mind, nervous condition improved. I was taking no medicine, working harder, with much more ease and comfort, from the growing sensation in my stomach. Before, I got hungry but dared not eat, now I did not get hungry as before. I finished that year's work (9 months) and came out in far better condition than I begun. September came again, it found me in my place for my fourth and last year. I had missed two-thirds of my first year by measles, now if I finished I must do the fourth year's work and two-thirds of the first. I had discovered my weapons the year before. They were Grape-Nuts and Postum. That year's work was the most satisfactory to me, also to my professors as same told me.

"I did not take Grape-Nuts as a medicine but a natural food. I still keep it up. My wife and two little school girls find in it a nourishing morsel which guards against fatigue. It is our meat.

"I have tried many of the breakfast foods on the market now, as a change, but invariably I flee to Grape-Nuts and Postum as the Old Reliables.

"I am glad you wrote me and I will be pleased to answer any question which I have not made perfectly clear. My praise of Grape-Nuts and Postum is given not in the interest of the Company, but simply my honest conviction of what they have done for me and can do for others. Hoping for your speedy recovery, I am,

Your Bro.,"

Pastor Christian Church.

Ministers owe to themselves and to their noble cause, that they keep "the machine," (the body, which they use to carry out their work), in fine working order, and naturally they feel a certain solicitude for the physical welfare of their people, for the man or woman who is consciously or unconsciously crippling the "beautiful human temple" by the use of harmful food, drink, or drug habits cannot express the intent of the Creator, until those habits are eliminated and the body again assumes its proper condition, the reward comes when a clean soul dwells in a well ordered house. A minister can consistently guide for physical well-being while seeking to influence towards the higher life.

"Why stand ye here all the day idle?" (Matt. 20:6).

1. Why? The vineyard is so large.
2. Why? The Master is so kind.
3. Why? The reward is so liberal.
4. Why? The time for working is so short.—Rev. G. B. F. Hallock, D. D.

Our Budget

—October approaches, and Buffalo looms high above the horizon.

—Send in all the offerings promptly to the various secretaries that they may close their books before the 30th inst.

—After Buffalo, where next? Why not the Jamestown Exposition? The next convention will be invited there, and we hold over till next week a communication from Virginia urging strong reasons why our next convention should be held there.

—In another place will be found an editorial welcome to our new readers who, breaking all records, have continued coming right on through the summer months. Not the least gratifying feature of this increase is the fact that they are coming at our regular price, which means that most of them have come to stay.

—We wish state secretaries and others having convention announcements to make would get them to this office in good time for us to give them such a position as we would like to give them. Frequently they reach us just as we are going to press and it is impossible, under these circumstances, to give anything more than the briefest announcement. News matter should, if possible, be sent as early in the week previous to the appearance of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as possible. We can handle brief telegraph or telephone dispatches as late as the first thing Tuesday morning, but brethren must not expect us to crowd out news already in type for the sake of their communications. We can only get so much type into the paper, and it requires careful thought how to give the just proportion to the different articles and news matter that we receive.

—Our friends can go with us to Buffalo in "THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special" over the Wabash from St. Louis without a change of cars. They may go from Detroit by rail or water, though we advise that they go by rail and return from Buffalo to Detroit by ship. Prompt response will be made from this office to all inquiries concerning transportation and entertainment at the convention city and side trips to Niagara Falls, Toronto and elsewhere.

—A fine new church is nearly completed at Chehalis, Wash.

—A. A. Burr, who has been preaching, has just moved to Eureka, Ill., to attend college.

—J. W. Walters, of Niantic, Ill., has been suffering much from hay fever and asthma.

—We regret to learn that William Irelan has been quite ill for four weeks at Monterey, Mexico.

—Thomas Martin, of California, Pa., is, we regret to learn, confined to his room with a sprained ankle.

—J. M. Monroe has dedicated a church at Apache, Okla., with $582 raised and an indebtedness of $450.

—John G. Cropper has been doing some evangelistic work in Colorado. He writes that he likes the people and the country. His wife is assisting him.

—J. A. Napper, of Earle, S. C., writes that one young man has been ordained to the ministry and three others are in school preparing for the work.

—We regret to learn that owing to the sudden illness of Brother Couch, a good meeting at Tipton, Mo., under the leadership of H. A. Northcutt, had to be abandoned.

—The brethren of Greenridge, Mo., have just paid about all their debt on their new building. This will gratify them and the news will please the brethren in general.

—The church extension offering at Pomona, Cal., where Madison A. Hart recently entered upon the pastorate, was $185, and it is expected that the amount will be raised to at least $200.

—We have received cards announcing the marriage of Alda Louise, daughter of Mrs. Nancy Rowley, of Ashtabula, O., to Mr. Albert Teachout, Jr. We extend our congratulations.

—Herbert Yeuell, now in a meeting at Union City, Tenn., writes that his wife and boy will remain in England until spring when he is to return for a meeting at Cheltenham, Gloucestershire.

—A. E. Dubber has just closed his first year's association with the Tabernacle Church, Fort Worth, Texas. The $6,000 debt has been paid off and 102 additions gained during the regular services.

—The church extension offering of the Woodward Avenue Christian Church, at Detroit, Mich., which is only six months old, and which has sixty members, has reached $180. S. G. Fisher is the minister.

—H. M. Barnett will close his work with the Forest Avenue Church of Kansas City, Mo., next Lord's day, after which he will be ready to hold evangelistic meetings. He may be addressed at 1520 Harrison street.

—N. J. Wright has resigned the pastorate of the First Christian Church, Terrell, Texas, and will remove to Artesia, a pioneer point where there is no church of any kind. He has already helped to organize a Sunday-school there.

—William M. Thomas and C. V. Allison have arranged an exchange of meetings. Brother Allison will begin the first meeting at Frederick Avenue Church, St. Joseph, Mo., October 1, and the Mound City meeting will be held later.

—The work at Valdosta, Ga., is encouraging. A recent Church Extension offering amounted to $52.65 where the apportionment was only $35. Richard W. Wallace is the minister. This church is to entertain the state convention which meets on November 19-22.

—On the occasion of his delivering the address at the laying of the corner-stone of the Odd Fellows' temple at Carlsbad, New Mexico, C. C. Hill preached in the evening at an open air union service, at which all the preachers of the town participated.

—D. D. Boyle, who is now in the ranch country near Cactus, Texas, hopes later on to organize churches at Laredo, Cottula and Pearsall. Brother Boyle expects to be in a meeting during part of October at Watunga, Okla., where Douglass Horton is the efficient pastor.

—Ernest Reed has just located at Agra, Okla., for full time. The church has been lately without any preaching, but is now well filled and a good feeling prevails. An effort is being made to secure the services of Oscar Ingold, Chandler, Okla., to hold a meeting at once.

—T. L. Read and family have removed from South Chicago to Eureka for the purpose of putting their daughter in school there. Brother Read, who has had large experience as an efficient minister, can devote all his time to one or two congregations within one hundred miles of Eureka.

—Clay Center Church, Nebraska, becomes a living link in the Nebraska Christian Missionary Society, and will support E. von Forrell as its evangelist. The $300 necessary were raised in a very few minutes in response to a single appeal. A. D. Smith is the pastor of this church, for which Melvin Putnam is to begin an evangelistic campaign at the end of this month.

FOR TORPID LIVER

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate

It stimulates healthy liver activity, relieves constipation, sick headache and malaria.

—I. H. Fuller writes that this meeting at La Monte, Mo., in which B. F. Hill, of California, is to do the preaching, will begin October 7. Phil Stark is to hold a meeting at Knobnoster, October 14. John Jones, the Pettis county evangelist, will hold a meeting at Dresden some time in the same month.

—We just learn of the resignation of H. R. Trickett at Monroe City, Mo. Brother Trickett is a man of considerable ability and is known to many as the author of "On what are you building, my brother?" and other hymns. We hope he may soon find another field of work suited to his brilliant attainments.

—The congregation at the Antioch church, near Hillsboro, Ind., has experienced a newness of life under the ministry of Elmer Williams, of Crawfordsville. This is the old home congregation of Will H. Newlin, of Jamestown, Ind., where a revival meeting with home forces was begun last Lord's day.

—The Tennessee state convention will be held at Paris, October 1-4. The program arranged is a good one, and while it has nothing that is novel, all the subjects are vital. Among the speakers are State Secretary A. I. Myhr, W. J. Shelburne, W. P. Crouch, J. E. Gorsuch, Robert Stewart and others, including well known national leaders.

—E. J. Fenstermacher, of Poplar Bluff, will assist Frank W. Allen in a meeting at Odessa, Mo., soon. Three hundred copies of The Christian-Evangelist will also bear their silent but resistless testimony each week to the immanence of God in this world and the power of the Gospel to save men from sin.

—Percy Leach has begun his sixth year as pastor in Iowa City, where there are now 405 names on the church roll. A two months' evangelistic campaign has just been inaugurated, at the present time a tent in the country being used. C. C. Morrison will hold a three weeks' meeting about the middle of October.

—The church at Hunter, Okla., sent their minister, W. L. Dalton, and his wife to the convention at El Reno. Upon their return the ladies of the church acknowledged Brother Dalton's birthday with a handsome gold watch. Arrangements are being made for Evangelist Trimble to begin a meeting there November 1.

—H. E. Van Horn will close four years' of work with the church at Osceola, Ia., October 1, and will remove to Des Moines to take charge of the East Side Church. The church at Osceola is one of the best fields in southern Iowa, and a strong man is needed to take oversight of it. Applicants should write R. M. Lewis for information.

Cause of Sick Headache.

Severe attacks of Sick Headache are due to a Torpid, Congested Liver and a Disordered Stomach. No one can enjoy good health when the stomach refuses to do its necessary work. One bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine, a purely vegetable compound, has often brought complete health to persons suffering with the above named symptoms, and in many cases pronounced incurable by some of the best physicians in the country.

A large bottle, usual dollar size, can be obtained at drug stores for 75 cents, but a trial bottle with full instructions will be sent free to every reader of this paper who needs it.

Address your letter or postal card to The Drake Co., Wheeling, W. Va.

—F. M. Rogers writes us that the pulpit at Stewart Street Church, Springfield, Ill., is still vacant. C. C. Morrison will close his pastorate at the First Church next Lord's day. The brethren are hoping to secure two good men for these churches at an early date. Brother Morrison, we believe, will take charge of the Monroe Street Church, Chicago, Ill.

—E. S. Allhands has taken steps towards the organization of an Endeavor society at Arkadelphia, Ark. For some time this church was strongly anti, but Charles A. Allhands, of Pike City, Ark., has been preaching for them for the past two years and has just been called for his third year. With a Sunday-school and a Y. P. S. C. E. organized we may hope for considerable progress.

—James A. Brown, a Warren boy, and recently graduated from Hiram, will be ordained to the ministry at his home church where J. E. Lynn ministers, next Lord's day. He has been doing excellent work at Hartford, Mich. This will be the second of her young men ordained at the Warren church within a little over a year.

—The St. Francois County Christian Church co-operation will hold their annual convention at Libertyville, Mo., October 5, 6. A strong and helpful program is being prepared. Some of the speakers are E. J. Fenstamacher, T. A. Abbott, W. A. Kokendoffer, Mrs. Bantz, Judge G. O. Nations, G. T. McFarland, Edward Owers, George B. Smith and R. O. Rogers.

—Charles M. Fillmore, writing to the office since his return from a brief vacation, says that he is now able to preach twice on Sunday and is slowly improving. He says: "It almost pays to be sick to find how many good, kind people there are in the world. I am more anxious than ever to get well so as to pay back for all I have received." How many of us have had this same experience and this same feeling!

—There was a printer's error in the article by E. S. Muckley entitled "E. L. Frazier's Dilemma." The compositor omitted the word "not" before the word "Christian" in the ninth line from the bottom of page 1137. The clause "who are Christian in character" should have read "who are not Christian in character." We regret the oversight, but feel sure that nearly every one who read Brother Muckley's interesting article understood his meaning.

—"I have found The Christian-Evangelist a very great help," writes Charles Frederick Trimble, who is engaged in a meeting at Ada, I. T. Notwithstanding the unfavorable conditions, success is being achieved. The daily paper of the town has published Brother Trimble's sermons and this, with the wide field he covers with the 300 Christian-Evangelists which he is using is greatly extending his influence for good.

—A brother wishes to know our opinion of one who has been baptized in the Christian Church and who claims to know "that the Christian ministers have a discipline among themselves, and that it is a sworn secret among them to keep it among the ministry." Our opinion is that this brother is very ignorant and needs teaching or else is exceedingly careless about handling the truth and needs the New Testament discipline.

—E. B. Barnes recently preached at the invitation of the minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Noblesville, Ind., on the subject of "Lodges." The three points he emphasized were that lodges are not charitable institutions, that they are hindrances to church progress, and that the lodges will not save the souls of men. The editor of the local paper wrote an editorial on the subject supporting Brother Barnes' position.

Cincinnati, Ohio.

—John Ewers has been asked by a unanimous vote to remain as pastor of the First Christian Church, Youngstown, O., for a period of two years. Brother Ewers has done a good work for this church during a comparatively brief service. He is secretary of the ministerial association. His salary has been increased by $300, and now the church is ready to enter into an aggressive campaign of religious work during the winter.

—The Colorado convention will meet with Central Christian Church, Pueblo, October 2-4. A good program will be presented. All who pay full fare going will be entitled to one-fifth fare returning, provided they take receipt for fare paid to Pueblo and present this receipt to the secretary of the convention. There is no doubt that the necessary number will be secured. Those expecting to attend should advise D. W. Moore, 711 Summit street, Pueblo.

—Clarence Mitchell, of Lima, O., is to be the evangelist who will assist Pastor G. Hubert Steed in the evangelistic meeting at the Second Christian Church at Johnstown, Pa. A large choir under the direction of W. Z. Replogle, a well known singer, will be one of the features of the meeting which the congregation is working to make the most successful in its history. The conclusion of this meeting will mark the completion of a three years' work under the leadership of the present minister, and a splendid advance is being confidently expected.

—In another column is an account of a very enjoyable and helpful conference that was recently held under the auspices of our F. M. C. S., at Cincinnati, and on our front page will be found a portrait group of the missionaries who were present on that occasion. Fourteen of the number are new missionaries who go out this fall. The other ten are missionaries who are at home on furlough. Secretary Stephen A. Corey is one of the figures in the group.

—A new house of worship has just been completed at Ladonia, Texas, where E. V. Spicer and E. M. Douthit have just closed a good meeting with the organization of a Sunday-school in addition to many conversions. We are hopeful that they may be able to secure preaching more than once a month. Hardin Walsh, of Austin, preaches for them at present, and if they can have more of the pastoral care of such a faithful leader, they can accomplish a great deal more.

—The Maryland, District of Columbia, and Delaware convention will be held with the church at Antioch near Vienna, Va., October 1-5. Cars leave the Virginia side of Aqueduct Bridge, Wash., on the Washington, Arlington and Falls Church Electric Railway every hour. A special rate of 40 cents round trip is made for those who have identification slips from their pastors. Seventy-five cents per day is the cost of entertainment. J. A. Dyer, Vienna, Va., has charge of this arrangement. The Antioch church, of which W. T. Laprade is pastor, will welcome you.

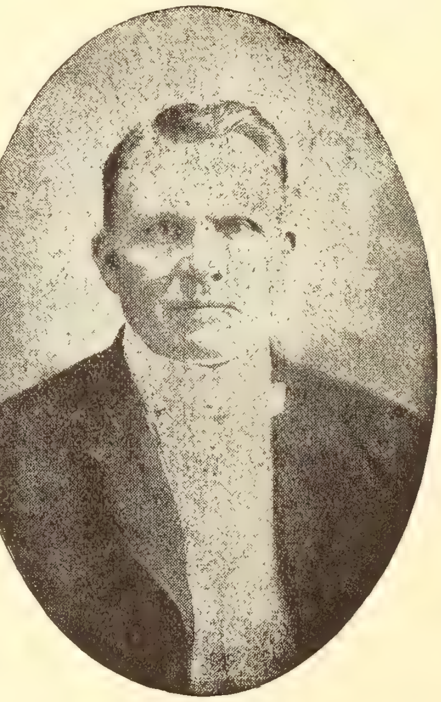
—Miss Carrie May McFarland and Mr. Clyde Everett Handley were recently united in marriage by E. T. McFarland, pastor of the Fourth Christian Church, St. Louis, assisted by C. O. McFarland, state evangelist of Missouri, brothers of the bride, and R. L. Handley, assistant pastor of the First Christian Church, Chicago, brother of the groom. Miss McFarland has, for some years, been associated with our publishing house and The Christian-Evangelist extends its congratulations and well wishes to the young couple.

—E. J. Church, pastor at Seneca, Mo., writes us that the churches of Newton county are moving on to victory. During the past year there has been an increase in membership of about 400. Brother Walters, of Neosho, has fitted that place admirably and has done a fine work. James Miller is starting out with promise at Diamond. The county co-operative meeting will be held at Seneca October 2, 3, and at the same time a meeting is to be begun with the assistance of Brother and Sister O. G. Blackwell, of New Vienna, Ind., as evangelists.

—The Southeast Minnesota missionary convention met last week at Winona. At this writing we have not received any report of the proceedings. Immediately following the convention an evangelistic meeting was begun, M. D. Banner, of Pleasant Grove, and Rochester Irwin, of Rochester, co-operating with the resident pastor, C. B. Osgood. At the close of this meeting a similar effort will be made at Rochester and following that, perhaps, at Pleasant Grove. Minnesota is a great field for missionary effort, and earnest, capable men for this purpose are in demand.

—The Board of Church Extension is just in receipt of an annuity gift of $2,000 from a friend in Illinois. Others should remember Church Extension by annuity gifts during the months of September and October, thus helping us to raise our $100,000 for this year. Up to Wednesday, the 19th, the receipts for September were $1,631.58 ahead of last year's. Remember that offerings should be taken in October if they can not be sent in September. Remittance should be promptly made to George W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Waterworks building, Kansas City, Mo.

—D. Wesley Campbell, who has just been holding a good meeting at Edinburg, Ill., with Pastor D. W. Conner, speaks very highly of that preacher and his wife: "He is deeply in earnest about missions, as he is about everything else. He is well backed up by an excellent membership." In this meeting E. E. Nelms led the music and proved very efficient. Brother Campbell writes that "The Christian-Evangelist has contributed very largely to the general interest. Three hundred copies of The Christian-Evangelist wisely distributed in the homes can not do otherwise than aid the evangelist and pastor in a meeting." Brother Campbell's next meeting will be at Oakland, Ky.



D. WESLEY CAMPBELL.

—We very gladly call attention to a request from V. L. Parker, minister of our church at New Decatur, Ala. He is planning for a meeting this fall. Brother Parker would like to hear from some brother minister who could help the church immediately after the Buffalo convention. The pay would be small but, as he says, God will richly repay any man who will go there and help get the church on its feet, for the possibilities are great and it will be one of the strongest churches in the state in a few years. Anti-ism is very strong there and that, of course, makes it difficult for those who are under the ministrations of Brother Parker to make great progress.

—On Lord's day next F. N. Calvin will complete three years' of service with the Compton Heights Church of St. Louis. During this pastorate the membership has nearly doubled in spite of many removals. The Bible school has increased to an attendance of over 500 and every department is quite thoroughly organized. Perfect harmony exists in the church, and at a meeting of the board of officers Brother Calvin was asked to continue indefinitely, while another increase in his salary was voted. This is the third time the salary has been increased which is, in itself, an evidence of appreciation which the brethren have for the hard, honest work which Brother Calvin has done.

—It is a good report that Frederick Avenue Christian Church, of St. Joseph, Mo., is able to send out. Here William M. Thomas ministers and since he took the work, March 1, twenty-seven working members have been added to the membership at regular services, some $25,000 raised in cash and subscriptions; two young men of the flock, Fred Mehlburg and William Mager, ordained to the ministry and the different departments of the work are developing into great power. Ninety-five per cent of the Endeavorers present at their meetings last month took part, and they propose to lend their pastor all possible aid in a meeting which he is to hold with Cassius V. Johnson, beginning October 1.

—Hon. Samuel J. Salyer, of Houston, Mo., writes: "The two weeks' meeting at the Church of Christ, this place, closed last night. J. D. Lawrence, your living link evangelist, gained and held to the last the interest of the congregation. There were eighteen additions, seven by confession and baptism. The church was set in order, a full board elected, a Bible class reorganized and new life enthused. At the close of the meeting a rising vote of thanks was given the Christian Publishing Company for their interest in us expressed by sending Brother Lawrence to us. The brethren consider it by far the best meeting held there for a number of years." It is deeply gratifying to thus help our weak churches up into places of strength and enlarged usefulness.

—A campaign has just been entered upon by the Belmont Ridge Church of Christ in Belmont county, O. It is hoped that a work on a larger scale than ever before attempted will be accomplished. It is a strictly farming community and in its midst is located one of our strongest country churches, the membership being over 120 with a congregation that tests the capacity of the house which is modern in all its arrangements. There has been some spying out of the land and our brethren desire to go forward and possess it. Many a country church has its problems but we believe that most of these can be solved if the churches would do what the brethren at Belmont Ridge are doing. That is, make an effort to save their neighbors and to get competent outside help if they have not preaching ability within their own ranks. One of the special features of this campaign will be the use of 300 Christian-Evangelists, which are to be placed in every home where it is possible to get them. Ferd. F. Shultz is the pastor evangelist who will conduct this work. He is an enthusiastic Christian leader and a man of the people, and he will be supported by an efficient board of elders and deacons such as Erastus Moore, J. J. Phillipps and Sanford Wright. James J. Phillipps is the superintendent of the Bible school which is a successful one.

Return Via Pentwater.

Several persons who were not permitted to visit "Garrison Park" at Pentwater, Mich., during the summer have expressed a desire to do so this fall, and two or three have indicated their purpose to do so in connection with their trip to the Buffalo Convention. If there are several who wish to return from Buffalo via Pentwater, I shall be glad to make the trip with them and help them select their lots. We can go from Detroit to Pentwater by the Pere Marquette railroad. Those who wish to avail themselves of this opportunity of seeing "Garrison Park" and of securing the lowest prices on lots by selecting them this fall, will oblige me by notifying me at once. J. H. Garrison.

For a Church in New Hampshire.

Previously acknowledged	$958 75
Caroline Greene	2 00
Hon. J. M. McBeath	2 50
E. J. Jeffress	5 00
Total	$968 25

One of the hoped for amenities of the Buffalo convention is the interchange of greetings with our first church in New Hampshire—the new congregation at Manchester. But $232.75 stands between us and the consummation of this hope. Twelve hundred dollars will not only defray the expenses of the great Yeuell meeting, but will leave a small balance to provide emergency expenses incident to the location of the pastor. This will enable us to make over this work free of indebtedness to our National C. W. B. M., who will assume the responsibility for the future of the church. This great organization never fails in its enterprises and their patronage assures the perpetual burning of this new lamp of hope in New England. Will not many follow the good examples of President D. O. Smart, of our Church Extension Board, and L. C. Stow in making a second contribution to this sacred purpose? No other appeal will be made to our readers for the support of this church after this $1,200 is raised. Let all who wish to have first or second fellowship with us in this work of the Lord, respond at once. Let us quickly dispose of this matter aright and pass on to new ministries.

The Last Call.

Heed this call or you are too late for this missionary year. The books of the American Christian Missionary Society close September 30. Our receipts lack a little of being equal to those for a like period last year. However, nine hundred churches which contributed liberally last year have not sent a dollar this year. If they rally to our support in these last few days, we can report at Buffalo the greatest amount of our history. Send the offering at once. Or telegraph us by the night of September 30 the amount you will send the next day. You can help us win a glorious victory. Send all money to the American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. An Educational Enterprise for the Middle Southwest.

At the invitation of the missionary secretaries of the Oklahoma and Indian Territories, and through the co-operation and support of Bro. T. W. Phillips, of New Castle, Pa., I began a tour of the two territories named in the interests of a School for the Disciples of Christ in the middle southwest. I have visited twenty-nine different places and have made thirty-eight addresses. There is but one voice in this matter, and that is in favor of the school. Both conventions have voted unanimously for the school, and an educational board of twelve men was appointed. This board has called be to the presidency of the school, and I have accepted the position. Six or eight different points are competing for the location of the school. October 1 has been appointed as the date when the bids will be canvassed and the location settled upon. Already bids closely approximating $100,000 have been made.

Two principal ideas prevail. Some hold that it will be wisest to plant the school by the side of the state university, where a very liberal offer has been made to us. The university authorities offer us very satisfactory concessions, as to credits, etc., for our work. If we should go there the school will be strictly a Bible college, or Bible university. On the other hand, there are some who are strongly in favor of an independent school similar to the other colleges of our brotherhood, and some very liberal propositions are being made to us for the location of this school. This question will also be decided by the board on October 1. The school will occupy a strategic positon. Four great states and several territories will be immediately tributary to the school, in which we have no school of our brotherhood.

This country is destined to hold a tremendous population in the very near future. The Disciples of Christ are said to be the strongest religious body in Oklahoma, and they rank well up in the Indian Territory. There is, however, one great lack, namely, preachers. Scores, and even hundreds of preachers are wanted for this rapidly developing region. This makes the planting of a Bible college of great importance. If the college is well located, one hundred young men preparing for the ministry will be able to find preaching points within reach of the school, whereby they will be enabled to defray part or all of their school expenses. The board has also decided to have one hundred and sixty acres of land, more or less, close to the school, where earnest young men may assist themselves in defraying expenses by working one or more hours per day.

E. V. ZOLLARS.

ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION.

About 500 choice people have just been to the beautiful city of Paris to consider the work of the Master. They came from every part of the state, from Chicago to Metropolis and from St. Louis to Danville. It was not a meeting to nominate great officers, nor to provide large salaries, but to promote a work sufficiently important that delegates were willing to pay their own way and considerable expenses while there that they might participate in it. And it is doubtful if there is one that regrets his investment. Finis Idleman and his great congregation of 1500 people are a royal host, and right royally did they serve. The $40,000 stone church afforded ample facilities for all purposes.

The C. W. B. M. opened the convention, a report of whose proceedings follows, prepared by Mrs. Lillis Watson Hall.

The session was very successful. The state officers had the work carefully planned. It was a matter of congratulation that the program was carried out exactly as printed.

The convention was fortunate in the presence of Mrs. Moses and Mrs. Atwater of Indianapolis, Mrs. Harrison of Kentucky, and Dr. Mary Longdon of Deoghur, India. Mrs. Atwater gave an address on Monday evening and Dr. Longdon Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. Moses, whose sweet presence was in itself a benediction, closed the convention with a short talk on Harvest Sheaves.

Mrs. Ida W. Harrison presented the Centennial plan. She sketched briefly the events commemorated by the Centennial, explained the plans of the C. W. B. M. and earnestly presented a plea for its success. Following her address the report of the Centennial Committee was presented by Miss Annie E. Davidson and adopted. The Centennial aim is "A Doubled Membership (4,500 new members); a Centennial thank offering of $15,000 by 1909. The committee recommended in part: 1. That every auxiliary appoint a Centennial secretary. 2. That preachers, where we have no auxiliaries, be asked to co-operate with Miss Thompson, the state secretary. 3. That local auxiliaries adopt the suggestions sent out by Miss Thompson, particularly the holding of Centennial rallies. 4. That it be aimed to secure 1,500 new members and $5,000 by September, 1907.

Every report submitted during the convention showed pleasing gains. Miss Davidson, state president; Mrs. Crawford, state treasurer, and Miss Griffin, superintendent of young people's work, had reports showing satisfactory progress in their work. Miss Davidson laid especial emphasis on "Mission Leaves," the state paper of which she is editor. Miss Griffin reported a gain of twenty-three young people's societies. The state banner was presented to the Junior Endeavorers at Armington.

The committee on future work submitted a report full of plans for active future work. The state aim is to be: National, $14,000; state, $2,500; Illinois Special, $4,600, and 2,500 copies of "Missionary Tidings" and "Mission Leaves." Illinois this year will support Mrs. Lohr in India, Miss Westrup in Mexico, Mrs. Burner in South America, Professor Button at Morehead, Ky., and will give $2,000 to Chicago city missions.

Will F. Shaw, of Chicago, delivered the C. W. B. M. sermon, and it was one of the best things of the convention. Much of the effectiveness of the organization comes from the co-operation of pastors, and their sympathy and help is prized. This appreciation of the high aims of these women was never more tenderly or beautifully expressed than in the address by Brother Shaw.

The C. W. B. M. sessions were model in every respect. A great deal of business was accomplished. The women were inspired and impressed by the counsels of our national officers and our noble missionary, Dr. Longdon. The state workers were especially pleased with the interest and enthusiasm shown, The whole convention seemed a prophecy of a fruitful and happy year's work to follow.

The State Missionary Society convention was introduced by a great address by its president, F. W. Burnham, of Decatur, on Tuesday evening. It was a vigorous rallying address to go forward, illustrated by an incident in Israel's life, when God said, "Long enough have ye compassed this mountain, turn ye northward." It was full of instruction and prophetic in hope.

Wednesday morning was the leading business session. Field Secretary J. F. Jones shows that there has been steady progress during the eleven years of his service. The past year, in the 237 churches that reported, there were 4,287 conversions, 2,096 other additions, making a total growth of 6,983 additions. There were 154 meetings held. In the state we have 814 churches, 97,038 members, 711 Bible schools, 62,853 pupils, 360 Endeavor societies, with 11,168 members. Junior societies 113, with 4,150 members. There are 388 ministers. Brother Jones had a busy and fruitful year. There were 58 men who did some state work; they visited 183 churches, in 4,183 days, held 51 meetings, delivered 2,291 sermons, baptized 1,044 people, had 577 other additions, organized six churches, aided 46. The total money raised for missionary purposes was $12,008.81. This truly is a great year's work, but after all there is so much more that ought to be done. "Enlargement" ought to be the word until every church in the state is a partner in this holy fellowship in saving Illinois.

The report of Marion Stevenson, Sunday-school evangelist, was full of interest and help. Schools by the score ought to invite him to spend from one to five days with them in the interest of the Sunday-school. Write him at Bloomington about it. He gave three fine courses of lectures to the students in Eureka college last session and is engaged to deliver others during the present session.

The society is fortunate in having such an office secretary as W. D. Deweese. His report shows care and economy. It was a matter of universal regret to lose P. Whitmer, of Bloomington, from the board, and especially from the committee on the permanent fund which now amounts to $24,634.42. He really has handled this fund from the beginning. His place was filled by J. P. Darst, of Peoria. A resolution of gratitude for Brother Whitmer's valuable services was gladly passed.

J. P. Darst presented the treasurer's report, also the report on the permanent fund, as above. Also the student's aid fund report, showing that $635 were used by students last year, with a balance to begin with this year, $287.82. The entire fund contains about $6,000 and is loaned to worthy needy young men preparing for the ministry.

The addresses of the convention were of a very superior character. The speakers seemed to feel that to them was committed a duty and trust to put their best thought and plenty of time to solve the hard problems involved in their themes. The addresses had the clear tone of faith in God, in Christ, in the Scriptures and that it is our particular business to preach Christ, preach the Word, in order to save men.

R. F. Thrapp, of Jacksonville, discussed the "Relation of Church and Pastor." There was a straighforward directness in his treatment that lent power and conviction. The lack of heart to heart fellowship, sympathy, love and co-operation, he said, often destroys the usefulness of both. These delicate relations were clearly set forth.

Prof. B. J. Radford, senior teacher in Eureka college, gave the convention address. He was happy in the association with such men as R. F. Thrapp, F. W. Burnham, Finis Idleman, S. E. Fisher and a score of others, his former students, but now leading ministers of great power in the state. Few teachers, if any other among us, have such power to awaken and inspire great and noble purposes in young men as Professor Radford. The main thought of his subject was, exalt Christ and you will fulfill your mission.

S. S. Lappin, of Stanford, stirred the audience by a strong address on "Responsibility to the Unfed." A few of his thoughts were: "The soul wants God; to know him is our deepest need; the people need the gospel; the church has it in charge; 'give ye them to eat'; the message of Christ, of Paul, is the bread of life; we injure this message when we attempt to restate its essentials to human reason, when we make it a message apart from life. Any one who hinders the message is responsible for the unfed. We hinder it when we make it hard to be understood, when we misapply truth, by unattractive delivery. Those that hold the message are responsible for its delivery."

A. McLean presented foreign missions as only such a master can. He is always received with enthusiasm by Illinois people and the cause which he represents receives our largest offerings.

J. Fred Jones gave a comprehensive address on state missions. "There is much land yet to be possessed, even in Illinois. Out from this state are constantly going a great stream of Christian emigration, including both preachers and people. These local losses must be made good, or the outflow will fail. Much of the state is unevangelized. Many cities are without the influence and power of the primitive church. When "Illinois Day" comes on November 12, let every church be in line for a great offering.

S. S. Jones and Marion Stevenson gave excellent addresses on the Sunday-school. This department of our work, so radical and potent, needs to be greatly improved. It deserves more attention, more talent, more work.

A. J. Elliott, of Peoria, gave a thoughtful address on "Church Goals."

G. W. Muckley, the master of Church Extension, gave a great address, as he always does, on that great work. W. J. Wright, new secretary of the American Home Missionary Board, appeared, for the first time in our state convention. He was most cordially received and we were all well satisfied that he is the right man in the right place. His address gave us a vision of the United States as our great field from which are to go the workers of the world's life. We are well established in the center, but the borders all around us, including thousands of foreign populations and negroes are yet to be evangelized.

The Illinois Christian Educational Association had a place on the program, but want of space requires us to defer its splendid report until next week.

The address of Chas. Reign Scoville on "An Evangelistic Meeting: Its Plans, Purposes and Power," closed the largest state convention that we have held since leaving Eureka and the encampment feature. Every man who holds meetings ought to have heard this master in this great address.

DeLoss Smith was in the convention most of the time, and greatly added to the value and pleasure of the convention in his

Oklahoma's Fifteenth and History Making Convention

The last convention, which met at El Reno, was marked as the largest in attendance and interest ever held in this great territory. By the close of the first session the railroad secretary, Isom Roberts, could turn back certificates, although the regulations forbid any minister using any certificate. This shows the large attendance of business men and women. It indicates the attendance of C. W. B. M., Bible school, Christian Endeavor and other workers.

Another great feature was the music of the convention, under the direction of Prof. C. M. Bliss, of El Reno. People from the east, and secretaries from Indianapolis, Cincinnati, St. Louis, and Kansas City, as well as religious newspaper men, pronounced it as high grade as they had ever heard in any convention. One secretary said it was the best he had heard since he left Boston.

Still another feature to be commended, was the fact that every session began promptly on time, and outside the noted brethren from without the territory, each speaker was true to his time allotted on the program.

It was a historic convention in the work of helping to unite the two missionary organizations of Indian Territory and Oklahoma into one organization to begin its new life with next year; and in launching a college enterprise to be worked out at once.

The first session began at 2:30 p. m., on Monday, September 3. "Our Centennial" was discussed by J. M. Morris, of Perkins, as leader, W. P. Maupin, of Hennessey, C. M. Barnes, of Lawton, K. C. Ventrees, of Guthrie, and a number of other brethren from all parts of the territory. The social feature of this first session was good and beneficial to all, since each convention in this new southwest brings so many new faces to get acquainted with.

W. F. Turner, of Joplin, Mo., spoke for foreign missions. He had a trying position to fill when speaking as the representative of A. McLean on the subject of world-wide evangelism. We can express nothing better than to say, he gave entire satisfaction. His plea was spiritual and stimulating intellectually. His heart is big, with a sympathy for lost humanity.

J. H. Mohorter also made his initial appearance as the new secretary of benevolence. His plea for this work of applied Christianity was ably presented, and established confidence in the minds of all Oklahoma in the ability of Brother Mohorter to successfully carry on the work so well begun by his successful predecessor, G. L. Snively. A. J. Bush, of Dallas, Texas, was also present as a representative of this vitally essential work of the church.

Hon. Dick T. Morgan delivered his fourteenth annual address as president on Tuesday morning. He predicted that the new state of Oklahoma would have 100,000 Disciples by 1916, or in the next ten years. And the convention accepted this as a commonplace matter, sure of fulfillment, in the course of coming events. The committees were duly appointed after this address. Scott Anderson, of Enid, became chairman of the nominating committee; W. B. Young, of resolutions, and K. C. Ventrees, of ways and means.

The next period attracted close attention since it was to discuss the possibilities of the union of Indian Territory and Oklahoma into one organization in the one state soon to be. For a number of years these have been separated. Each had its history and its ties of work that were dear to each. S. R. Hawkins, corresponding secretary of Indianapolis, spoke in a candid, direct manner on "How to Unite the Two Territories," Brother Hawkins pointed out some of the difficulties that stood in the way of union. J. B. Boen, of Chickasha, I. T., followed in the discussion. His was an enthusiastic speech in favor of union. At the close of the discussion a committee of five, consisting of O. L. Smith, J. M. Monroe, Isom Roberts, W. F. Ross and Ed. S. McKinney, was appointed to meet a like committee from Indian Territory, to treat diplomatically on the question. The Indian Territory committee consisted of S. R. Hawkins, Randolph Cook, G. H. Farley, C. R. Sadler and another brother who did not attend nor send a proxy for another to act in his place. After meetings had been held and plans discussed it was finally agreed that each territory should continnue as now constituted, until next convention time, when each organization should go out of existence, and in a joint convention a new organization should be formed. To provide for the next convention, it was agreed that three members from each territorial board should be appointed by each to prepare and submit a constitution and by-laws, and prepare a program for the joint convention. All this was duly signed, and the protocol of religious treaty passed into history.

W. J. Wright addressed the convention on the "Home Mission Problem." It was a great address which reached the hearts of the delegates. We learned to honor his judgment and prize his ability. We believe him to be a man of great sympathy, and a general of no mean ability.

Prof. E. V. Zollars spoke on "Ministerial Training." It became a plea for more ministers, and the means to supply them, which must be found in more schools of our own people. He declared we had passed through the periods of agitation and organization. We are now compelled, by reason of our success, to enter upon an era of education.

The C. W. B. M. session on Tuesday afternoon was another epoch-making session. Mrs. W. W. Storms, of Oklahoma City, presided with dignity and carried on the work with method and dispatch. The reports of Mrs. M. A. Lucy, corresponding secretary, and C. S. Kennedy, superintendent young people's work, showed a year of steady advancement.

Mrs. Alice Starry, the treasurer, showed a growing condition in the C. W. B. M. finance. Strong papers on various lines of the work were presented by Mrs. W. B. Young, of Granton; Mrs. Ella Bass, of Lawton, Mrs. A. P. Aten, of Oklahoma City, and Mrs. W. H. Downs, of Luther. Any of these papers would have been well received in any convention. They were well prepared, and each handled her subject in a strong and invigorating manner. Mrs. Bass proved to be a poetess, whose bright wit attracted close attention. The presence in the convention and the evening address of Mrs. Atwater added much to the spirit and enthusiasm of the C. W. B. M. session.

The Tuesday evening audience was large, and the evening exceedingly warm for this country, yet G. W. Muckley came on with his perpetual story of church extension, with some new features thrown in, and held the large audience with a rapt attention. He called forth laughter and applause. He made friends for his worthy cause. Oklahoma owes much to church extension. She is in duty bound to respond to her appeals.

This was also the evening of excursion announcements to Buffalo and other special interests that desired to present their interests in personal interviews.

Wednesday morning was devoted to Oklahoma missions. J. M. Monroe submitted a report that was large with facts and figures. We now have 408 congregations in Oklahoma alone, with 26,000 brethren. Over 200 of these are housed in their own buildings; 41 new buildings have been built this year. Six field workers have been kept busy during the past year. Five of these were sustained by the living link plan. These were sustained as follows: I. W. Cameron in Northeast Oklahoma and C. M. Barnes in Southeast Oklahoma by the C. W. B. M.; Geo. T. Thomas and C. F. Trimble by the El Reno and Guthrie churches, and Brother Smedley by Brother and Sister J. M. Monroe. During the year a brother from Bellaire, Ohio, supported an evangelist and during the latter period Brother and Sister Beach were supported by this fund. Also the Christian Publishing Company supported a man in Northwest Oklahoma a part of the year. All this will be continued, and the Oklahoma city church and Brother and Sister W. A. Wright came up to add themselves to the living link list for Oklahoma missions. Each of the workers present at the convention spoke during this session. These were Cameron, Beach, Trimble Barnes and W. B. Young for Woods county. The secretary's report will be printed and distributed.

The afternoon session was devoted to the Bible school interests. Brother H. S. Gilliam, our new superintendent, and wife, were the leading spirits in this session, which was practical and stimulating. Especial help was given this session by H. F. Davis, of Missouri; William Rogers, general secreatry for Oklahoma, and Brother Dowes, of Muskogee, I. T.; R. E. McKorkle, of Norman; D. F. Solliday, of Oklahoma City; Mrs. C F. Pefley, of Oklahoma City, and Oscar Ingold, of Chandler, took part in this session with prepared addresses. Steps were taken leading to a state Bible school organization. Prof. C. M. Bliss, of El Reno, was elected president, and H. S. Gilliam, secretary.

The evening session attracted intense interest on account of the report of the standing committee on education. Brother Gilliam delivered the Bible school address. He clearly showed this work to be the church carrying out its teaching function. He spoke with earnestness. Brother Gilliam grew in the estimation of the brotherhood during the entire convention. The educational committee now reported through W. A. Humphrey, of Guthrie, a set of three resolutions which favored the launching of an educational enterprise at this time, and recommending that six trustees be elected to act with a like number already appointed from Indian Territory. This was carried and Dick T. Morgan, W. A. Humphrey, J. M. Monroe, O. L. Smith, Ed Johnson and C. M. Jackman were then duly elected as the educational board for Oklahoma. Prof. E. V. Zollars again addressed the convention on "Christianity and Education." The nominating committtee also reported at the evening session, and Dick T. Morgan was again elected president; W. A. Humphrey, vice-president; G. W. McQuiddy, secretary;

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Bible School Matters in Missouri.

The Union State Sunday-school Convention at Sedalia, Sept. 28-30, was thought to be one of the best held in recent years. A number of leading instructors and platform speakers, from this and other states, were present and addressed the people. Strong ground was taken on the subject of the Bible in the public schools, on the temperance question and other reforms. State Secretary Lacey made a splendid report and the convention laid out liberal plans for the current year. The writer delivered two addresses.——The Lewis County Convention was held at Williamstown, and the long distance from any railroad prevented as large an attendance as would otherwise have been present, but there were many people and most, if not all, of the churches were represented. It had been 17 years since the writer had spoken at Williamstown and yet found one brother who remembered the occasion and the text of the sermon. It was a great pleasure to meet with the friends of the Lord in dear old Lewis, in which county we fought such a strenuous battle for Christian education and for local option in the days long ago. We had the pleasure of shaking hands with a number of friends on the streets and at the station in Canton as we were passing through. Professors in Christian University and other friends of the institution assured us of the bright prospects of the college for this year.——The convention of Sullivan and Putnam counties, held at Green City, was largely attended and a splendid success in every way. The state superintendent arrived in time to make an address on state missions, representing T. A. Abbott, who was prevented from being present by other engagements, and the following day he delivered an address on the state Bible school work before a large and sympathetic audience. The plan of uniting these two counties in one organization for co-operative purposes is proving a good one. It might be a good plan for other counties which lie favorably in point of railroads, etc., to unite in co-operative work, if it is impracticable for either county to work alone. Try it.——Sunday morning, Sept. 16, found the writer at the Sunday-school of the Union avenue church of St. Louis. It was rally day with J. J. Searcy and his large school, and they were using it for all it was worth for the reorganization of the work for the coming fall and winter. There were 531 present at Sunday-school. The report showed only ten per cent of adult church members present at the school. Union Avenue is not behind other churches in this regard. The fact is mentioned, not as a criticism, but to show that here is yet a large work for us to do to enlist all those in the church who ought to be in the Bible studying service. Minister J. M. Philputt preached an interesting and instructive sermon on the study of the Bible. The purpose of this visit to St. Louis was to be present to make an address at a meeting of the Officers' and Teachers' Union of Greater St. Louis, at the Hamilton Avenue Church, an account of which has appeared in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The reports were tabulated before the audience on a large sheet and this tabulation will be published for wide circulation.——Sunday afternoon, September 16, there was held in the First Christian Church a meeting of the Officers' and Teachers' Union of Greater Kansas City, which was addressed by Howard C. Rash, of Salina, Kan. These city unions, such as the ones alluded to above, in St. Louis, and the one that met the same afternoon in Kansas City, are proving splendid centers around which organization for better things will soon be gathered. The state superintendent goes to St. Joseph after the National Convention to visit all of the schols and churches of that city, and hopes to organize an Officers' and Teachers' Union there. Good reports come to the office from the union formed in Springfield in June and it is hoped the workers there will keep it alive and going. There has been altogether too little co-operation among our churches in our cities. These organizations of our Bible school workers will prove of great help to our groups of city churches in all lines of effort.——The services of Mrs. Buxton, our state primary superintendent, are being called for from different directions and the prospects are that she will be kept as busy as the time for which we can compensate her will allow.——Let every Missouri Bible school prepare to send in the second quarterly installment of all pledges and apportionments promptly, as the second quarter falls due October 1. Do not neglect this.

Watch out for Children's Day for home missions to be observed by our Bible schools everywhere on November 25. Send to W. J. Wright, corresponding secretary, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O., for a delightful exercise, collection blanks, and other necessary literature for the proper recognition of the day.

For all matters concerning Missouri Bible school work, address, J. H. HARDIN.

Southern California.

The August convention left as its heritage an unusual amount of work to undertake. Though the secretary had been granted a short vacation, the board was obliged to call it off, and send him immediately into the field. The record of his labors appears in part in these notes: A visit to the Ventura-Oxnard field indicates plainly how well the new pastor, Dan Trundle, formerly of Bisbee, Ariz., is getting things into hand. He lives at Ventura and serves both that church and the one at Oxnard, ten miles distant. This is one of our hardest fields. We have arranged for a more permanent ministry there. Our brethren are greatly encouraged in both places. The arrangement with Brother Trundle is such that the Church Extension debt at Oxnard will be whittled down by regular monthly payments. We have no more loyal people anywhere than in this difficult field.——Oscar Sweeney, of Nebraska, has been called to take charge of the work in Rialto and Colton. This is another joint pastorate. The work at Rialto is especially bright with promise. They are expecting to build this fall. The Colton situation is somewhat discouraging. For divers reasons "the bottom seems to have dropped out" of things there. Many have moved away. The heat of the summer and the absence of a pastor did the rest. Negotiations had been nearly affected whereby our property was to pass to other hands. The secretary succeeded in saving the situation only by the prompt payment of some money to stay the proceedings. No greater opportunity presents itself to our people on the coast than this which will confront Oscar Sweeney. We expect him October 1.——The Downey church, after a pastoral interim of nearly four months, has welcomed to its work R. M. Bailey, of Colorado. His first Sunday was September 9.——In a new community, on the Los Angeles Pacific railroad some seven miles from the center of the city, known as Sunny Side Park addition, live about sixty families. This place is growing. There are no religious services within a mile. They offer a lot and the work for a building to any religious body that will inaugurate a work. This is only one of a number of open doors.——Redondo presents a very difficult field for religious work. The churches already there feel that the situation is theirs. The sentiment prevails that the town is already overchurched, yet an urgent appeal comes from a portion of its people to us to enter and preach the Gospel. A meeting, doubtless, will be held soon. The Baptists and Disciples ought to join forces here, as everywhere else.——W. J. Adams, of Waitsburg, Wash., has accepted an urgent call to serve the churches at Arlington and Corona under a joint pastorate. He will live at Corona. We congratulate the field and the man. Our work is opening auspiciously for our small churches, chiefly because of this willingness to co-operate. They are thus enabled to secure stronger men for their work.——A recent Sunday with the First Church, Los Angeles, indicates great activity, and the splendid faith of the noble First, in its pastor and field. Their newly equipped Sunday-school rooms put them in line with the very best forces of the city for Christian work. Under the leadership of Leon Shaw theirs will doubtless be a great Sunday-school. The church that spends its best efforts in behalf of its Bible school work is the church of most promise for the future.——H. B. Hollingsworth has resigned at Holtville. This is a congregation in the famous imperial valley. They need a good minister. They are about to build a house of worship.——J. F. Tout and family, after a summer spent at Long Beach from the relief from the heat, has returned to his work at Imperial.——R. H. Bateman, after years of splendid service at Whittier, has resigned. The church has called W. H. Martin of Santa Barbara, as his successor. It is understood that he will accept.——Frank G. Tyrrell, who is now one of the leading attorneys in Los Angeles, has been supplying the pulpit at San Bernardino this summer. This church welcomes this week as its pastor E. E. Love, of Arkansas City, Ark. It has been making a great fight to hold its own during these summer months. Though in many respects a difficult work made the more so by circumstances in the church, yet Brother Lowe comes to a field of great promise. The splendid people in his church, together with the wonderful opportunities presented by the field, will enable him to do the greatest work of his life at San Bernardino.——J. R. Jolly has located at Ontario, where he begins a pastorate of large promise.——Leander Lane terminates his work as pastor at Santa Anna October 1. His wife has been very sick this summer but removal to La Canada, a few miles northeast of Los Angeles, is bringing back her accustomed health. Brother Lane's wide experience and splendid abilities as a preacher will doubtless command a work for him among some of our good churches.—Grant K. Lewis, Secretary.

The St. Louis Letter.

The St. Louis ministers have all returned from their vacations, and are taking hold of the work with renewed interest.——We regret that S. B. Moore has resigned at the Hammett Place Church. Brother Moore is one of our most faithful ministers, and will be missed from the work in the city. We have not been informed as to his future plans.——All are very busy getting ready for the great simultaneous campaign to be inaugurated in this city November 4. Our helpers so far as learned are: Brother Yeuell at the First, Brother Chilton at the Union Avenue, Brother Turner at the Hamilton Avenue, G. M. Hoffman at Granite City, and Harlowe and son at Compton Heights. The Fourth will use home forces.——John L. Brandt has just passed through a very severe and dangerous operation for appendicitis. We rejoice that he is now considered out of danger, and hope for his speedy recovery.——Our Bible schools all held rallies last Lord's day. The schools made excellent records. So far as heard from, Compton Heights led the list in attendance, having 508 present, with $28.11 collection. Carondelet and Maplewood led in the collections, Carondelet having over $45 and Maplewood over $50.——The Business Men's Association of the Compton Heights Church had a delightful opening of their fall work on Tuesday evening, September 18, in the form of a luncheon at the church for men. The luncheon was served by the Woman's Union of the church. The toast theme was "Our Coming Revival." Addresses were made on nearly every phase of the subject, and all seemed to enjoy the evening very much. We feel sure that all who were present will feel a greater interest in the revival than was felt before.——The St. Louis churches never had a more hopeful outlook for a great work than at present. Bro. G. E. Ireland, of Carondelet, has been chosen city missionary. We all know Brother Ireland to be pure gold, and his extended acquaintance with the work in the city will enable him to do the right thing from the very first.—F. N. Calvin.

Atlantic Christian College, Wilson, N. C., of which J. J. Harper is president, opened on September 4. President Harper writes they aim at first-class work, and the rates are low.——Walker and McKinney, evangelists, organized another congregation at Windsor with 17 members. The church established this year by our State Evangelist Walker at Fremont has secured a lot and has plans for a house of worship. McKinney and Walker also closed a meeting at Belhaven August 12 with 26 additions. About 18 of these, who were living in the community without a church home, came by statement. J. R. Tingle is the minister there. Their next meeting was at Dunn. There were 11 accessions at last report. We are sorry Brother McKinney had to leave for other work. Brother Walker needs a singer. The state convention will be at Dunn the last week in October.——A. B. Cunningham, of Washington, N. C., preached a week at Richlands and five days at Union Chapel, where he reports three baptisms. He is holding a meeting with his own church at Washington. The Colored Christian Church of Washington reports about 150 members. J. L. Gregory, of Greenville, is the minister, and visits them twice a month, and makes but few trips without baptizing some one.——The work of the Colored Christian Church in Winston seems to be improving. R. L. Peters still ministers for them, and last Lord's day I preached for them in the afternoon. They seemed to appreciate the visit and discourse. It is said there are about 10,000 colored Disciples in North Carolina.——Prof. J. C. Coggins preached four sermons at Dover, N. C., and the result was 12 baptisms.——W. F. Shinall, the blind evangelist from Virginia, recently preached at Spray in a meeting with Dr. B. T. Bitting. There were about 28 added.——J. B. Jones, state secretary, has been busy. He held a week's meeting at Salem in August. He has been visiting Wilmington looking up the prospects of starting a church there. The state board and the Pamlico Union will co-operate in establishing a church there. Our Piedmont Union will meet at Winston-Salem September 28 and 29. We hope the State Board will cast its eyes in this direction, and plan some co-operation, as this is one of the needy sections of the state. The state secretary also visited Rocky Mount, assisting the congregation in selecting the plans for their new house. His church at Wilson will have a new pipe organ by November 1, and other improvements will be made. ——Others of our preaching brethren have been holding short meetings, and our readers will see that North Carolina is pushing forward in many points old and new. The reports at too many places are: "If the preacher only could have staid longer much could have been done." We ought to plan for longer meetings, and not such hurried ones. We will have our mortgage burning the last of October, when we can have H. C. Bowen, a former pastor, with us. J. A. Hopkins, Cairo's Campaign for Christ.

O. D. Maple and J. Ross Miller, evangelists, will lay siege to sinful Cairo, Ill., October 1. Christians of all churches are invited to join in the soul-saving work. Converts will be given the privilege of going to any church. Meetings will be held in a tent on the corner of Seventeenth and Washington. The evangelist will speak the first evening on "A United Army Means Victory." These evangelists are continually holding meetings, have engagements for all of this year and a part of next. They are now closing a meeting at Gas City, Ind., and will from here go to Princeton, Ind., where they enter the simultaneous meeting, which means that about 500 churches will hold revivals at the same time.

Of the Gas City (Ind.) meeting, "The Journal" says, among other things:

"The meetings at the Christian church under the leadership of O. D. Maple and J. Ross Miller are creating unusual interest. Gospel truths are being presented in a clear and forcible manner, and people seem anxious to hear the plan of salvation as taught in the Scriptures. Sunday services were unusually well attended. The special feature of the day was the children's hour, when Mr. Maple gave an object lesson illustrating the effects of sin upon a life and the restoration of that life through the gospel of Christ. Practical themes are on the program and the aim will be to make these services as helpful as possible. These occasions with their themes are fraught with too much interest to be missed by any one."

The Christian church in Cairo, that leads in the united effort, is an old organization and has an old building. No church in a city of 18,000 is better located than this one, but the building is too old in which to do much for Christ. Plans for a modern, up-to-date building have been selected and some money has been subscribed toward its erection.

Cairo has 18.000 population, and its natural advantages make it destined to be one of the greatest manufacturing centers in the southwest. The great Singer works and many other large manufacturing plants are here, four elevators and two large flour mills, large export market for lumber, grain and flour, a city whose business is never interrupted by floods. There are many saloons. These make all the more needful a city campaign for Christ in Cairo, Ill.

Armington, Ill.

A very successful dedication service marked the close of our two years service with the Armington congregation. We had planned long and well for this service, and thanks to the brethren who gave us their hearty co-operation, everything was in splendid shape. Additions at our regular services were frequent; a Bible school contest with a much stronger sister congregation, resulting in a great victory for Armington in all three contested points, brought our school to its highest attendance and efficiency, with an enrollment of over 300 and a home department of 66. The last Lord's day in the old building was one that will be long remembered; the Bible school was the largest in the history of the congregation. The morning preaching hour was given over to a "Farewell Service" for the retiring minister and wife at the close of which three were received into the church. The "Farewell Service" for the old building in the evening was a great success.

Dedication day found us with a debt of $6,500 staring us in the face. The morning was as disagreeable as possible, but a good audience greeted Brother Rains and answered his appeal by pledges amounting to $5,000; the remainder was raised at the afternoon service. In the evening service a handsome purse was presented to the retiring minister and wife.

After eighty years of tears, toil, sacrifice and trust this congregation finds itself one of the strongest of our great brotherhood, and fully equipped for doing the work of the Lord. There is no doubt that she will make the most of her opportunities to sound forth the name of Jesus to the ends of the earth. Bro. John C. Lappin, a young man of great spirituality, takes up the work at once and will carry it on to a greater success than it has yet attained. After a month of much needed rest I will take up the work at LeRoy. L. E. Chase.

Pasadena, Cal.

Lord's day, Sept. 16, was observed as church building day. C. C. Chapman, of Fullerton, was with us as master of ceremonies. After a splendid address on "The Church," he called for pledges. The amount raised was $13,000. We now have $25,000 with which to begin work on our $50,000 house. Frank M. Dowling.

Pleasant Valley, Sept. 20.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting here resulting in 41 additions.—J. T. Bays.

Erlanger, Sept. 13.—The best meeting in which it has ever been my privilege to engage closed Sunday evening, September 9, at Stringtown (Elizabeth), Grant county. This was my first charge, when a student in the College of the Bible. Consequently it was a delight to return and hold a meeting after three years of absence. We labored together for two weeks, with 68 additions, 50 baptisms; 11 from other religious bodies, two reclaimed and the remainder by statement. There is now preaching twice a month instead of once, or weekly observance of the Lord's Supper in lieu of monthly, and the congregation is interested in the education of one of its young men for the ministry who has already spent two years in the School of the Evangelists. For a two weeks' meeting in a country congregation, with more than 50 years' history and with preaching but once a month, this was considered a most remarkable ingathering. The interest was intense. There were 13 additions the last night. Of the 50 baptisms, 30 were men and 20 women. Three grandfathers, one grandmother and 13 heads of families. The character of the converts is such as will add strength and dignity to the congregation. John Thomas Brown, of Lexington, is the faithful, tireless, consecrated minister. I see before him and this congregation a great future.—L. B. Harkins.

Kansas.

Windsor.—Just closed a meeting at Cloverdale with 4 confessions.—W. M. Mundell.

Salina, Sept. 18.—Fourteen by baptism and 21 by letter at our regular services since last report. —David H. Shields.

Argentine, Sept. 15.—Closed a short missionary meeting at Powhattan September 9, with 6 additions by baptism. The church is very much encouraged. We are ready to make dates elsewhere for fall and winter.—James E. Stebbins and wife, Argentine, Kan.

Missouri.

Warrensburg, Sept. 17.—One addition by statement last night. One confession at Dover.—King Stark.

Kansas City, Sept. 17.—Three more added at West Line, 1 by confession, 1 by letter.—Clyde Lee Fife.

Lewistown, Sept. 17.—C. F. Rose, of Canton, Mo., has closed a three weeks' meeting here with 48 additions.—F. M. Day.

St. Louis, Sept. 18.—Three additions at Festus last Lord's day—one by letter and 2 by statement.—Daniel George Cole.

Lamonte, Sept. 14.—Two added at Walnut Branch Chapel last Sunday. We will soon organize there.—I. H. Fuller.

Kirksville, Sept. 17.—Meeting one week old, with 30 additions; 26 yesterday.—R. Bruce Brown, evangelist; D. A. Wickizer, pastor.

Windsor, Sept. 17.—Three conversions at Ionia. Concluded a meeting begun by Brother Allen, resulting in 5 additions.—W. A. Fite.

Seneca, Sept. 17.—Five added yesterday at regular services, making a total of 90 additions in our work the past year.—E. J. Church.

Mendon, Sept. 16.—Closed a meeting at Mike, Mo., with 18 additions—9 by statement and 9 by baptism. Brother Cornelius, of Canton, Mo., will preach one-fourth time for them.—D. Millar.

St. Louis, Sept. 24.—The Old Orchard Church has just concluded a meeting with State Evangelist C. O. McFarland and wife. There were 22 additions—9 by baptism.—R. L. Wilson.

Hale, Sept. 20.—W. L. Harris, who has his headquarters at Bethany, Neb., is in a great meeting here, where C. C. Taylor ministers; 4 additions the first day; large audiences and deep interest.

Plattsburg, Sept. 20.—Closed a meeting at Bethany, Clinton county, last night with 5 baptisms and 1 reclaimed. We were much pleased and greatly edified by the preaching of E. B. Bousland.—D. L. Ammons.

Tipton, Sept. 17.—Our meeting here closed last night on account of the serious illness of the pastor, Brother Couch. We expect to begin a meeting at Keytesville, Mo., to-night.—H. A. Northcutt.

Norborne, Sept. 20.—I close to-night a 19 days' meeting at Mt. Carmel with 17 additions, 13 of which are baptisms. Geo. A. Butler and wife, of Mound City, were with us 12 days and did us great good.—C. C. Taylor.

Sheldon, Sept. 16.—We have just closed a meeting at Rinehart, Mo., with 24 additions—3 by statement, 2 reclaimed and 13 by confession; 17 of the 24 were baptized. R. A. Blalock did the preaching.—H. E. Carpenter.

Sorrell, Sept. 17.—Twenty-six additions to date, with 17 confessions and 5 from other religious bodies. Raised $60 at our services yesterday to apply on the building. We hope to be able to dedicate soon. This has been rather a remarkable meeting, from the fact that we had but four women and a girl when we came here who claimed to be Christians only, and without a church organization or a single Christian man to help them, they have gone and raised almost enough money to build a nice little church house, which now stands completed with the exception of plastering and seating.—S. J. Vance, evangelist.

Napton, Sept. 13.—I have just concluded a special meeting at Salem, a country church here in Saline county, with 18 confessions, 1 from another denomination and 2 by letter. This is the first meeting I have ever held. These are the first additions that have been gained here in three years. I am a student of the Missouri Bible College, at Columbia, and have just entered the university in the past year.—C. Elmer Burgess.

Mexico, Sept. 20.—The Small-St. John meeting continued 15 days with about 50 additions—34 by baptism, which included 3 or 4 heads of families, 3 from other religious bodies, 4 husbands and wives re-enlisted, and a number of our young people. Small is a strong Gospel preacher. His sermon on "The Beauty and Basis of Christian Union," published in full in a Mexico paper, has been pronounced by thinkers from the other churches as one of the best ever presented in this town by one of our preachers. His sermons on "Regeneration" and "Baptism" provoked some opposition, but no one has made effort to reply to the facts of history and vigorous Scriptural arguments of Mr. Small. LeRoy St. John is a most gifted, sweet singer. The intense heat and brevity of the meeting considered, this was a great occasion for the Mexico church.—A. W. Kokendoffer.

Nebraska.

Douglass, Sept. 10.—State Evangelist R. F. Whiston just concluded one of the best meetings in the history of the church of this place. I wish for another meeting with him. Twenty-nine added.—C. W. Longman.

New Mexico.

Roswell, Sept. 17.—We had 1 confession here last night, making 6 additions so far for September.—C. C. Hill.

Ohio.

Hiram, Sept. 21.—Preached at Sandy Lake Church (Pennsylvania) yearly meeting Sept. 16. Seven confessions. A splendid meeting throughout.—H. T. MacLain, evangelist.

Oregon.

Salem, Sept. 15.—Two additions by confession and baptism the first Lord's day in this month.—R. M Messick.

Pennsylvania.

Monongahela, Sept. 20.—One confession last Lord's day morning and 1 at prayer-meeting last night.—Garry L. Cook.

South Carolina.

Earle, Sept. 17.—The church at Merritt's Bridge, S. C., began a series of meetings on the second Lord's day in August, with C. H. Plopper preaching five days, with 6 additions. The next week Grant Overholtzer came for another five days, with 1 added; then, on August 30, C. E. Smith, state evangelist, came to us and continued the meeting until September 16, with 24 added, making a total of 31 since August 12—15 from other denominations, 4 by statement and 12 by confession.—J. A. Napper.

Tennessee.

Springfield, Sept. 24.—We have recently had 14 additions to our congregation from the union services, conducted by the Baptist evangelist, S. F. Hans.—Robt. L. Snobley.

Dyersburg.—Our meeting here with G. A. Reynolds, pastor, and W. J. Shelburne, evangelist, closed September 2 with 29 added. It was considered a fine meeting for this place. I began a meeting at Cumberland, Ia., September 17, with Pastor C. E. Dunkleberger. I will be open for engagements after November 1.—Miss Mayme Eisenbarger.

Texas.

Paris, Sept. 17.—Nine additions here the last three Sundays. R. R. Hamlin will hold a meeting in October.—J. T. Ogle.

Commerce, Sept. 17.—Four additions at regular services yesterday—one by confession, 2 by letter and one by statement.—W. A. Wherry, minister.

Vera, Sept. 21.—Closed a very successful meeting at Vera Sept. 18 with 8 additions. We go to Grand Falls next.—S. W. Jackson and wife, district evangelists.

Ladonia, Sept. 14.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting at Johnson City, Texas, with 25 additions—16 by confession and baptism and 9 otherwise. We organized a Sunday-school with 65 pupils. We are now in a meeting at Marble Falls in the opera house. We have no organization here, and only five or six members, but they have faith in God, and we propose to plant the cause of primitive Christianity here and organize a church in this beautiful city on the Colorado River.—E. V. Spicer and E. M. Douthit.

Washington.

Davenport, Sept. 10.—Large attendance; 1 addition by letter. Our Bible school is increasing.—O. M. Thomason.

Seattle, Sept. 11.—The Brooks-Webb meeting in Chehalis, Wash., closed September 9, with 45 additions, more than doubling the membership.—George A. Webb, singing evangelist.

THE TWO GREAT COMMANDMENTS.—Mark 12:28-34, 38-44.

Memory verses, 30, 31.

Golden Text.—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart.—Mark 12:30.

It was on Tuesday of Passion week, in the course of the same conversation with the Pharisees and Sadducees which we were studying three weeks ago, that the question was put to Jesus about the greatest commandment. The scribes, who were the specialists in Judaic law and were often pettifogging ecclesiastical lawyers, were in the habit of believing that all laws were of equal importance. Any given injunction derived its importance and value from the fact that it was in the code, that it had been commanded. Theirs was the appeal to outward authority alone. To such a mind there can be no greatest commandment for none was less than any other.

Although the question was perhaps meant for a trap, to lead Jesus into some expression about the law which could be used against him, he answered it boldly and straightforwardly. The first commandment is to love God completely. The second is to love man serviceably. He does not say that either of these is greater than the other, but love to God comes logically first, since belief in God and love to him and in understanding of his character and of his relation to men afford a basis for love to men as children of God.

"Love they neighbor as thyself." Perhaps this means manner as well as quality of love. There are times when a man must love his neighbor much more than himself. All heroic deeds of self-sacrifice mean that, when it came to a choice, the doer of the deed chose to serve others rather than self, and service is the measure of love.

We are told then to love our neighbor not only as much as we love ourselves but in the same way. How is that? Sentimentally? No, in sane minds, self-love is not a gush of affectionate feeling for one's self. It is the settled habit of looking after our own interests, of serving ourselves. In such a way we are to love our neighbors—by being as careful of their welfare as we are of our own.

The scribe who asked this question was stirred by the answer into a realization of the truth that principle is greater than law and that love is more important than any amount of fidelity to ritual requirements.

But, though this scribe was "not far from the kingdom of God," most of the scribes were very far from it. The machinery of religion was, with them, an impediment to religion. They made of the whole formal system of religion a cloak for their sins, a means of self-deception and an occasion for hypocrisy.

Jesus was never severe except against formalists and hypocrites. He was always tender toward the honest sinner, even to the thief who was openly a thief. But he had no mercy on meanness in the guise of virtue. So he drove from the temple those who under pretense of furnishing animals for sacrifice for the accommodation of worshippers, were really seeking only their own profit and that by unfair laws, and he constantly and sometimes fiercely condemns the Pharisees who held themselves up as the patterns of religion and virtue without in reality having either.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

October 3, 1906.

A COLD CHURCH.—Rev. 2:1-7.

"O for a closer walk with God!
  A calm and heavenly frame!
A light to shine upon the road
  That leads me to the Lamb!

"Where is the blessedness I knew
  When first I saw the Lord?
Where is the soul-refreshing view
  Of Jesus and his word?

"Return, O holy Dove, return,
  Sweet messenger of rest!
I hate the sins that made thee mourn,
  And drove thee from my breast."

Be alarmed by the first abatement of your devotion to the King. That unrepented and unatoned may be the first slight rifting of the lute that will make all the after music of your life discordant with the songs of redeeming love the angels sing. Pray more fervently, give more generously, live more holily.

A few with hearts all aflame with zeal for benevolences, missions and evangelism can raise the spiritual temperature of any church. Readers, try it. Even a mighty iceberg is at the mercy of a small torch if the latter is kept constantly burning. The melting down of a cold, passionless church may be the work to which you have been specially ordained of God.

A cold church is as much a misnomer as hot ice cream would be. A congregation is a mere assembly; it can not be a church if the element of fervor is lacking. There God and man must be loved and served with a heartiness expelling all coldness that represses life and growth and generating an atmosphere in which all the graces of life and spirit will flourish and flower.

Factionalism is one of the best of Satan's devices for changing a church into a cold storage. He succeeds in this by persuading each to esteem himself better than others, and to make the acknowledgment of his own importance and the vindication of his own contentions of far more consequence than the upbuilding of the church, the honoring of God or the saving of souls. From this deadly sin O Lord deliver us.

Better far profuse handshakings and lusty amens and effusive sociability in the church than chill greetings and repression of all emotions of good will toward God and man. "Dignity of worship" and "church decorum" are too often used as masks to conceal loveless hearts and natures that have become the graves of any religious sentiments that may ever have thrilled them. Our church life should so glow with warmth, sociability and cheer as to supply a congenial atmosphere for the development of all the social graces and every fraternal and filial virtue of our higher natures.

When a patriot risks his life to save an army from ambuscade or in defense of his country he expects burning testimonials of gratitude and love from his countrymen. The world would regard them as ingrates if they did not bestow them. They themselves would sink in the scale of manhood if they were withheld and incentive to altruistic devotion would largely cease. Even so with God, whose impulses are not totally unlike our own. In the person of his Son he died to redeem us from death. That any church with unimpassioned complacency can contemplate him who gave his life for it is inconsistent with a nature whose ardor and nobility have not been marred by the evil one. That coldness is a herald of death that can only be overcome by warmth of affection, devotion to good works and an ardor of worship akin to that arising from around the great white throne.

CHRIST'S COMMANDMENTS.—Jno. 15:1-17.

DAILY READINGS.

M.	Obedience to Christ.	John 15:1-17.
T.	Hearing and Doing.	Luke 6:46-49.
W.	Knowing and Doing.	Rom. 2:7-13.
T.	Watching and Obeying.	Luke 12:35-40.
F.	Obedient and Fruitful.	Matt. 13:18-23.
S.	Following and Serving.	John 12:20-26.
S.	Promise to the Oebident.	Rev. 22:14.

It is better to obey: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

"I have chosen you and ordained you that ye should go and bring forth fruit." What have we brought to the Master at all worthy his cross, the Father's love that sent him, the institution of the church, the lives of holy apostles, the blood of the martyrs, our hopes in Christ, our inheritance among the angels? If empty handed yet, even now let us go forth and labor earnestly for the night cometh.

A good intention has a value similar to that of a blossom. The latter is essential to the fruit, but has no value unless it progresses into golden grain or horticultural lusciousness. Likewise good intentions are prerequisites to noble deeds, but are void of value simply as good intentions. Indeed, unless they are translated into deeds they militate against us, for they are proofs that we know better than we do.

As authoritatively as Christ commanded us to go forth teaching and baptizing, he commands us to love one another as he loved us all. Can we who have found heterodoxy in the doctrines and methods of others concerning baptism prove our own orthodoxy with respect to the Master's teachings about love? Let us love one another with that love that permits no malice, overcomes casuistry, that defends, comforts and inspires.

Modern assumption should carefully heed the solemn words of Samuel to Israel's haughty king: "Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king.

Uuless we through obedience abide fruitfully in Christ we become separated from him. No one visibly comes and hews us away, we die away. We receive less and less from him and because of the disappearance of these vitalizing currents atrophycation begins. The connection between us and him who is our life is dead and shatters and is gone. Our only hope of continued life and fruitfulness is close commerce with him through prayer for instruction and obedience in complying to his will.

"Without me ye can do nothing," and yet Cicero spoke immortal words, and Homer sang songs the world will not let die, and Raphael painted pictures whose voiceless eloquence still inspires to lofty conceptions of beauty and privilege, and Augustus changed Rome from a city of bricks to one of marble. But Jesus' word still is "Without me ye can do nothing." Reconciliation is found only in our knowing that art and sculpture, eloquence and conquest are all as nothing in comparison with those achievements in goodness and spirituality possible to us with Christ's aid, but that can not be accomplished without him.

leadership. There were many shorter addresses which merit large mention, if space permitted.

It was a solemn memorial, when for a few moments business paused, while we remembered the victors of the cross who had entered into their rest. Such names as J. C. Reynolds, G. W. Tate and D. R. Howe were included. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

The convention goes to Jacksonville, where R. F. Thrapp and his congregation of some 1,200 members will (D. V.) entertain us September 9-12, in the largest church owned by our people in our state. Finis Idleman is president; O. W. Lawrence, vice-president; J. W. Kilborn and W. E. Spicer, secretaries.

The propriety of establishing a sanitarium, owned by the church, and located at Rockford, was presented to the convention.

The interests of the church are many and diversified. It is a strenuous school—such a convention, as has just closed. He is, indeed, narrow who sees but one department and neglects all else.

It was inspiring to see the class of young men, strong, scholarly and loyal that are to carry forward the great work of the Master. The Lord bless and guide them. In every department of the convention C. W. B. M., foreign missions, general and state church extension there was a strong and just plea for money. There never was a day when the rich man had such an opportunity to help make the world rich in the unfading glory of God. But there was not a plea for money that did not equally appeal for men. If a church is built it is useless if there is no preacher to be in it. Money for the foreign and home fields will be effective only as they command the talent of missionaries. If we plant a church in New Hampshire it means either to plant a new man in the ministry or empty a pulpit now filled. Who is looking after the supply of the ever increasing army of young men to take their places in the ministry? The college, the West Point of the army of Christ, is looked to from every direction to supply the men. Shall it be able to do it?

Oklahoma's Fifteenth and History Making Convention.

C. H. Everest, treasurer, and K. C. Ventrees, O. L. Smith, J. P. Park, E. B. Johnson, Mrs. M. A. Lucy, W. P. Maupin and George Rainey were elected members of the territorial board. This gives a widely distributed membership to the board for the new year.

The Thursday morning session was given to the Christian Endeavor work. All declared this to be one of the most practical and spiritual sessions of the entire convention. Miss Mabel Fry, of Yukon, presided with dignity, and kept the convention on time throughout a closely crowded program.

Scott Anderson spoke on "Twenty-five Years of Christian Endeavor"; G. J. Chapman on "Christian Endeavorers as Young Evangelists"; Miss Ora Van Vorhees, "Christian Endeavor as a Spreader of Missionary Intelligence"; Oscar Ingold, "Christian Endeavorers as Systematic and Proportionate Givers," while "Christian Endeavor as a Factor in Uniting God's People" engaged the attention of Ed S. McKinney, and "Christian Endeavor and the New State" that of O. L. Smith, president of the Oklahoma Christian Endeavor Union. Miss Mary F. Lawson, of El Reno, was elected as the Christian Church advisory member of the Christian Endeavor Union.

The latter part of Thursday afternoon was given to a consideration of the Prohibition question as now facing God's people in Oklahoma. Addresses were delivered by O. L. Smith and Mr. Laughboum, attorney for the Anti-Saloon League of Oklahoma. This is a burning issue in the new state to be. The prospects are bright to bring the forty-sixth star into our flag undimmed by the legalized rum traffic.

The last evening session was given to short speeches by a number of the brethren. This program covered the history of our brotherhood in the union and in Oklahoma.

When the adjournment came, and "God be with you till we meet again," was sung with deep feeling, and the old veteran, Brother Maupin, pronounced the benediction, we all felt we had enjoyed a week of great privilege in the Lord's work. It was the best and largest convention we have ever held. The spirit was fine, the unity complete. It is a glorious privilege to be working upon foundation things; to feel that you are helping to make history. Oklahoma is growing with leaps and bounds, and the Christian church is in the vanguard. Our cause is marching on.

We need more laborers all the time to put the sickle to the ripened fields of human souls. Every preacher with ability and spirit can soon make himself a great field if he will only come and go to work.

PIMPLES AND BLACKHEADS

Are Caused by Clogging of the Pores or Mouths of the Sebaceous Glands with Sebum or Oily Matter.

The plug of sebum in the center of the pimple is called a blackhead, grub, or comedone. Nature will not allow the clogging of the pores to continue long, hence inflammation, pain, swelling and redness; later pus or matter forms, breaks or is opened, the plug comes out, and the pore is once more free. Treatment: Gently smear the face with Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure, but do not rub. Wash off the Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water, and bathe freely for some minutes. Repeat this treatment morning and evening. At other times use Cuticura Soap for bathing the face as often as agreeable.

E. L. Frazier's Dilemma.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of September 6 has some words from Bro. E. S. Muckley on the above, and after what he has to say about it concludes with the challenge: "The readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will be glad to know what Brother Frazier will have to say further about this." Brother Frazier has nothing further to say about "Who is a Christian in the Twentieth Century." He is sure that he is understood on that matter. The "further" about it must be about what Brother Muckley has said. I am ready to say it.

Before saying it, however, I will notice what my kind Christian, courteous brother, J. F. Callahan, the man from Euclid, O., has said about my "mulishness," etc. To my words, "Here I stand" he has added: "And see the grand procession go by." I accept it. I have been watching the grand procession. Some of the names of the grand men who form the grand procession would bring to mind the grandeur and glory of the procession and show where it is bound for as it goes by. Head that procession with the illustrious name of Sidney Rigdon of Mormon memory and add as the last name so far added from among our preachers, Voliva of Zion City, follower of that pretender, John Alexander Dowie, and usurper of his throne. One who has watched the grand procession go by can easily fill in with the names of those who have turned back to denominationalism and found place in the Episcopal and other "branches of the church," and in the ranks of the followers of Mrs. Eddy.

I am watching the procession and am young enough in years to live to see others join that procession, and it is my purpose to "stand" firm in the faith and true to my Master Christ and our great mission—Restoration.

Now about that dilemma. My Brother Muckley is mistaken if he thinks I am in a dilemma. There are no two horns for me. The same process that made one a Christian in the first century makes one a Christian in the twentieth century. "That process was 'Christian character' expressed in faith in Jesus Christ, repentance and being baptized into Christ. The man who thinks that part of this process in the twentieth century makes a Christian is the one who finds himself in a dilemma. Choose your horn, Brother Muckley. "That fact, and this alone, (italics mine) is what gives us a right to affirm that any one has a Christian character." This centers it. Now what is this alone thing? "The Christian has been Spirit-taught, Spirit-led, Spirit-impressed, Spirit-filled and because he has received the gift of the Holy Spirit is now a Spirit-led man." Put this also to this: "But he is a Christian because God has given him the Holy Spirit." Now add also this: "But the final proof that any baptism is genuine is the giving of the Holy Spirit." All this is very familiar language to those who have been about the mourner's bench.

Now, Brother Muckley, I find you in a dilemma. The final proof of any baptism, you say, to be genuine is the giving of the Holy Spirit. I am led to think that you think God gives the Holy Spirit before baptism, but whether before or after, you think those who are sprinkled receive the Holy Spirit; therefore, this being "the final proof of the genuineness of the baptism," sprinkling is genuine baptism. Take them into the church, then; you can not consistently or logically or reasonably do otherwise.

Must I begin to teach a preacher in our ranks that the Holy Spirit approaches the sinner or alien through "the power of God unto salvation," the gospel? That the Holy Spirit teaches and influences and leads the man to accept and surrender to Jesus Christ and to "put on Christ" and walk in him, and he does this through the power of God unto salvation—the gospel?

Your reference to Eph. 1:13, reveals to me the fact that you have not caught the evident thought that when Paul said, "In whom having also believed, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise." We used, the word "believed" as it was then used, meaning having become a Christian. And Paul never could make a Christian without baptizing him into Christ.

I wish now, my dear brother, to put some matters before you. I will ask my good brother Callahan to stand by, knife in hand, ready to "cut the breeching" if you balk. When Paul said that he and the Christians at Rome were baptized into Christ, and that the Galatian Christians were baptized into Christ, and by this means "put on Christ" (first century process), did he mean they were not in Christ before thy were baptized into Christ? Can one be a Christian and not be in Christ?

When Jesus said (John 3:5), "Except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the Kingdom of God," did he speak a truth for the twentieth century people? Can one be a Christian who is not in the Kingdom of God? When Peter said (Ac. 2:38), "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit," did he speak for twentieth century people? Is a man a Christian whose sins have not been forgiven? Did these people receive the gift of the Holy Spirit before they became Christians? Why was Cornelius baptized? Was he not a Christian in character, especially after he had "believed on Christ"?

Pull out of this dilemma now, Brother Muckley. Cut his breeching, Brother Callahan, if he does not pull.

I will receive into the fellowship of the local congregation any one whom I recognize as a Christian. Will you?

Here I stand? Where is the procession going to? E. L. FRAZIER.

God Speed the Missionaries.

One of the great events of the year is the conference of missionaries at the rooms of the Foreign Society, Cincinnati, just before the sailing of the newly appointed workers. The meeting for this year was held September 5 and 6. There were present fourteen new missionaries and nine of the older ones who are home on furlough. Seven of these return this fall. This makes twenty-one workers who will sail for their respective fields during this month and the first of October.

The sessions of this conference marked the high tide of enthusiasm and spiritual fellowship. Most of the returned missionaries made addresses. Their words were of keenest interest to the new ones just going out. They spoke on their experiences and of the things that the younger people need especially to know. There were also addresses by members of the official board. We were all inspired by brief addresses from Bishop Waldron and Bishop Hartzell of the Methodist church, who happened to be in the city at the time. Bishop Hartzell is missionary bishop of Africa.

Through all the addresses ran the spirit of hope and confidence in the ultimate conquest of the world for Christ. Every new missionary is anxious to get out to the field, every old missionary anxious to return. There is something about the devotion of these people to their great work that stirs the heart.

The new missionaries and their respective fields are as follows: Mr. and Mrs. Ray McCorkle, Miss Ledyard and Miss Rose Johnson, Japan; Mr. and Mrs. Mendenhall, Geo. Baird and Miss Genevieve Perkins, China; Dr. Miller and Miss Fleming to India; John Lord to the Philippines; and Dr. Widdowson, Miss Ella Ewing and Miss Ferrin to Africa. Dr. Widdowson started directly from the conference to Bo-

Does Your Stomach Feel Happy When Meal-Time Comes?

When you sniffle in the air the appetizing aroma of something cooking, do you feel that you could sit down, open your mouth, pin back your ears and eat with a delicious gusto, everything set before you, and not feel any bad effects from it?

In other words, can your poor stomach take care of everything and anything you put into it? There are thousands and thousands of people who do not know what it is to have a good, strong, healthy stomach, nor do they realize what it is to have a good appetite.

You can have an all-powerful stomach and a fetching appetite for every meal, and every day, if you give your stomach a rest, and let something else take hold of your food for you and digest it as it comes into the stomach, something that is harmless but that really does the work of digesting, quickly and thoroughly.

This "something" is Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, the most effective little tablets in the world for curing anything that may be wrong with your stomach. One ingredient of these precious little workers digests 3,000 grains of the coarsest or richest food put into the stomach. Think of it, 3,000 grains! They are really an artificial stomach, because they act just like the stomach, they digest your food, just as though you didn't have a stomach at all. It supplies the stomach with the digestive juices which have become weak and scanty.

Then your indigestion, dyspepsia, sour risings, brash, belchings, acidity, fermentation, loss of appetite, aversion to food, bloaty feeling, heartburn and nausea, will be no more. You can then eat anything you want, all you want, whenever you want, and your stomach will feel fine before and after your meals. Your appetite will be a thing of pleasure to have, your meals will be a pleasure to eat and relish, and your digestion will be thorough and soothing to the whole body.

You can't do your work well, or be cheerful, or have energy or vim or ambition, when your stomach is bad. Make yourself feel good after a hearty meal, feel good all over, clear your mind and make you enjoy life, by taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Give your stomach a rest, so it can right itself, then you need fear nothing. Send us your name and address today and get a free sample package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets by return mail. After you have tried the sample, you will be thoroughly convinced of what they can do for you that you will go to your nearest druggist and get a 50c box of them.

Send us your name and address today and we will at once send you by mail a sample package free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 53 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

lengi, Africa, to relieve Dr. Royal J. Dye. Mrs. Dye has been stricken with the African fever for over six months.

The older missionaries who sail soon are Dr. and Mrs. Drummond to India, A. E. Cory and wife and Mrs. Molland to China, Miss Rioch to Japan and Ray Eldred to Africa.

The closing session in which each departing missionary told why he or she was going out was very impressive. These new recruits will make strong reinforcements for our grand army of workers in heathen lands. They will be welcomed with great delight and thanksgiving by the workers on the field. Let the prayers of a whole brotherhood follow them as they go.

BYRAM.

Bertha Celia Byram, daughter of William W. and Margaret D. Byram, now of Abingdon, Ill., is gone to her reward. Her three brothers, Claude D., Belt and Claire are thus left to mourn. Her life was mostly spent at the farm house of her parents, where her bright and cheery ways enlivened the family circle. At the age of 16 she confessed her Savior before men and put him in his own appointed way, ever after following in his steps to the end of her brief career which terminated so suddenly, and cast a mantle of deepest gloom over the entire community on Lord's day, July 22.

DITTEMORE.

Nancy A. Dittemore was born in Owen county, Ind., December 29, 1832, and departed this life June 9, 1906, near De Kalb, Mo. Survivors are the husband, J. C. T. Dittemore; a son, A. P. Dittemore, and daughter, Roxie Thompson. She is gone—the preacher's home at Bethel is changed. In this home the emblems of the communion were prepared for thirty years. She was a charter member here and only eight survive her. John W. Sandy, her brother, is among the mourners. She was strong in faith, well prepared, and dear to all. H. E. Ballou.

FLEMING.

Samuel P. Fleming, son of Dr. N. and Martha H. Fleming, was born in Farmington, Mo., November 29, 1838, and fell on sleep at Aurora, Mo., September 4, 1906, where he had gone for a short visit to his son, Dr. Bart Fleming. At the age of 17 he confessed Christ, and united with the church at Libertyville, Mo. He was a charter member of the church at Farmington, of which church he has been an elder for many years, and also chairman of the official board. Through the whole of his life, he was in the highest sense one of the best citizens in this community, combining all the elements of genuine manhood and faithful Christian character. His life has been a benediction to his family, and the world in which he moved is the better for that life. He leaves a wife, three sons and one daughter, all members of the Christian Church.

The funeral service was conducted in the Christian church, Farmington, on Thursday, September 6, by the pastor, who selected for his text, "After he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep." Acts 13:36.

The Remorseful Cakes.

A little boy named Thomas ate
Hot buckwheat cakes for tea—
A very rash proceeding, as
We presently shall see.

He went to bed at eight o'clock,
As all good children do,
But scarce had closed his little eyes,
When he most restless grew.

He dreamt a great big lion came
And ripped and raved and roared
While on his breast two furious bulls
In mortal combat gored.

He dreamt he heard the flap of wings
Within the chimney flue—
And down there crawled, to gnaw his ears,
An awful bugaboo!

When Thomas rose next morn his face
Was pallid as a sheet;
"I never more," he firmly said,
"Will cakes for supper eat!"

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

PART III.

CHAPTER XIII.

When Raymund entered the shop, he found Miss Pinns and Mr. Hodges standing just within the little counter-gate. "I saw him," said Miss Pinns, pointing at Raymund. "He drove away a customer, a young man who had already taken out a fine gold watch to pawn. He was half-drunk, and would never have come back for the watch—that kind never do—a young soldier, too!"

Rhoda entered and overhearing the last words, looked at Raymund with a frightened face.

"What's this?" said Mr. Hodges to his nephew. "How dare you send away our customers? What do you mean by it, after I've taken the bread out of my own mouth to put into yours?"

"Uncle William," said Raymund, "it was the son of a lady who had been very kind to Rhoda and me. He was half-drunk at first, but when I let him know about his mother, it sobered him up."

"He'll pawn it somewhere else," cried Miss Pinns, "and we might as well have the money as anybody. Besides, he'd have had a ticket for it."

"Oh, Raymund!" cried Rhoda, "was it Mrs. Bannerton's son?"

"Yes, Rhoda, and when I reminded him how she was working herself old and stiff, and half-starved herself to keep his sister at a conservatory, as she had done to send him to West Point, he said he would go home at once—he has a month's furlough."

"I am so glad!" cried Rhoda, "so glad! Isn't it nice to think we could do something for Mrs. Bannerton?"

"Yes it is," said Mr. Hodges suddenly, and he straightened himself till he had to lean on only one cane. "Yes it is, Rhoda, and I am proud of Raymund for saving the young fool!" Then he marched back into his repair-shop, and Miss Pinns sent a look at Raymund that made Rhoda shiver. But Rhoda did not despair. She had set herself the task of winning over her uncle William from the influence of Miss Pinns. It was often hard to decide which had the advantage. Mr. Hodges grew fond of the faithful girl who hesitated from no work, and who received begrudged favors with a thankful smile. But Miss Pinns was a money-maker, and the money that she made all went to him. "I am not working here for wages," Miss Pinns once remarked at the dreadfully frugal dinner-table." "Mr. Hodges took me in when I had no home, and he has given me a roof and this good food, ever since. And I'll stay with him till I die—I don't expect to live long. But while I'm here, I don't work for wages, but for love." And she cast a glance at Mr. Hodges that made him drop his knife in embarrassed perturbation.

Raymund could have secured a position at the dark, little grocery on the corner, but Mr. Hodges objected. "You won't get but two dollars a week there," he said, "and you couldn't pay your board out of that. You stay here for nothing. You're too young to think of earning money, yet. You are at home, boy!" Mr. Hodges liked Raymund as well as Rhoda. And he liked the work he got out of both, for it was a saving of labor and money. Visits to Wizzen and Mrs. Weed were not infrequent. On one occasion they found that the second horse had been sold, and that there was a negotiation in the air touching the covered wagon. "And then I don't know what we will do," said Wizzen, "for pay rent I wont. But they's always one solution to every trouble, which it is to move, and I reckon nothing else wouldn't satisfy the old lady, no how." It was in September, and St. Louis, after a prostration of breathless heat and mosquitoes was taking its first breath of relief, when Wizzen appeared at the shop door. Miss Pinns tried to transfix him with a glance, but Wizzen made nothing of her keen eyes or of her black tooth. He called for Rhoda and Raymund, and told them "if they wanted to tell Mrs. Weed goodby, to come ahead!"

"Oh!" cried Rhoda. "I hope she isn't going to leave the city!"

"We're going to pull out," said Wizzen. "Come on." When they were at a safe distance down the gloomy, narrow street, Wizzen remarked, "Miss Pinns is well named which there don't seem nothing to the long leanness of her but a head and a point to stick with." He chuckled in much enjoyment over this comparison, and screwed his eyes and stuck his tongue in his cheek and pulled his cap lower over his towseled hair; and as they went on he muttered, "A head and a point to stick with. I must remember to tell that to the old lady."

At last they reached a steep paved street up and down which heavy vans and wagons loaded with huge pyramids of barrels and bales of goods were crawling. It descended to the river. Wizzen led the way to a house-boat which was chained to a white-washed post at the margin of a pier. There on the deck, seated in a splint-bottom chair, was old Mrs. Weed, her ear trumpet in hand; and at the cabin door stood a very disreputable-looking man with an enormous quantity of hair all over his face and down his neck. He was barefooted and his feet were wide and flat and set far apart.

They went aboard, and Rhoda talked to Mrs. Weed through the ear trumpet, but she was rather nervous on account of the wild-looking creature, who poised a long pole in his hands with the air of a pirate. Wizzen, observing her sidelong glances, said, by way of introduction, "That there is the man that owns this here boat."

"Yap, it is," said the man, staring at Rhoda.

"We're goin' to float with him down to New Orleens," said Wizzen. "What a picnic for the old lady! Don't mind how he looks, Rhoda." This in an apologetic tone which the owner of the boat seemed to take in excellent part. "He's untootered, as I may say, but back of all that there hair is a warm heart."

"Ahoy!" cried the waterman, by way of confirmation.

"Don't be skeered of him," said Wizzen. "Come right by him and I'll show you our boat. It's great." So all went to look at the little flat cabins, and then they climbed the short ladder to the level top—"Our upper deck," said Wizzen. "Me and that character is devising to set out a block and tickle, and whenever the old lady wants a wider view, we'll histe her amidships, so to say, and set her right up here, which as yet she says she prefers the low deck."

The hairy owner of the boat jumped off the roof to the lower deck without troubling himself about the ladder, and having spread his bare feet wider apart than before grinned at Rhoda.

Rhoda whispered to Wizzen, "How very awful! I am afraid Mrs. Weed won't want to be with such a man, Wizzen."

"Oh, she don't keer," said Wizzen aloud. "He's all right, jest untootered, which now, if Mrs. Weed wasn't so old as she is, I might say, 'Let us consider;' but being in her advanced state she is as safe as me. Been writing any more poetry lately, Rhoda?"

"Yes, a little, Wizzen."

"I used to make it up whenever I had nothing else to do," said Wizzen. "It was just play, you know. It wasn't no study to me, it just come. Rhymes is easier to me than just straightforrid talking. You take cow which it naturally suggests now and thou and how, too. But in straightforrid talking you say cow and that seems to end the subject as to knowing what to say for to make conversation.

"I would say," growled the hairy boat-owner, "What petty-gree?"

"Donn't pay no 'tention to him," said Wizzen disparagingly. "Come on down and walk right past him, he won't do nothing." When farewells had been spoken, Rhoda and Raymund stood on the dusty pier till the flat boat dropped down the river out of sight. Then they went back to the shop, feeling they had parted from true friends.

phans found it bitterly cold in the attic without a fire. There was no studying up there at night, but after the shop was closed they sat behind the counter with their books till the heat had all died away from the stove. On no account were they to put in another lump of coal after Miss Pinns had "fixed it for the night." One December night as they sat thus in the silent room, with the lamplight making bright spots on the watches and rings in the showcase, Rhoda looked up suddenly and saw Raymund with a dreamy look on his face, staring into space. She spoke to him and he started, and turned red. "O Raymund!" cried Rhoda, "I believe you were thinking about Nelsie Loraine!"

"Well," said Raymund smiling, "I was."

"Oh, Raymund!" cried Rhoda reproachfully.

"Well, what of it?" said Raymund. "I tell you, Rhoda, in spite of everything, Nelsie Loraine was mighty good to me. And she is a good-hearted girl. And as pretty as I can think!"

"O Raymund!" cried Rhoda, her blue eyes accusing and her hands clenched.

"Well," said Raymund stoutly, "she liked me and I liked her. That's all about it."

"I know what it means when you sit there with your eyes seeing nothing!" said Rhoda. "I've noticed it before!"

"Of course I'll marry some day," said Raymund grandly, as he snapped to his trigonometry.

"You are rather young to talk about it now," Rhoda taunted, with something like tears in her eyes.

"Oh, because you never saw anybody you cared for, you don't understand," said Raymund a trifle severely. "I like Nelsie Loraine better than when I saw her every day. I didn't think much about her when we were studying French and Latin together. But I get to wondering how she is spending her time in Europe, and if she ever thinks of me, and if I'll ever see her again, and that's what it means when you see my eyes just staring at nothing; its that. I'm seeing the dream of Nelsie Loraine. I wish I could see her!"

"Maybe I have seen somebody I could like," said Rhoda, coloring. "And if you want to know who, it was Jack Bellfield."

"Why, Rhoda!" cried Raymund, frowning. "Jack Bellfield isn't half good enough for you to ever think of."

"I thought he was your friend. You get letters from him sometimes. And he gave you the clothes off his own back!"

"Of course, he's my friend, but he isn't good enough for you. I have thought I'd marry some day, and you would live with us. You wouldn't ever marry, but just stay in our house and be happy that way."

"Who is we and us?" cried Rhoda. "No, sir, if you marry, I'll marry. And if you don't, I won't. Now, then! Jack Bellfield is as good for me as Nelsie Loraine is for you!"

"Rhoda," said Raymund almost angrily, "I never want to hear you speak of marrying Jack Bellfield, as long as you live!" He rose.

"Then you quit looking at the dream of Nelsie Loraine," cried Rhoda, her blue eyes burning, and her cheeks very red. And they went to bed with a little cloud between them.

But Christmas morning, when they got up very early, and Rhoda came out of her barricaded corner to look at her stocking, and Raymund, only half dressed, went to look into his sock, the cloud passed away. They had shouted "Christmas gift!" simultaneously, and now in the pale light of a smoky lamp they examined the treasures that each had given the other. At the bottom of Raymund's sock he found a slip of paper on which was written, "Jack." When he opened and read the slip, Rhoda smiled and said, "That's my Christmas gift to you; I've given up Jack for good!" Then she emptied her stocking and gave a little cry of joy; for on a slip of paper was written, "N. L."

"Yes," said Raymund, "I saw what you wrote on your slip, and I guessed what you meant. So I'm giving you Nelsie Loraine for my Christmas gift!" Rhoda in her nightdress rushed at her brother and flung her arms about him and they began to laugh very hard. "Neither of us will ever marry!" cried Rhoda, who felt quite old in virtue of having become sixteen the day before. "Never, never, never, as long as we live!"

"But Rhoda," said Raymund, examining his treasures," where did you ever find the money to buy all these things I've wanted so bad?"

"Well, I'll tell you," said Rhoda, nestling closer, for it was cold and clammy in the half-lighted attic. "I hired a little boy to bring my watch to the shop—the one Wizzen gave me,—and I took the money from that!"

"Oh, Rhoda! Would you part from Wizzen's gift?"

"Why of course not, boy!" cried Rhoda. "I knew you'd redeem it out of your money and give it back to me!" Then Raymund shouted with laughter and Rhoda pealed out her merriest, and Miss Pinns poked her head in the door to say, in her sourest tone and with the widest display of the black tooth, "I've got a morsel of news for you that will stop that hollering, I dare say!" And I dare say, he had. For it's usually when you are laughing hardest that bad news is coming around the corner.

Our Crosses.

BY MARY CARY BLACKBURN.

How human it is when sorrow comes to us to let it fill our hearts with bitterness and our eyes with tears.

Yet, in a measure, a great measure, it is possible for us to live above these things which hurt and annoy.

If we look at them in the right spirit they are a blessing to us. It is when the flower is crushed that it gives us the sweetest perfume. When the tree is pruned it yields the finest fruit. And so when our hearts bleed we are a little more tender, more charitable, not so prone to condemn our weak brothers and sisters, in short, as God wants us to be, and sent the suffering to us for that purpose, we are more like the divine pattern, Christ.

If we fill our minds and hearts with pure, beautiful thoughts, the discontent, the impure, will be crowded out. "For as a man thinketh in his heart so is he." With these higher minds we shall be able to look down upon our sorrow, our temptation, our suffering of whatever kind, and bear it with patience and resignation. And because of our cross we can be a blessing to others.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try. Send for it and See.

Those who suffer from it well know the miseries of catarrh. There is no need of it. Why not get it cured? It can be done. The remedy that does this is the invention of Dr. J. W. Blosser, an eminent Southern doctor and minister, who has for over thirty-two years been identified with the cure of catarrh in all its worst forms.

He will send you, entirely free, enough to satisfy you that it is a real, genuine, "home cure" for catarrh, scratchy throat, stopped up feeling in the nose and throat, catarrhal headaches, constant spitting, catarrhal deafness, asthma, etc.

His discovery is unlike any thing you ever had before. It is not a spray, douche, atomizer, salve, cream or any such thing, but a genuine, tried-and-true cure, that clears out the head, nose, throat and lungs, so that you can again breathe the free air and sleep without that choking, spitting feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It saves the wear-and-tear of internal medicines which ruin the stomach. It will heal up the diseased membranes and thus prevent colds, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting.

If you have never tried Dr. Blosser's discovery, and want to make a trial of it without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and a good, free trial treatment and also a beautiful illustrated booklet, "How I Cure Catarrh", will be sent you at once, free, showing you how you can cure yourself privately at home.

"I Love You."

BY J. EDGAR RUSSELL.

A mother holds her babe against her breast,
Kisses the dimples on its rosy cheeks,
Lists to the prattle of its childish tongue,
And then she slowly, softly to it speaks,
"I love you."

With snowy hair, and trembling hand and step,
Behold that mother after many years,
With figure bent, she gazes at her son,
And these, the joyful words she gladly hears,
"I love you."

THE HISTORY OF A HEART TRAGEDY.

BY OLIVE A. SMITH.

If I had not committed my few remaining days to the cause of literary art, I certainly would not write this story, for the writing of it will add many bitter drops to a cup of anguish already overflowing. But I know Dorothy will never write it. Dorothy is so mundane at times; so prone to lose sight of those heights, which another poet, fully as great as either of us, has called "the Alpine summits overhead." And she is several months my senior, too. She is nearly 15, and I am only fourteen and a half.

The cause of art demands that I write the story, and I shall strive to write it truthfully, because the editors of the great magazines all desire truth in their stories, and I intend that this story shall be published in the very greatest of the great magazines.

But I must now begin the real story. The above paragraphs form the introduction and these same editors who want truth in a story, have said, very emphatically that the writer should plunge into the story in the first few sentences of the introduction. That is the reason I mentioned Dorothy in the very first paragraph. Dorothy is one of the characters in the story. In fact, she is the only important character besides myself and Professor Ramey.

Another editor has said that "Telling a story in the first person is open to serious objections." I considered that saying very carefully before beginning my story, but I reasoned the matter over calmly and decided that, if I told the truth, I must tell the story in the first person, for the story is the history of the heart-tragedy that has overshadowed Dorothy's life and mine. Furthermore, editors all desire truth, and I never heard of more than one who objected to the first person. So I determined not to sacrifice moral integrity, even to the great cause of art, and I will proceed with my story in the first person.

Dorothy and I live within a block of one another, and we were always the dearest of earthly friends until that friendship was wrecked by the tempest of sorrow which I will soon describe.

The trouble all came from this erroneous idea that Dorothy and I are children, when we are not children. It is a long time since we both of us took a firm hold of the serious problems of human life and destiny. I make this explanation here, in deference to another editor, who has said that "every sentence in the story should be an unfolding and a development of the plot."

Well, "on the morning of that eventful day," as a fellow-novelist has said, Dorothy and I walked to the academy as usual. We received our history lessons for practice, just as usual, and then, just as usual, we talked about Professor Ramey. He is our history teacher, and I can't remember a single morning last term when we didn't talk about him. Sometimes we spoke of his kindness and goodness; of his beautiful ideals of life, and his vast knowledge of things. We wondered how he had accumulated those vast stores of wisdom. We often spoke of his eyes. He has such eyes! So dark, and deep, and often "sparkling with merriment," as one of our minor poets has said. Sometimes we wondered how he could be so big and broad-shouldered, and not look at all awkward. Dorothy said it was because he was so "exquisitely proportioned," and I was amused at her use of a borrowed expression. I always use original language myself, even if it is not quite so effective.

That morning we mentioned the professor's peculiar habit of twisting his mustache with great violence when he is excited or very much amused about anything. Then we wondered why he is not married. All the other professors are married, and we know that he is much older than some of them. I said: "Perhaps he will marry some time. I guess he isn't so very old."

"Why, Bessie Merwin!" exclaimed Dorothy. "Professor Ramey is far past the meridian of life. Yesterday, when I stood by his desk, I saw four gray hairs, two on each side of his forehead, and they matched beautifully! He must be nearly forty. Just think of it!"

"Well, what if he is forty," I answered. "In these days of culture it is only the crude and unformed mind that makes so much of a few years. Professor Ramey is no ordinary man, and his years can not be measured by an ordinary standard."

Dorothy and I have never quarreled and made up after the manner of frivolous girlhood, but she turned up her nose and sniffed at those words. Then she said, in a sarcastic tone, "Oh, of course not! Neither is Miss Bessie Merwin an ordinary girl, and her years can not be measured by an ordinary standard. Perhaps she is almost as old as professor Ramey." I gazed at her in gentle dignity, for I was disgusted with her childishness. I do not think it necessary to the development or unfolding of the plot of this story, that I relate, in detail, the further incidents of that walk. I will say, however, that there was a slight unpleasantness of feeling between us. During the chapel, and algebra, and study hours we never looked at each other, and once, when Miss Herrington stepped out of the room, Rob Reynolds nudged Charley Wilson, and they winked and grinned in our direction. Rob whispered, loud enough for us to hear, "Them dearest friends been quarreling again, I guess. Ain't it funny watchin' girls try to be chums!"

I frowned severely at Rob. So did Dorothy. I can not endure the youth. He is so lacking in culture and ideals! And his conversation is shockingly provincial and ungrammatical.

When we passed into Professor Ramey's room he stood near the door, looking handsome and noble as usual, yet kind of sad and dreamy, as if he were thinking of something far away. I was at the head of the line, and when he saw me that far-off expression instantly left his face, and he smiled at me. He has such a sweet smile, and I had never seen it so radiant and beautiful before.

I fairly danced along to my seat, and I could not resist the temptation to turn and look at Dorothy. Oh, gentle reader, you should have seen her! The expression of her face was fairly murderous! "Our eyes met in one quick, comprehensive glance," as another fellow-novelist has remarked, and the whole tragic truth, which will be suddenly revealed in the denouement of the story, forced itself upon our minds.

I was positively brilliant in my recitation that day, and Dorothy made almost a complete failure. Her mother had sent her to bed the day before, because she had a sore throat. So she hadn't studied much. She was terribly humiliated over her failure, and I was quite sorry for her. The minute the class was dismissed she ran to the music room, where she was to take her lesson in 15 minutes. The Graham girls and Madge Benedict came to my desk, and while we were talking about what we would do during vacation, Professor Ramey went whistling about the room, collecting test papers and clearing up his desk. When we started to go, he looked up and said: "That was a first-class lesson to-day, Miss Bessie. I wish we had a few more like it."

I said: "Thank you, professor," and he smiled again, very sweetly, and I ran down to the cloak room to tell Dorothy. I had to wait a long time, and when I told her she turned up her nose, just as she had in the morning, and said: "That's nothing compared with some of the compliments I have received from Professor Ramey. He told me the other day that he didn't know how they could get along in the history class without me." Again we exchanged a few unpleasant words, but we became reconciled so far that we walked home together. On the way home, another incident occurred which has a great deal to do with the development of the plot. Some boys gave us great big hand-bills, announcing a lecture to be given by a Madam Luvaney, who had traveled clear around the earth three times. The subject of the lecture was "The Emancipation of Women from Conventionality." Dorothy and I, being young women inclined to progressive thought in all things, were enthusiastic about it from the first. Our mothers do not approve of our going out to lectures and things when we have lessons to study, so we arranged a little plan of our own. We were to get permission to take our drawing books over to Madge Benedict's, and work all together. Then we were to slip quietly over to the East Side Hall and hear the lecture. Of course we were sorry to make use of a plan that involved a litle deceit, still we felt justified, because the emancipation of woman from anything is a very great cause. We felt it was our duty to be thoroughly informed on so important a subject.

At the Stamp Window.

Just before 12 o'clock yesterday forenoon there were thirteen men and one woman at the stamp window of the post-office. Most of the men had letters to post for the outgoing trains. The woman had something tied up in a blue match-box. She got there first, and she held the position with her head in the window and both elbows on the shelf.

"Is there such a place in this country as Cleveland?" she began.

"Oh, yes."

"Do you send mail there?"

"Yes."

"Well, a woman living next door asked me to mail this box for her. I guess it is directed all right. She said it ought to go for a cent."

"Takes two cents," said the clerk, after weighing it. "If there is writing inside it will be twelve cents."

"Mercy on me, but how you do charge."

Here the thirteen men began to push up and hustle around and talk about one old match-box delaying two dozen business letters; but the woman had lots of time.

"Then it will be two cents, eh?"

She's sending some flower seeds to her sister, and I presume she has told her how to plant 'em."

"Two threes," called out one of the crowd, as he tried to get to the window.

"Hurry up," cried another.

"If there is no writing inside."

"Well, there may be. I know she is a great hand to write."

"There ought to be a separate window for women," growled a third.

"Then it will take twelve cents?" she calmly queried, as she fumbled around for her purse.

"Yes."

"Well, I'd better pay it, I guess."

From one pocket she took two coppers. From her reticule she took a three-cent piece. From her purse she fished out a nickel; and it was only after a hunt of eighty seconds that she got the twelve cents together. She then consumed four minutes in licking on the stamps, asking where to post the box, and wondering if there really was any writing inside—but woman proposes and man disposes. Twenty thousand dollars' worth of business was being detained by a twelve-cent woman, and a tidal wave suddenly took her away from the window. In sixty seconds the thirteen men had been waited on and gone their ways, and the woman returned to the window, handed in the box and said:

"Them stamps are licked on kind o' crooked, but it won't make any difference, will it?"—Bee Hive.

ALL WILL WANT

QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS

BY S. D. GORDON

The author of "Quiet Talks on Prayer" (now in its 55th thousand), and "Quiet Talks on Power" (now in its 80th thousand).

Cloth, 12mo. 288 pages. Net 75c.

"QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS" is an attempt to group up in simplest Anglo-Saxon English the statements of the entire Bible regarding Jesus. The purpose is wholly practical, that one may get at a glance, for his own thought and heart, the swing of the Bible from end to end on its central theme. Mr. Gordon's life work has been leading up to the theme of this new book.

TOPICAL ARRANGEMENT

FIRST—The purpose of Jesus' coming; the plan of his coming; the tragic break that occurred in the plan; the surprises that worked out of that break.
SECOND—The Person of Jesus from three points of view: the human; the divine; the winsomeness of his personality.
THIRD—The seven great outstanding experiences which reveal Jesus: the Jordan Baptism; the Wilderness Temptation; the Transfiguration as an emergency unusual; the Gethsemane struggle; the Victory of Calvary.
FOURTH—Study Notes. One of the most important features of the book, making it possible for the earnest reader to follow for himself Mr. Gordon's essential methods.

"You're a Brick."

When Tom says admiringly to Harry, "You're a brick!" I wonder if he knows how the saving originated.

In the golden days of Greece, an ambassador once came from Epirus to Sparta, and was shown by the king over his capital. He was surprised to find no walls around the city.

"Sire!" he exclaimed. "I have visited nearly all the towns in Greece, but I find no walls for their defense. Why is this?"

"Indeed!" the king replied, "you cannot haave looked carefully. Come with me to-morrow and I will show you the walls of Sparta."

On the following morning the king led his guest out upon the plains where his army was drawing up in battle array, and pointing proudly to the valiant soldiers, he said:

"There you behold the walls of Sparta—every man a brick!"—Exchange.

Spicy Sayings.

Harold ran back from the lion in the museum.

"Don't be afraid, dear," grandmother said. "That lion is stuffed."

"Yes," said Harold, "but mebbe he isn't stuffed so full that he couldn't find room for a little boy like me."

"Mamma, which star is yours?" asked Kitty.

"What do you mean?"

"Well, we were looking at the stars last night, and Mary pointed to one and said, 'That is Mars,' and I thought that if her mother owned one, you must have one too."—Little Chronicle.

A little Topeka girl came home from church the other day and was asked what the minister's text was.

"I know it all right," she asserted.

"Well repeat it," her questioner demanded.

"Don't be afraid and I will get you a bed-quilt," was the astounding answer.

Investigation proved that the central thought of the sermon had been, "Fear not, and I will send you a comforter."—Kansas City Journal.

Sauce for the Goose.

The old saying that "Chickens come home to roost," has many a good application. It is also true that the good we would do is often outdone by our own mistakes. The following needs no further comment:

"She was dressed smartly, and when she met a little urchin carrying a bird's nest with eggs in it, she said: 'You are a wicked boy; how could you rob that nest! No doubt the poor mother is now grieving for the loss of her eggs.'

"'Oh, she don't care,' answered the boy, edging away, 'she's on your hat.'"—Selected.

Van Dyke's famous "Gospel for an Age of Doubt" to our patrons for 75 cents. "Quest of Happiness" goes for same price, while they last.

"Gloria in Excelsis" is an honor to the brotherhood, and does merit to all connected with its production."—J. H. Garrison, Editor CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, St. Louis.

Clerks, secretaries and other reporters err in sending "syndicate copy" to this office. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S great constituency merit and require crisp, original, and unique contributions to our columns.

Our record is more than 5,000 song books in a single week. That we do not sell greatly in excess of this is due to many churches buying without sending for our samples. We have the best, and prices are the lowest.

It is not too late for many preachers and other of our readers to secure transportation to the Buffalo convention by introducing THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST into new homes. Write at once for our exceedingly generous terms.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and Review of Reviews for $3. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and a fountain pen for $2. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and a self-filler fountain pen, guaranteed for ten years (to a new subscriber) for $2.50. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and The Woman's Home Companion for $2.25.

R. L. Jackson, McKinney, Texas, in remitting $2.50 for our Popular Church Record, complimented it very highly. Its excellence will justify every church in securing it and transferring old records and church lists into its classified spaces.

A valuable addition to the "Garrison Library" will be the "History of Christian Union," which will be published about the time of our National convention. This complete great series, Alone with God, Half Hour Studies at the Cross, The Heavenward Way, Helps to Faith, The Holy Spirit, The History of Christian Union, and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST $6.50.

You may be told other Bible school supplies "are as good as the Dowling." Get the standard, get the best. We sell these at the lowest possible prices. An improvement for next year's series will be the addition of a Teacher's Quarterly for each grade. Samples sent on application

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST headquarters will be at The Buckingham, the nearest hotel to the convention hall. A limited number of our friends will be received there for $2 per day, American plan. Engage rooms at once. It will afford us pleasure to secure lodging and breakfast for all applicants in comfortable private homes near the armory at 75 cents and $1.00.

"It would be beyond my power to tell you with what pleasure I have examined "Gloria in Excelsis." As I now look at it, it seems all but perfect. Style, the order of arrangement, mechanical construction, in fact the whole book is a joy and a delight to the soul. You have placed the entire brotherhood under everlasting obligation to you for the excellent Hymnal you have given to us."—W. M. White, Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky.

The tourist car on THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special will cost $2, the standard Pullman $4, excellent reclining chair car service free. The fare from St. Louis and return will be $19.25. Reservations should be made at once. Those not living along the line of the Wabash should insist on their agents routing them over that line, and leave home in time to catch this Special leaving St. Louis at high noon, Thursday, October 11.

The circulation of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has increased 30½ per cent since October 1, 1905. We question whether this has been paralleled in the history of our church journalism. This is due not only to the superior excellence of the journal itself, but in large part also to the increasing aggressive loyalty and devotion of thousands of its friends. While scores of new subscriptions come by ones and twos, we have this week received the following new clubs at $1.50 each: Hoquiam, Wash., John J. Handsaker, minister, 4; Cameron, Mo., I. O. Bricker, minister, 5; Jefferson, Ia., Samuel Gregg, pastor, 5; Woodward, Ia., 6; Fort Dodge, Ia., 9; Webster City, Ia., R. M. Dungan, pastor, 9; Tipton, Ind., L. H. Stine, minister, 11; Windsor, Mo., W. A. Fite, pastor, 12; Niantic, Ill., J. Will Walters, minister, 14; Kansas City, Mo., T. P. Haley, pastor, 16; St. Joseph, Mo., C. A. Lowe, minister, 19; Noblesville, Ind., R. W. Clymer, pastor, 19; Flora, Ind., A. B. Houze, pastor, 19; Houston, Mo., J. D. Lawrence, evangelist, 23.

An occasional gleam of sunshine—bright scintillations from the great realm of delicious sentiment—occasionally fall over the pens, statistical tables, circulation reports and other grim evidences of a business age, littering our Superintendent's desk. This is the latest, written on the reverse side of an important business communication, escaping the attention of the author, whose name we would not surrender for weighty gold: "My own ownliest—Just sent you a letter but this just came and I want to send it on, also yours of Tuesday night. Oh, I need you—if I wrote all day I could only give the cry of my heart. I need you, I want you. R."

WHAT A NATIONAL CONVENTION MEANS

WHO CAN sum up a national convention? It is condensed history. It is Hope rising on triumphant wing for a loftier flight. It is Faith, seeing visions and planning campaigns. It is Love, greeting old comrades, cementing new friendships, forming higher resolves, and getting a foretaste of heaven. It is Memory opening her books and showing us half-forgotten faces and chapters lying back in the dim past, as long sundered friends meet and greet each other. It is college days lived over again as the gray-headed boys and girls meet and revive the incidents of those distant, by-gone days. It is a spur of the Delectable Mountain, from whose summit we catch glimpses of the city which hath foundations. It is a river of holy enthusiasm in which we bathe our weary spirits and are refreshed for the journey. It is a school of the Master in which he gathers his disciples about him once more to repeat to them his last command, "Go teach all nations." It is a Jerusalem in which the disciples tarry awhile for a fresh enduement of power from on high. It is an Antioch from which the missionaries, separated from their fellows by the Holy Spirit, are sent forth to new conquests in the mission field, and to which, returning, they report what the Lord hath wrought through them. It is a Patmos from which the beloved disciples see, in bold outline, the future struggles of the Church with her foes, and her glorious triumph. Blessed fellowship! Hallowed associations! Our hearts shall know nothing sweeter or holier until our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem the golden, the redeemed city of God!

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
  Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
  The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
  For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
  Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
  And the song of victory.

A PIANO BARGAIN

I have for sale at half-price a new piano (in the case in which it was shipped from the factory) which I secured in the settlement of an account. I desire to sell it quickly and hence will sell it at half the price it would cost you anywhere else.

IT IS NOT A CHEAP INSTRUMENT

That is to say, it is first-class, strictly, in every particular, and was made to sell at a first-class price. Nothing about it is slighted. The material is good, the workmanship is of the best and the case is extraordinarily handsome. It is a fully guaranteed piano.

THIS IS A BRIEF DESCRIPTION

Height 4 feet 10 inches, length 5 feet 3½ inches, width 2 feet 4½ inches. The scale is the grand overstrung, 7 1-3 octaves, with three strings to each note in the treble and middle registers. The bass strings are copper and steel covered. The case is quartered oak double, veneered inside and outside, ornamented with handsome mouldings, carved pilasters and carved trusses. The desk panels are very handsomely carved. The keys are of the best ivory and ebony. The wrest plank is built up of five thicknesses of hard white maple. The top frame and bottom frame are dove-tailed. The full metal plate is of very heavy construction, reaching from top to bottom of the piano and strengthening the wrest plank, sound board and back frame. The key board is supported in the center by two metal supports, and at each end by being fastened to the arms of the piano. The pedal action is noiseless—direct motion. The hammers are treated by a special tone-regulating process, making them elastic, as well as soft. By means of the "instrumental attachment" any ordinary player can imitate perfectly the tones of the mandolin, guitar, harp, zither or banjo. Not the slightest extra effort or skill is rendered necessary for the use of this instrumental attachment. Many other good points could be mentioned, but they can be covered by the statement that it is a large sized, well made, thoroughly first-class and absolutely guaranteed concert grand piano.

WHO WANTS IT?

It is a bargain that is seldom to be had and the opportunity will be gone soon after this announcement appears in print. If it interests you, write to me at once without laying this paper aside, and I will tell you the actual value and the bargain price.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

A. L. Orcutt, of the Board of Ministerial Relief, advises our readers this year's report by the custodians of the funds so piously given for the care of our aged ministers and their wives through their declining years to be presented at Buffalo will be the best in the history of that organization. May Bro. A. M. Atkinson see in it the travail of his soul and be satisfied, may the dear beneficiaries of the brotherhood's gratitude have less concern about food, raiment and shelter while this winter's wild winds howl around them, but amid peace and plenty with happiness review their past years and with the sweetest anticipations of joy look forward to their home-going and coronation.

It is well to supplement Brother Mohorter's "Program" which follows with the remark that among the most interesting features of the convention will be his own activities as secretary of our National Benevolent Association. Though he has been secretary but a few months, his former identification with the ministry through his membership on the Central Board has given him complete mastery of the details as well as full comprehension of the sublime part this Association is to have in the Centennial triumphs and all the future of this Restoration. The wisdom of his selection for his present position is receiving daily confirmation through the work of his hands and heart.

A communication received from Secretary Muckley as we are almost ready for press, states Church Extension receipts for the current year are $60,113.80, a gain of $13,439.05 over last year. The interest from investment funds bring the receipts up to over $80,000. This is indeed gratifying evidence that Church Extension has moved well out into the Centennial current of progress and triumph. We congratulate our Board of Church Extension, its indomitable secretary and above all, all who are engaged in this great movement for the restoration of apostolic Christianity to the faith and practice of men over the almost assured consummation of our Centennial aim to have $1,000,000 at the disposal of the Board of Church Extension by Pittsburg, 1909.

Churches from their treasury supply their membership with communion emblems, hymn books and Bible school helps. Why not with a Christian paper? The sanctifying influence of religious journals is unknown to half our people. Florists, horticulturists, agriculturists, mechanics, tradesmen, merchants, scientists, professionals, all regard an organ of their own craft indispensable to the higher development of their vocations and their own preparedness for them. The constituency of no other great interest so needs such help as that of the church. The great commission of the church—"Go Teach"—is powerfully supplemented by knowledge of the field. From no other source can this information be secured in attractive form save from the religious press. Few church members have the proper conception of the importance of many things pastors deem very consequential unless he sees them dignified with newspaper advocacy and himself importuned into active alliance therewith by the agency of the press. His own enthusiasm as a soul saver will be tremendously enhanced by glowing reports from many fields found in every issue of a paper like THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Proper pride in his own church will be inculcated by learning in these columns what is making other churches strong, prosperous and useful. A large circulation won by its own initiative might be more profitable to our publishing houses than one given them in the method we now suggest; but relieved of the expense of solicitors' charges and helped by an increased circulation of tens of thousands, any of them would doubtless furnish the papers in clubs of fifty and one hundred much cheaper than they can be sold under the present system. A few months ago, Lebanon, Mo., introduced one of our church papers into every home represented in the membership. Just what that has meant to the church may be learned by addressing the pastor—Harold Bell Wright. We believe nothing else the churches could do would contribute more to a great Centennial or inaugurate our second Centennial movement with greater enthusiasm or brighter hopes of success than for the church officiary to place a Christian paper in every home. With respect to this, we welcome the opinions of the brethren.

The Program of the Buffalo Convention.

BY J. H. MOHORTER.

Much has been said about the physical beauties of the city of Buffalo and the might and majesty of Niagara Falls. While these may contribute to the profit of a visit to our National Convention, the real profit, however, must be found in the program. In this particular the Buffalo Convention offers a rare attraction. The program for this year is the peer of any of its great predecessors. It insures a rare intellectual and spiritual uplift. The men and women who are to speak on this occasion are all specialists, who have learned the secret of success in the Lord's work, and who are abundantly endowed to feed our minds and set our hearts aflame with the fire of a holy enthusiasm.

As a people, we are engaged in a great work, in enterprises that are world-wide in their influence and age-lasting in their endurance. Every member of our great brotherhood should know about plans, purposes, and conquest of our united effort to bring in the universal reign of Christ. If all our brethren were fully informed about our triumphs at home and abroad they would begin to experience the real joy of Christian service, and all our work, missionary, educational and benevolent would feel the impulse of divine optismism. The program of our coming convention will carry us to the mount of vision where we mav behold our Lord in the midst of his loyal followers as he triumphantly leads on to victory. It will take us into the sweetest and most intimate fellowship with him, for it will, as to his "friends," uncover to us the secret yearning of his great heart over a lost and ruined world.

Then the fellowship of this occasion will be one of the rare treats of a lifetime. The great religious activities in which we are engaged are borne forward under the leadership of some of the noblest men and women of God in the religious world. They are of the purest character, the largest vision, the deepest consecration to God and humanity. Who can measure the value of a personal acquaintance with these men and women whose lives have been so richly fruitful? To meet them face to face and mingle with them in sympathetic fellowship is to secure for ourselves a fuller, richer appreciation of them and the appeals they bring to our hearts and to place ourselves in touch with a heroic band of the friends of Christ and humanity. To look into the faces of the battle-scarred soldiers of the cross from the firing line far out on the frontier of heathen darkness, to hear the messages of these men and women who will have laid all upon the altar of service will be a holy benediction. Then to sit down with the multitudes as they gather in loving memory around the Lord's table will remove all feeling of isolation and will make more real the brotherhood we have in the Church of Christ. The sense of partnership we have in Christ with an almost countless multitude of sainted spirits, both in heaven and upon earth, will gird us with strength to climb to the very summit of Christian service and experience. We owe it to ourselves to go to the Buffalo convention that we may rejoice in the splendid victories of the year, that we may receive new courage for the larger service through our sense of partnership with a multitude of the choicest spirits in the religious world, that from its lofty summit we may view the thrilling magnitude of the work into which our God has called us, that we may be brought into the most intimate nearness to the heart of our Savior as he opens to us his glorious will.

Current Events

The Flight of the Dukes.

It is reported that the Russian grand dukes are fleeing from Russia into other parts of Europe. Assassinations have become too frequent for their peace of mind. The sudden death of General Trepoff, which is suspected of having been an assassination by poison, was a particularly discouraging event for the grand dukes. Trepoff was supposed to be the policeman-in-chief for the protection of all the privileged ones against the indignation of the oppressed. It was his business to ward off the bombs of the anarchists from the dukes and others in high place. But if he could not even protect himself, surely it is time for the others to escape while they can. So they think, apparently, for they are putting their estates in the hands of agents, packing their portable wealth and hastening to Germany and France.

Pure Drugs.

The special commission which is preparing the rules under which the pure food and pure drug law is to be enforced is now in session in New York. It has prepared some tentative rules governing the sale of drugs and medical preparations. According to these it is required that the label shall state all the ingredients of the preparation (using the English names), the name of the manufacturer and the place of production. It is also provided that geographical names shall not be used unless the articles so labelled actually come from the places mentioned. For example, nothing shall be sold as Jamaica ginger that does not come from Jamaica, and Peruvian bark must come from Peru. The times are changing. When this law goes into effect it will be impossible for the man who regularly takes his stimulants in the form of patent medicines which are 20 to 30 per cent alcohol, to delude himself with the belief that he is a strict temperance man.

In the Philippines.

James T. Smith was inaugurated governor-general of the Philippines on Tuesday of last week, in place of Governor-General Ide. In his inaugural address he said that his policy would be that which has already been established, namely, to prepare the people by education for the exercise and enjoyment of independence. But he added that independence is no guarantee of happiness and prosperity, and cited the case of Cuba as proving that independence is not always a blessing. As a general proposition it is, of course, true that independence is no guarantee of felicity. Some men are really better off in jail than at large. But men in jail will wish for liberty and political communities will desire independence. Nothing as yet has convinced us—not even Mr. Bryan's statement—that the Filipinos are capable of self-government. We still believe, and hope, that when they are they will get it. And we trust that Governor Smith's administration will be directed to that end.

The People's Lobby.

The agents of the special interests which seek governmental subsidy or protection and labor to avert unfriendly legislation, have long been known as the "third house" of congress. No one doubts the right of any group of business men to maintain agents in Washington to see that members of congress are duly informed and properly argued with touching proposed legislation which affects their interests. But there is a well-grounded suspicion that, while various groups of special interests are thus ably taking care of themselves, some not less important general interests are in danger of being overlooked. The things that are everybody's business always stand a chance of being neglected. Bad legislation gets through because somebody urges it and nobody opposes it until it is too late. The "Success Magazine" has been developing a plan for the establishment of what it calls "the people's lobby," to be composed of a group of well-known and public-spirited citizens who, with the aid of competent legal advisers, shall look after the interests of the public when congress is in session as the present lobby looks after the interests of the railroads, and the other great corporations. Some of the men who have already agreed to serve on this committee are Lincoln Steffens, Mark Twain, Benjamin Ide Wheeler, John Mitchell and William Allen White. We wish success to the scheme. The most serious difficulty which we apprehend is that these are all busy men. A man who is running a great university in California or editing a newspaper in Kansas can not keep an eye on congress by day and by night as one does who has no other interest in life but to see that the oil business or the railroad business gets the most generous possible treatment. Still, it is worth trying. It will at least serve as a reminder that the special interests are not the only interests which are to be considered in legislation. In congress, as in the insurance companies, it may be worth while to have a policy-holders' committee.

Magazines.

What is virtually a new magazine begins this month with the first issue of the "American Magazine" under its new management. A defection from the staff of McClure's and the addition of other able writers gives the "American," as its owners, editors and chief contributors, Mr. Phillips, of McClure and Phillips, Ida M. Tarbell, Steffens, White, Baker and Dunne. Their magazine will apparently be devoted largely to good government and social, political and economic reform. The publishers of "Everybody's" have announced a unique weekly which will be at once national and local, to be issued simultaneously at ten cities from New York to San Francisco with identical treatment of general topics and separate treatment of local topics. It will attempt, by a liberal use of telegraph and fast presses, to solve the problem of getting the news of the week into a paper of large circulation before it becomes stale. The "North American Review," which began life nearly a century ago as a quarterly, and became in succession a bi-monthly and a monthly, is now issued fortnightly. It will attempt to present a serious and deliberate study of current topics, as it has always done, and to keep a little nearer to the events than it was possible to do in a monthly.

The Honor of the Service.

A common sailor in the United States Navy has brought suit against an amusement company for excluding him from a place of public entertainment because he wore his uniform. The president has expressed his opinion of the matter by contributing $100 to the expense of the suit. Considering the recent decision of the New York courts in the Metcalf case it is doubtful whether he will win. In that case it was held that the manager of a theater may exclude an undesirable dramatic critic or any other person. It is not bound, like a common carrier, to serve the whole public. Still we hope the sailor will win. The men who are good enough to fight our battles in time of war are good enough to share our amusements in time of peace. Several years ago Kipling wrote a poem in which he voices the complaint of "Tommy Atkins" (the English common soldier) against a similar discrimination. Some of the lines of that poem apply to this present case as pat as Scripture. These lines are taken somewhat at random from the poem:

I went into a public 'ouse to get a pint o' beer,
The publican 'e up and sey, "we serve no red-coats here."
The girls behind the bar they laughed an' giggled fit to die.
I out into the street again an' to myself sey I:

O, it's Tommy this, and Tommy that,
And "Tommy go away;"
But it's thank you, mister Atkins,
When the band begins to play.

I went into a theatre as sober as could be,
They gave a drunk civilian room, but 'adn't none for me;

For it's Tommy this, and Tommy that and
"Tommy, wait outside;"
But it's "special train for Atkins," when
The trooper's on the tide.

Yes, makin' mock o' uniforms that guard you while you sleep,
Is cheaper than them uniforms, and thy're starvation cheap.

For it's Tommy this and Tommy that,
And "chuck him out, the brute,"
But it's "Savior of 'is country," when
The guns begin to shoot.

Where Jesus Placed the Emphasis.—VII.

Prayer.

A foolish question is sometimes raised as to the value of prayer. "Does not God know all things?" it is asked. "What is the use, then, of our telling him our needs?" Another objection is based on the unvarying nature of God's laws. "How can our prayer affect these unchanging laws of God on whose continuity all scientific calculations are based?" This is the objection of the skeptical scientist. It would be easy to answer these questions on philosophic grounds, and to show that they arise out of false and inadequate conceptions of what prayer is, and out of ignorance of some of God's spiritual laws. But the short-cut method of answering these and all other objections to prayer is the undisputed and significant fact that Jesus himself who, whatever men may think of his deity, stands without a peer as a teacher of God and of spiritual things, himself often prayed. How often we read of his going apart from his disciples and from the multitude to pray! Sometimes he seems to have spent all night in prayer. At his baptism in the Jordan, at Capernaum when crowds of sick gathered about him for healing, on the night before choosing his apostles, on the Mount of Transfiguration, at the raising of Lazarus, in the Garden of Gethsemane, and even upon the cross, our Savior prayed. Who that reverences his name and reveres his example can doubt the efficacy of prayer?

Not only did Jesus himself pray, but he taught his disciples to pray, also. Does not this involve the value of prayer? Once when he was praying in their presence, his disciples requested him to teach them to pray. No doubt there was something in his manner of prayer so reverent, so simple, so trustful, so sublime, so uplifting, and so different from what they had been accustomed to hear, it created in them a strong desire to pray like that. In response to their request he gave them that model prayer. The more one studies it, the more he is impressed with its marvelous depth and breadth. Who but the Son of God himself who knew perfectly the mind and character of God on the one hand, and human nature and its needs on the other, could teach such a prayer?

"Our Father!" Here is the deepest meaning of his revelation. He came to show us the Father. How we thank him for the unspeakable privilege of saying, when we pray, "Our Father"! How near that brings him to our hearts! How it encourages the soul to pour into his sympathetic ear the story of its sins, of its needs! How we love to turn away from all the subtle, metaphysical definitions and descriptions of the Almighty, in which theologians have indulged, and come back to the dear, tender, childlike words, "Our Father"! And notice that it is our Father, therefore, we be brethren and must so regard and treat each other.

"Who art in heaven." What matters it where heaven is? It is enough that our Father is there, and our "Father's house" is there. It is the "home of the soul." It is freedom from sin and sorrow and pain and death. With Browning we can all say:

> "But deep within my heart of heart there hid
> Ever the confidence, amends for all,
> That heaven repairs what wrongs earth's journey did."

"Hallowed be Thy name." This is the spirit of devout reverence which recognizes the infinite holiness and righteousness of God. Name, in Bible language, means character.

"Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." A petition for the reign of God over our own hearts and lives, and over all the earth, bringing men in subjection to the will of God, even as are the angels of heaven. Who can breathe that petition meaningfully, without being enlarged and purified by it? How vast the program it suggests! How sublime the end that it contemplates!

"Give us this day our daily bread." Feed us as the father feeds his children, and we will receive it as from thy hand!

"Forgive us our debts as we also have forgiven our debtors." Surely "our Father" will forgive our sins, if we will forgive the wrongs and injuries which others have done us. But we must forgive to be forgiven. So God links our filial relationship to him with our fraternal relationship with our fellowmen.

"And bring us not into temptation but deliver us from the evil one." A recognition of our own human weakness, and of our trust in God for deliverance from the power of the evil one.

We are persuaded that one great hindrance to prayer, as Jesus saw it, is the cherishing of wrong feelings in our heart toward others. To make that lesson emphatic, he adds to the prayer above this encouragement and caution: "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." (Matt. 6:14, 15.) Another hindrance to prayer is our lack of persistence. Jesus emphasized the importance of that in two or three parables in which he taught that "Men ought always to pray and not to faint." This importunity is not to overcome God's reluctance, but to prepare our own hearts for the blessings we ask. Nor must we think that the failure to receive the special thing we ask in the manner in which we expected to receive it, is proof that our prayer has not been answered. Jesus taught us by his own example that our prayers should be in the spirit of submission to the will of God—"Not my will, but Thine be done"! He often gives us much greater blessings than those we ask for, but some times they come in disguise and we do not recognize them.

Again Jesus taught that faith is essential to all prevailing prayer. His most remarkable saying on this point is that in connection with the withered fig tree at which the disciples wondered. "Have faith in God. Verily I say unto you, whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou taken up and cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that what he saith cometh to pass; he shall have it. Therefore I say unto you, All things whatsoever ye pray and ask for, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." (Mark 11:22-24.) No doubt we lose many precious blessings because we do not appropriate them by faith. Here, for instance, is some burden or anxiety, which we feel is too heavy for us to carry. We avail ourselves of the divine promise and "cast our burden on the Lord." We do so in our prayer, and ask him to take the burden from our hearts. Then, instead of thanking him for having done so, and rejoicing in the fact that he has done so, we go on worrying over it, just as before, not believing that he has fulfilled his promise to us! Jesus knew this weakness of our human natures when he said, "What ye ask for believe that ye receive it, and ye shall have it."

Prayer can only live and thrive in the atmosphere of trust in God and of good will toward all our fellowmen. Distrust in God and all feelings of malice, or envy, or hatred toward others, stifle prayer and rob it of its power. One can not, therefore, live a life of prayer except he cultivate the spirit of trust in his heavenly Father, and of kindly feelings toward all his fellowmen, and seek to put away all known sin from his heart and life.

To preach well is a great achievement; but to pray well is a much greater one. "Have you heard our minister preach?" we were once asked when visiting a church. "No," we replied, "but, what is a much better test, we have heard him pray." Spurgeon once asked a visiting preacher to pray, saying: "I never feel that I know a man till I hear him pray." How many preachers prepare their hearts for that most important part of their service, the public prayer?

In view of this teaching of Jesus, and of his own example, we may well doubt if there is sufficient emphasis laid today on the value of prayer, and what prayer is, and its essential conditions. If prayer is the only atmosphere in which men can attain their true spiritual development and accomplish most successfully the great tasks of life, then surely it should have a most prominent place in our pulpits and religious journals, in our church services, in our conventions, and in our daily lives.

Bearing Witness to the Truth.

Jesus told the Roman governor before whose tribunal he had been called, that his mission to this world was to "bear witness to the truth." This, too, is the mission of the Church and of each individual follower of Christ. In this respect each Christian must be like his Master—loyal to the truth as God has given him to see the truth. There is this difference, however, which must always be borne in mind: Jesus saw the truth full-orbed, while we only "know in part and prophesy in part." He saw truth in its proper relation and proportion; we often emphasize one phase of it at the expense of another. What is true of each individual is true of the Church as a whole and of the several groups of Christians, separated from each other by their differences, but claiming the leadership of a common Lord.

Not one of these groups, and no individual member of any of them, sees the truth as a whole, as Jesus saw it, and gives due emphasis to each part of it as he gave. Nevertheless, he expects each individual follower of his to "bear witness to the truth," as he is able to see the truth. He expects his Church to be like its Founder in this respect, and to "bear witness to the truth" as he has given it to see the truth, through evil report as well as through good report. He knows that his disciples do not all see the truth just alike, and he knew that they would not thus see it, from the beginning. Nevertheless, he taught them to be one in him, and prayed that they all might be one, even as he and the Father are one. This means that he expects them to be one in the things that are vital and essential—the things without which one can not be a Christian—and to have sufficient charity, not to be alienated from each other by unavoidable differences in matters not vital. In other words, he expects each of us to give others credit for being true to their own consciences as we are trying to be true to ours. This mutual confidence in each other's sincerity and honesty of conviction in spite of differences of opinion is the basis for mutual fellowship. But this is the element that is lacking in the genuine sectarian and bigot. It is hard for him to believe that other people can be honest and differ from him! It is quite impossible for him to believe that others can be Christian while having a different understanding of some of Christ's teaching. It is just here that the logic-chopper gets in his work, and proves to his own satisfaction that all those who do not interpret Christ's ordinances, as he does, are non-Christian. That the spirit of Christ is too large to be confined to the grooves of his logic, has never dawned upon him. That Christianity is broader than a syllogism, with a human content in the premises, is a fact he has not yet discovered.

What then? If one may be a Christian with a faulty view, let us say, of the ordinances; if he is a Christian, as Mr. Campbell said, who believes on Christ with his whole heart and obeys him to the full measure of his knowledge of Christ's will, even though that knowledge be imperfect, shall we then abandon our practice of insisting on New Testament conditions of membership in our local churches, as we understand those conditions? That would not be bearing witness to the truth as God has given us to see the truth. If we believe, for instance, that the two ordinances bear distinct testimony to great fundamental Gospel facts, and that this testimony is needed to-day and will be needed while the church lasts, we must, so far as in us lies, see that this testimony is perpetuated in the Church. God expects us to bear this witness, but he does not expect us to un-Christianize all who do not see these truths as we see them, but rather that we should, in Christian love and forbearance, seek to instruct them in the way of the Lord more perfectly as respects these matters, while we, on our part, hold ourselves in an attitude to receive instruction from others in those things wherein they may be bearing witness to truths that we have not fully seen nor realized.

In this way, as it seems to us, we may bear witness to the truth as God has given us to see the truth, while "forbearing one another in love," as God has given us to know the supreme power and excellence of love. In this way we may be loyal to the truth which Christ taught, and at the same time loyal to the spirit which Christ manifested, and to the principle of unity for which we plead. To be "sound in faith" is well; to be "sound in charity" is even better. To know the will of Christ is vastly important; but to have the mind of Christ—the spirit of Christ—without which we are none of his—that is vital; that is essential.

Rules of Church Order.

We are continually receiving inquiries about the proper method of procedure in cases of friction relating to the calling or resignation of a minister, or the election or resignation of some officer in the church. There are a few plain, simple, scriptural rules that will meet all these cases, and prevent friction, if they are strictly adhered to. We mention a few of these:

(1) "Do nothing through faction or through vainglory, but in lowliness of mind each counting other better than himself."—Phil. 2:3.

(2) "Let all things be done decently and in order." 1 Cor. 14:40.

(3) "Whatsoever ye do, in word or in deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." Col. 3:17.

(4) "Let all things be done unto edifying." 1 Cor. 14:26.

(5) "Neither as lording it over the charge allotted to you, but making yourselves ensamples to the flock." 1 Pet. 5:3.

We guarantee that a faithful observance of these rules of church order will solve all our local church problems relating to the calling and dismissal of pastors and other church officials, and growing out of their relation to the churches they serve. We commend them to the churches everywhere in the interest of good order, unity and efficiency.

Notes and Comments.

It gives us great pleasure to report the good news that comes to us this week, of progress in all the societies. The American Christian Missionary Society wires us as follows: "We have the best record in our history." Considering the fact of a change of secretary during the year and that several months elapsed before his successor was appointed, this is a remarkable showing and indicates unmistakably that the work of the home society is gaining a larger place in the hearts of the brotherhood and is sharing more justly in its liberality. In this we rejoice, and we are sure all our readers will rejoice with us. We congratulate the new secretary, W. J. Wright, and his assistant, G. B. Ranshaw, and the Home Board on this advance movement in spite of the drawback mentioned. A telegram promised from Brother Rains, but not received at this writing, will be found in our Budget and will show a gain over the previous year.

And so both wings of our mission work, the Home and the Foreign, have made substantial gains during the last year. We have never shared in the fear that any free and intelligent discussion of any vital question relating to our welfare would interfere with the offerings of the churches for our missionary work. Nothing could be more unfortunate for the welfare of our missionary organizations than the impression that such discussion is inconsistent with their growth, for out of such discussion, as we all know, our movement came, and has made whatever progress it has made. We make no defense of any other kind of discussion. The disposition of a few to hold our missionary societies responsible for certain measures wholly outside their control is unjust to the missionary societies and contrary to fact.

A line from Brother Mohorter says: "Total receipts for the Benevolent Association during the past year were $88,107.06, not including real estate to the value of $17,286, making a total of $105,393. This, too, shows encouraging progress by this splendid organization.

While we have no definite figures from the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, we have heard enough to know that they are going to make a splendid report. Our congratulations all round to our missionary leaders and to the brotherhood at large for this splendid advance along all the lines of our work. But we do well to remember that we are only at the beginnings of things in all the lines of our work. We have not reached the limits of our possibilities. The goal is still far ahead of us, but we are pressing on steadily toward it.

Editor's Easy Chair.

When a baby makes his first effort to walk and falls, the parental hand near by catches it, steadies it, and encourages it to try again, until the little fellow has learned to use his legs, and has mastered the art of walking. It is in this spirit that Uncle Sam seems to be dealing with the infant republic of Cuba in its first effort at self-government. The infant has fallen down, it would seem, and failed in its first attempt at independent government. But the beneficent hand of Uncle Sam was there to catch it, and prevent it from self-destruction. He will coach it a little more, help it to get on its feet, and give it a second trial. A very beneficent old gentleman is Uncle Samuel, but he will not hesitate to use a switch if necessary to correct this Antillean youngster if he shows himself to be obstreperous and inclined to disturb the peace of his neighbors.

The art of self-government is not half so easy as it may seem to an onlooker. It requires the development, in a good degree, of the sterling qualities of courage, self-restraint, love of liberty, and the love of justice which underlies liberty, respect for law, and reliance upon constitutional processes for righting wrongs rather than upon force. Our forefathers had to go to school for many years to develop these virtues, and it may be that Cuba will have to take a few more lessons in the school of experience, before she can acquit herself creditably in the eyes of the world as a self-governing people. We of this great republic have many things yet to learn and to practice before our government, the freest and best on earth, as we believe, shall satisfactorily accomplish all the ends for which government was instituted among men.

If any one thinks we have reached perfection as a government, let him stop to think of how often justice miscarries while the guilty goes unpunished and the innocent suffer; how many good laws are not enforced, and how many bad laws are not repealed; how all legislation hitherto has proved ineffectual in preventing human greed and avarice, acting through corporations and private monopolies, from trampling under their feet the principles of equity and of righteousness, and preying upon the public and especially the helpless classes; let him think of the anomaly of a government, established to insure justice and promote domestic tranquillity, legalizing and protecting a traffic like that in intoxicating drinks, which tends continually and only to public demoralization, to domestic brawls and unhappiness, to individual degradation and ruin, to the multiplication of widows and orphans, to poverty and to wretchedness. Some day, please God, we shall get beyond all this and look back upon it as we now look back upon the awful cruelties and atrocities which marked the history of the Roman empire.

Welcome October with its brown, russet, yellow, and crimson leaves, its cooler and more bracing atmosphere, with the home-coming of the wanderers and the resumption of activities in church and business circles! This latitude has no more glorious month in all the year than October. There is that in its air which causes the blood to tingle in the veins, quickens the step, intensifies the energy and banishes pessimism from all but the hopeless. To our readers it is always a welcome month because it brings around our great national convocation—the reunion of a mighty host of those committed to the program of Christian union in order to the world's conversion. Many eager eyes are now turned to that queenly city yonder by the lakeside, almost within hearing of the thunder of Niagara, whither our tribes will soon be wending their way to strike glad hands of Christian fellowship, to sit down together in brotherly counsel, and to listen to inspiring reports of progress in the Master's work in this and other lands. Those who by reason of untoward circumstances or indifference, shall fail to attend this great gathering of Disciples at Buffalo, will miss one of the best and most inspiring things which October brings to us.

One of the "songs of ascent" which the Jews used to sing on their way up to Jerusalem to attend their great annual feasts, was:

"I was glad when they said unto me,
Let us go unto the house of Jehovah.
Our feet are standing
Within thy gates, O Jerusalem.

* * * * * * *

Whither the tribes go up, even the tribes of Jehovah,
For an ordinance for Israel,
To give thanks unto the name of Jehovah."

Another of these songs ran:

"Except Jehovah build the house,
They labor in vain that build it:
Except Jehovah keep the city,
The watchman waketh but in vain."

This was the secret of Israel's strength among the nations—their trust in Jehovah. Let us go up to our Jerusalem leaning on the divine strength and feeling that it is only as God shall build us up that we can grow into a holy temple, a place for his indwelling. I am sure we can all say of our Zion,

"Peace be within thy walls,
And prosperity within thy palaces."

The strength of any people is to make their cause identical with the cause of God, and thus to feel that his strength is their strength, and his victory is their victory. This is why Jesus said, "Without me ye can do nothing." And this is why Paul said, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

In his tender, reverent prayer the pastor said: "Teach us, O God, that our daily duties are the very altar-stairs that lead up to Thee." Is not this the very lesson that many of us need to learn? We pray for a sense of nearness to God; that he will be with us continually; and this is the desire, no doubt, of every sincere, pious heart. And yet, is it sometimes forgotten that our daily duties, faithfully and conscientiously performed, are the very steps—the "altar stairs"—that lead up to God, and to the sweetest fellowship with him?" There are, of course, moments of quiet meditation and prayer in every earnest life, and these can not be dispensed with by one who would know God and enjoy the comfort of his abiding presence. But these periods of repose, and quiet communion with God, need to be supplemented by active toil in meeting the daily duties, and in bearing what would otherwise be the drudgery of our daily tasks, if they are to mean to us all that they are intended to mean. Even prayer soon ceases to be profitable if there be no earnest effort of the soul to do the will of God as that will comes to us in the manifold duties of life. Prayer ceases to be vital when it is no longer an inspiration to sacrifice and labor for human good and for the advancement of the kingdom of God.

We ran across a little anonymous poem the other day that caused some heart-searching. Perhaps it may have that effect upon our Easy Chair readers. It follows:

There is a faith unmixed with doubt,
A love all free from fear;
A walk with Jesus, where is felt
His presence always near.
There is a rest that God bestows,
Transcending pardon's peace,
A lowly, sweet simplicity,
Where inward conflicts cease.

There is a service God-inspired,
A zeal that tireless grows,
Where self is crucified with Christ,
And joy unceasing flows.
There is a being "right with God,"
That yields to His commands
Unswerving, true fidelity,
A loyalty that stands.

There is a meekness free from pride,
That feels no anger rise
At slights, or hate, or ridicule,
But crosses count a prize.
There is a patience that endures
Without a fret or care,
But joyful sings, "His will be done,"
"My Lord's sweet grace I share."

There is a purity of heart,
A cleanness of desire,
Wrought by the Holy Comforter
With sanctifying fire.
There is a glory that awaits
Each blood-washed soul on high,
When Christ returns to take his bride,
With him beyond the sky.

My God! I thank thee who has made
The earth so bright—
So full of splendor and of joy,
Beauty and light;
So many glorious things are here
Noble and right. —A. A. Proctor.

Our Cause in Arkansas

By J. N. Jessup

A LITTLE HISTORY AS EXPLANATION.

Some time ago I wrote to G. A. Hoffman, our statistician, on behalf of our state board, requesting him to change the representation of Arkansas in our statistical tables from 425 churches to 300, and from 36,000 members to 20,000. I said there were not now and never had been 435 churches and 35,000 members in Arkansas; that figures from this state had always been an exaggerated guess; that no satisfactory count had ever been made; that even the revised figures were probably largely in excess of the actual facts; that the large figures put us in an unfavorable light before the brotherhood, etc., etc.

Brother Hoffman requested me to write an explanation of this state of affairs as it seemed to me. He asked, "Why is this true? Our cause was planted in Little Rock and Fayetteville and other important towns as early as in many other towns." He said: "Give the reasons for our losing growth and why we are not gaining in membership."

I undertake to answer these questions as best I can. The phrase, "reasons for our losing growth" is misleading. We have not lost anything. We simply never had the figures attributed to us. In giving the causes of our slow growth I will name first, the lack of leadership. It is true that our cause was preached here at an early date. Dr. R. F. Hall, of Kentucky, preached in Little Rock and organized a church as early as 1832. J. T. Johnson and R. T. Rickets, both of Kentucky, preached in Little Rock and Fayetteville in 1845 and 1848. Charles Carlton did some preaching in the state. Robert Graham established a school in Fayetteville just before the war. His school went down in the wreck of the civil war and Brother Graham left the state. Not one of these men who were capable of leadership remained in the state. Arkansas has not a single great name among its pioneers. Arkansas has no Nestor. In this respect the state has been irretrievably impoverished. For twenty-five years after the war there is not a single name of note. Brother N. M. Ragland, of Fayetteville, although he has been in the state twenty years, can not be called a pioneer. Compare this situation with Missouri, Kentucky, Indiana or Ohio. A single name like Alexander Procter would have immeasurably enriched the pioneer days of Arkansas.

Second, the lack of progressive and aggressive methods, or the prevalence of anti-ism. No states of the union have suffered at the hands of the nonprogressive or "anti" element like Tennessee and Arkansas. Tennessee is the fountain head of the most blighting spirit that ever touched our church. Arkansas is next door neighbor to the high apostolic oracle of anti-ism. It was inevitable that Arkansas should suffer the blight of its contagion. Practically all the early preachers of the state took their cue from Nashville and reiterated the Gospel of stagnation throughout this state. The results are sorely manifest. Our cause in nearly every community has been kept in the death valley. Our church in hundreds of places has become a hiss and a byword among the intelligent, cultured and spiritually minded people. It could be said in truth that the spirit of this restoration movement was never preached in this state from the days of Robert Graham (1860) until recent years. Between these dates there is a long stretch of years that, in the history of the Christian church in this state, ought to be known as the "Dark Ages." Two-thirds of the preachers in the state now are the Nashville type of men. To this very good day, when these disintegrating spirits are forced out of Kentucky and Missouri they take refuge in Arkansas, and the small bands of believers that, with the right kind of preachers, would soon make themselves felt for good, become a prey of these men whose touch is death. I have known these men, unable to get support among their own kind, hold their scruples in abeyance and accept work with a progressive church, under the specious plea of reforming that church! The end can easily be forecast. In estimating church statistics these "antis" are put in at full value, when in truth they do not consider themselves of us and in reality have nothing in common with us. This restoration movement has been immeasurably hindered, and in no wise helped by these people.

Third, the lack of a church school. What Bethany has done for Virginia and the entire east; Kentucky University and the Bible College for Kentucky; Hiram for Ohio; Butler for Indiana; Drake for Iowa; Christian and Columbia for Missouri; Texas Christian for Texas; Eureka for Illinois—that thing no school or college has done for Arkansas. We have not the slightest sign of a school or college. Who can say what our cause in this state would have been if Robert Graham and his seminary, that was the real beginning of what is now our State University, had remained in Fayetteville? Truly the situation would have been different. This would have been the antidote to all littleness and ignorant, bigoted sectarianism. This school would have sent out scores of young men in this state to preach the spirit of the Master as conceived in the greatest religious movement of the last century. A different story would have been told. I would not now be writing on "the slowness of our growth in Arkansas."

There is one other consideration that should have a place here, and that is the lack of people. Arkansas is a thinly populated state. We have only 900,000 white population. This in 53,850 square miles makes only 16 people to a square mile. Compare this average with Kentucky, 53, or Missouri, 44, and you will see that we have not had the people to work on. Until very recent years Arkansas was an almost unknown land. Migration westward and southward passed over Arkansas as an uninviting land. The immigrant was lured by the vast plains of Texas and Oklahoma and Indian Territory. Consequently the population changed but little and ideas and habits of thought did not change. It can readily be seen that anti-ism, once rooted in the soil here, would long abide. Very few immigrants came in to teach the native people a more excellent way. Anti-ism has been driven from Texas and the territories by northern immigration. If we could have had the immigration into this state that Texas and the territories have had the nonprogressive element would have seen the light and we would have had in every community a nucleus for a live, progressive and aggressive church.

Compared with other states Arkansas, with all its hindrances, has not done so badly. In Indiana, one of the six strong states, we have 5 per cent of the population; in Missouri, another one of the six, we have 6 per cent; in Georgia, less than 1 per cent of white population; in Texas 4½ per cent of white population; in Colorado 1 per cent; in Arkansas 2 per cent white population.

What of the outlook? Better things, far better things are in store for Arkansas. We have now a better body of preachers than ever before, and more are coming all the time. E. C. Browning is now at the head of the state work.

First Christian Church, Fayetteville.

The nonprogressive element is in retreat everywhere. The preachers who train with that crowd are speaking their sentiments "softly." A great transition is coming over the people. The light is shining in the dark places. People have found out the more excellent way. They are demanding progress. Railroads are being built. Anti-ism can not stand the coming of railroads. Railroads bring a more modern type of life, and when a modern type of life appears the antis take to the woods.

Steps are being taken for the establishment of a Bible chair. This seems most feasible now. No school has heretofore been established because we have been a "poor folk." Arkansas has been poor, very poor. We have had no people of large means. That has been true in the past. We lacked both the spirit and the means of building a school. That is true no longer. We have now the spirit, the enterprise, the money to do worthy things. It will be done.

Arkansas is going to have the people. She is awaking from her sleep of ages. In five years she has become famous. We have just found out that she is one of the richest of states in natural resources. Her vast mineral wealth, her almost boundless tracts of timber, her agricultural possibilities—these have only been touched. And the people are coming; thousands are pouring into the state from the north and east. Our church is sharing the benefits of this incoming multitude. In less than ten years Arkansas will report astonishing things.

—T. N. Kincaid paid The Christian-Evangelist force a visit while on his way from Cincinnati where the Clark fund, under control of the Richmond Street Church, has been renewed for two years for the benefit of the work at Hot Springs, Ark.

On the same pages with Brother Jessup's article we place a few illustrations that we have been able to obtain.

E. T. Edmonds, of Fort Smith, Ark., has been pastor of the church there since 1891, with the exception of two years when he served the church at Boston, Mass. From a membership of 100 the church at Fort Smith is now close to the 500 mark. We regret that we have not a photograph of the church building which is one of the best in the state, costing about $35,000, with the lot. The brethren are contemplating the formation of a second church, and the prospects for our cause are good.

Little Rock has the distinction of probably being the first place in Arkansas where preaching was done by any of our pioneers. There was a small church of Baptists meeting in a log house at Little Rock in 1832. Dr. F. R. Hall, of Kentucky, did some preaching for them. After awhile they abandoned the name of Baptist and the Philadelphia Confession of Faith as an authorized statement of doctrine, and determined to call themselves simply Christians, and the church a Church of God or a Church of Christ. An account of this work may be found in the Millennial Harbinger for 1832. The present pastor of the church there, J. Newton Jessup, took up the work in 1898. He is a graduate of Butler University and was pastor at three important points in Indiana prior to entering upon his successful work in Arkansas. The chapel of a new Christian church erected by the congregation of the First Christian church has just been opened, and we give on these pages illustrations of the existing church and of the new chapel. This latter will be occupied for church services, Sunday-school, and auxiliary services while the main auditorium is under construction. The chapel is built of solid brick walls, faced with St. Louis brick of a red granite shade. It is elaborately trimmed with white granite from Carthage, Mo., and its cost has been $15,000. The assembly room on the second floor will accommodate 300 people. The first floor is the Sunday-school department proper. In the basement there is a large dining hall. The building is thoroughly modern in its appointments and is equipped for all the purposes of a church home.

N. M. Ragland, of Fayetteville, Ark., though not an early pioneer, is one of the preachers most intimately identified with the Church of Christ in Arkansas. E. C. Browning, the corresponding secretary and state evangelist, says of Brother Ragland that "the mantle of Robert Graham could scarcely have fallen on more worthy shoulders." That sweet character established a college at Fayetteville which went down in the wreck of the Civil War. Bro. Ragland was called to the church in 1885 from the pastorate at Carthage, Mo. The fruits of a score of years have more than justified the wisdom of the choice made. The work so well begun by Robert Graham, whose ministry lasted 14 years there, was revived. Beginning with a membership of 80 when Brother Ragland preached his anniversary sermon last November he was able to report that to this number had been added 930, the majority of them confessions, during the twenty years, with an enrollment at that time of 300; to this may be added, in part at least, the membership at the Second Church and at Farmington, children of the First Church.

Hebrew Poetry---Illustrating Nature Treatment in the Psalms

(Concluded from Last Week.)

By JAMES EGBERT

The usual Hebrew method of treating nature is as a chamber of Jahve's Presence or as his garment, his veil through which he ever breaks to reveal himself. Never is nature beautiful in itself. Jehovah makes it resplendent by his shining through. It is beautiful that it may be fitting. They treat nature just as it appears to them—as they see it. At once does the poet pass to God, the great reality. In his brevity he leaves much for the beholder to discover. Rapidly does he pass from image to image. Often does he use concealed imagery.

The ninetieth Psalm is generally known as a service for the burial of the dead. A casual glance suggests gloom. A careful study in view of concealed imagery shows it to be a hymn of mountain sunrise. It is vision that rises from the setting of the concealed image of a mountain sunrise to the climax,

> "So teach us to number our days,
> That we may get us an heart of wisdom."

No unity in nature treatment is evident. No unity in style. The only unity displayed in the Psalter is true in Jehovah under all circumstances. In battle song or nature lyric, in plant or reverie or national hymn, in pilgrim march or dirge, the one key note is praise to Jehovah who keeps Israel and is faithful forever.

Their treatment of nature is best illustrated in the Psalms themselves. Psalm 29 describes a thunder storm such as one may see in Palestine as it comes down out of the Lebanons and travels the entire land to the south. This storm first disturbs the heavens then falls to earth. The poet at once reads the message across the face of the storm. It is the soul trembling under divine judgment. Men become insensible of God as he comes in graciousness. He must come in a strong way that all may feel him. As the storm raised in heaven crashes to earth's remotest bounds, the highest heights as well as the lowest depths experience the power of Jehovah. In what different ways the different parts of the earth feels this is brietly but vividly portrayed. On the heights the sons of God, the heavenly spirits, experience joy and become jubilant. The dark storm cloud brings to them a new revelation of divine power. On earth there is failure to understand the angry God and there is resistance. On earth the storm prevails. Vast forests and great mountains are swept away before the storm. Even man falls before its terror. Yet the poet is not dismayed. This awful manifestation is but an expression of Jehovah's nearness. He sings,

> "Hark, Jahve is on the waters,
> The God of Glory thundered,
> Jahve is on many waters,
> Hark, Jahve, is in his strength."

It is he that rides upon those storm clouds. The terror brings him near. His power is on exhibition, 'tis Jahve that thunders. But he controls the forces of nature. The poet hears from the heights, the palace above, all speaking, "Glory." So may earth be glad. Jahve is King. He rules. Right will triumph. Blessing is secured to earth in the very character of its King—he is all powerful. The poem closes with peace. The poet has a feeling of relief because Jehovah does not always come thus; it is only occasional; he calls it Jahve coming in his holiday attire.

In Psalms 19 we have a calm. The usual Palestinian sky shines. Yet the natural beauty fails to captivate the poet's heart. Beyond this is Jahve. The clear, shining, silent firmament speaks the glory of God. It unveils the divine mind. From the seen to the unseen. From the particulars to the universal, soars the Hebrew mind. This order, splendor, tranquillity—ever in unbroken succession, day unto day and night unto night, tell of the unchangeableness of God.

Psalm 8 is a night-song. The poet under the midnight sky is overwhelmed in the face of the glory of the noon and the myriads of stars. He is made to feel as a child under its splendor. As one in despair he cries out "What is man, frail child of the earth, that thou thinkest of him?" But nature is controlled and ordered by Jehovah. He has made it for man and made man lord over it. So from his quiet contemplation of nature, he feels that man is the crowning work and that glorious is Jahve.

The sixty-fifth is a sweet psalm. It falls in three parts. In the first, history stands as a witness to Jehovah's goodness. In the second, nature joins voices with history in his praise. Here are pictured the mountains, the sea with its billows. The third part carries one along banks of full rivers, through fields of corn growing under the showers, into pastures and meadows, upon heights and into valleys. It is a song of springtime for it is the annual visit of Jehovah. Softness and tenderness combine to make this a beautiful prayer of thanksgiving to Jehovah for his loving kindness.

The one hundred twenty-first Psalm well illustrates how nature appealed to the Hebrews.

> "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills—
> From whence cometh my help?"

Not from the hills would the help come. No true Israelite ever got the needed help from the hills. But there was a helper beyond the hills. The hills but cut the skyline for the appearance of Jahve. Upon the background of the skyline the poet saw him as the helper and keeper of Israel moving about the sky the clouds as a shield that the sun might not smite.

Psalm 104 is a creation psalm. It is replete with vivid nature pictures. It is no scientific view of creation that he gets, but just as it would appear to one looking out upon the world with the creation story of Genesis as a basis. The universe as the garment of God and he shining through all his attributes is the one sublime thought that underlies the poem. True to the Genesis idea, he begins with light. Jehovah has clothed himself with it. Thus he moves about the heavens, stretching them out like a curtain. The clouds are his chariots, He walks on the wings of the wind. He busies himself in dispatching his servants, wind and fire. Above it all is the thunder—his voice. The waters flee at its sound. Up rise mountains; down sink the valleys. Jehovah is now at work on the earth. Then the poet in order presents picture upon picture of Jehovah adjusting and peopling the earth. To the poet even all nature must look to God for food and renewal—else it would expire and return to the dust. He hears the roar of the lion as a prayer for meat. The completed inhabited earth is all a beauty and a joy save one blot to mar—sin. He closes this magnificent psalm with the customary Jewish feeling, "Be the sinners consumed from the earth, and the wicked be no more." The cause of this sin-blighted earth is man's failure to know God. Israel's inspired poets were ever singing of the time when > "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

CAREFUL DOCTOR

Prescribed Change of Food Instead of Drugs.

It takes considerable courage for a doctor to deliberately prescribe only food for a despairing patient, instead of resorting to the usual list of medicines.

There are some truly scientific physicians among the present generation who recognize and treat conditions as they are and should be treated regardless of the value to their pockets. Here's an instance:

"Four years ago I was taken with severe gastritis and nothing would stay on my stomach, so that I was on the verge of starvation.

"I heard of a doctor who had a summer cottage near me—a specialist from N. Y.—and as a last hope, sent for him.

"After he examined me carefully he advised me to try a small quantity of Grape-Nuts at first, then as my stomach became stronger to eat more.

"I kept at it and gradually got so I could eat and digest three teaspoonfuls. Then I began to have color in my face, memory became clear, where before everything seemed a blank. My limbs got stronger and I could walk. So I steadily recovered.

"Now after a year on Grape-Nuts I weigh 153 lbs. My people were surprised at the way I grew fleshy and strong on this food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

In the Abyss By William Durban

Prelude.

Scotland is mourning the loss of her most refined preacher, Rev. Dr. George Matheson. This renowned Presbyterian has just died suddenly at North Berwick. He was the prince of poet-preachers since the death some years ago of John Pulsford. George Matheson lost his eyesight at the age of 20, yet such were his intellectual and oratorical gifts that he rose to be recognized as one of the most eloquent preachers in the Scottish pulpit. In 1886 he became a minister in the large city congregation of St. Bernard's, Edinburgh, and remained there till his retirement a few years ago. Dr. Matheson was the author of one of the best-known hymns in the Scottish hymnal, "O love that will not let me go," which, set to music by the late Dr. Peace, of Glasgow, is known all the world over. The little "Meditations," which for many years appeared weekly from Dr. Matheson's pen in the London "Christian World," were lyrical gems of prose poetry, each being a cut-gem of thought of purest ray serene. There is no one to fill the place of the blind Scottish preacher as a thinker.

The Bitter Cry of Poor Respectables.

Perhaps my American readers can hardly appreciate what I mean by "poor respectables." Unfortunately, in any European country the expression would be anywhere comprehended with painful and mournful facility. In England, which is far richer than any other country next to the United States (now leading the world in wealth), we are face to face with an appalling problem. Whatever may be the real producing cause, or causes, the vast majority of the British people are struggling with economic conditions of a cruel character. It is true that the vast masses of the working classes are not plunged into the abject penury and the actual want of decent food that they suffered in the days after the Battle of Waterloo, and before the famous repeal of the corn laws by Sir Robert Peel 70 years since. But though the standard of living for the great working class has risen yet the greater part of these are toiling even now for very little more than a bare subsistence, and one in every seventeen of our population is a pauper dependent on charity, while incalculable numbers are always on the verge of becoming such. But there is a very large section more to be pitied. Education is now practically universal and millions of the people are really cultured. I rarely meet any fellow citizen of either sex who could be called ignorant or illiterate. The generaly intelligence of the people, indeed, astonishes me. I knew that when I was a lad it was needful for preachers, if they had sympathy with the common people and were anxious to be understood by them, to use the simplest diction in the pulpit, and to refrain from indulging in elaborate or profound thought. But the conditions have altogether changed. Multitudes of our mechanics and poor laborers are capable of writing, when they feel impelled, letters to the newspapers on their grievances. These appear in great numbers, and many of them would do credit to a professor of political economy. But at this moment an agonizing correspondence is in full blast. It relates to the sad conditions of many thousands of well educated people who can find no way of gaining a livelihood.

Before the Abyss.

Hundreds of lurid and tragic letters have been appearing in the London "Daily News" during the past few weeks, disclosing the position in which the writers find themselves. They all proclaim themselves just about to fall into the abyss of want and despair, unless some extraordinary interposition of Providence should save them from the threatened doom. All are highly respectable. All have lived in good society. All have behaved well. They are victims of misfortune, owing to our social conditions. And no one seems to know what to advise them to do. The editors confess themselves puzzled. Here then we have in old England, with all its vast wealth, a cataract of humanity tumbling over into the black gulf from the depths of which very few ever emerge. The victims fall out of sight, wither and perish, uncared for and unknown. This is a condition of things unknown in America and other new countries. But new countries will become old. The United States will fill up. Then the crucial social problems will challenge solution there also, if the same social system is to continue. Is that system of God's ordinance? This is, I make bold to say, the paramount question which will call for answer in the near future. Are countless numbers of people who are willing to work, and are capable of doing useful work in various directions, to be condemned to failure and to misery through no fault of their own?

The Churches Indicted.

Of course a loud outcry is being raised and re-echoed against the churches and against Christianity, because religion seems helpless in face of the dire needs of myriads who only need timely aid and find none to succor them. In this country the rich are growing richer, and the poor are growing poorer. Here is the reason why I write this article. A great responsibility lies on the aggregate Christian Church today. Humanity is beginning everywhere to murmur impatiently at a state of society which can not possibly be in accordance with the mind of the Son of Man. The socialist dream is of course a delusion; but increasing numbers of the people in Germany, France and Britain are becoming dreamers in that direction. I am aware of the splendid efforts of the various institutional churches, but your American Dr. Dixon, of Boston, who has just resigned the pastorate of such a church in Boston, declares that from a spiritual point of view that kind of church is a failure. He found that the employment agency, etc., was "a millstone round the neck of the church." Moreover, he holds that the institutional church, besides helping to pauperize some, repels the self-respecting poor who are not in need of assistance. This is a very serious conclusion, because in Britain the institutional church is in many quarters imagined to be a short cut to the millennium, and there is to-day a tendency rapidly growing to look on all ordinary churches as antiquated cumberers of the ground, or as religious drawing rooms and social clubs, where comfortable, selfish and luxurious folk enjoy themselves during a good time on earth while passing on to the celestial drawing-rooms reserved for them in the mansions of the blessed. That is the sort of sentiment cherished and now being sullenly expressed amongst large and growing members of the British proletariat. I can not say that I wonder at it. In another early communication I may say why.

RIGHT HOME

Doctor Recommends Postum from Personal Test.

No one is better able to realize the injurious action of caffeine—the drug in coffee—on the heart, than the doctor.

When the doctor himself has been relieved by simply leaving off coffee and using Postum, he can refer with full conviction to his own case.

A Mo. physician prescribes Postum for many of his patients because he was benefited by it. He says:

"I wish to add my testimony in regard to that excellent preparation—Postum. I have had functional or nervous heart trouble for over 15 years, and part of the time was unable to attend to my business.

"I was a moderate user of coffee and did not think drinking it hurt me. But on stopping it and using Postum instead, my heart has got all right, and I ascribe it to the change from coffee to Postum.

"I am prescribing it now in cases of sickness, especially when coffee does not agree, or affects the heart, nerves or stomach.

"When made right it has a much better flavor than coffee, and is a vital sustainer of the system. I shall continue to recommend it to our people, and I have my own case to refer to." As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

I do not know that I can define religion. The word occurs but five times in the Bible. Some derive it from a Latin word to "reconsider," others from a word signifying "to bind fast." The first is Cicero's and it is the reasonable origin. So religion would denote diligent study of whatever pertains to the worship of God, and those who show great zeal in this were called religiosi, and their conduct religio. The foundation of all religion rests upon belief in the existence of God, and the work of religion deals with man's duty to God.

There is such a thing as the science of religion. Science has three steps: Observation of facts, induction of laws, verification of these laws by experiment. Facts of conscience, faith, hope, love, are real; moral laws are real; the verification of these laws is real; spiritual expeences are real. Nothing is more real than religion. In my recent travels I observed this fact, that everywhere we came face to face with religion. In Egypt before Christ, before the Trojan war, before the time of Homer or the commonwealth of Israel there was religion. Go up the Nile. One sees what was once splendid buildings with walls covered with carved figures and hieroglyphic inscriptions; groups of pyramids; old Memphis, Thebes, Karnak, Luxor; temples, palaces, obelisks, majestic tombs; every town its Gods, every day its festival, every street its temple; priests, prayers, incense, processions, festivals, hymns and rituals; even dogs, cats and crocodiles worshiped, and over all, one supreme being.

We are in Athens. It is the time of the Pan-Athenaic festival. All Greece comes to do homage to the Virgin Goddess. It is the age of Periceles, Phidias, Sophocles, Euripides, Socrates. Anaxagoras has first taught the doctrine of one Supreme being and Aspasia has the same thought. There they go. We can picture the scene. Old men carrying green granches of olive, soldiers with shields and spears, strangers with boats showing they came frrom afar, women with pots of sacred water, young men singing hymns, virgins of noble families carrying in baskets implements of sacrifice. So they wind up the Acropolis, covered with temples of polished marble, on to the Parthenon, the one structure in all the world to-day of unsurpassed majesty. Egyptian worship was somber, mysterious; that of the Greeks bright and joyous.

We may go farther into Asia. Another race, speaking a different language, we shall find, worshiping other gods; a vast priesthood, temples, sacrifices, prayers; hymns to the sun, the heavens, the dawn, fire, air, the elements. Time disappears; Eternity is in the heart. To be absolved in God is their thought. In Persia, another great race and religion. The supreme being is worshiped under symbol of fire. Without the Egyptian idea of transmigration, or the Greek thought of festivity, but the mighty battle between good and evil—Ormazd and Ahriman. In the deserts of Arabia among its wandering peoples, a man comes forth with a great religious conviction—faith in a supreme being and abhorrence of all inferior worship, and soon all the world of his time is aflame with his idea.

So everywhere, from the earliest times, among Assyrians, Babylonians, Phoenicians, Carthaginians, Druids, Astecs—in China, Japan, Burmah, Thibet—religion, religion, religion! Where did they come from? What is their value? Wherein do they differ? Wherein do they agree? What is the great lesson we draw from this universal acknowledgment of man's need of God and man's relation to God?

Take up the great names which give evidence of this universal condition. Here is Job, greatest of all the men of the East, who wrote the greatest poem in human history on the greatest problem of human experience. Here is Solomon, one of the most extraordinary characters named in the Holy Scriptures, the wisest of men. "Thou Solomon, my son, know thou the God of thy father, and serve him with a perfect heart and willing mind, for the Lord searcheth all hearts. If thou seek him he will be found of thee, but if thou forsake him he will cast thee off forever." And Solomon sums up all wisdom in one word: "Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole of man"—not the whole duty, nor the whole interest, but "the whole of man"! Here is Cyrus, the most accomplished prince of profane history. "He is my shepherd and shall perform my pleasure." Dying, he calls his children about him: "Fear the Deity who never dies; who sees all things; whose power is infinite. Fear him and let that fear prevent you from ever doing or deliberating to do anything contrary to religion and virtue." Here is Socrates, greatest of heathen, whose life and death are full of religious spirit and beauty and power; and here is Confucius, the Chinese philosopher, of exalted piety, dying lamented by an empire. Here is Paul. "Behold, I go bound in the spirit to Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there; save that in every city bonds and afflictions abide me. But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God. I am ready to be offered up and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day." Here is Ignatius, facing the wild beasts. Here is Polycarp in the flame. Here are Louis IX of France, and Charles V of Germany, Jane, Queen of Navarre, and Lady Jane Gray, Walter Raleigh, Bacon and Oxenstiern, Grotius, John Selden, "the glory of the English nation," Salmasius, Dante, Pascal, Sir Isaac Newton, Victoria, Gladstone. Here is the supreme court of the United States, the greatest, the most powerful tribunal on earth; the body which sets aside decrees of presidents and congresses, and which is supposed to be made up of the greatest masters in the matter of weighing evidence; and from the foundation of the government, made up of Christian men, religious men; not a skeptic ever on the bench!

What a power religion has over the minds and hearts and lives of men! What an impossible thing to root out and destroy that which is so woven into, history. Society, literature, government—all the warp and woof of the life of man who is always and everywhere a religious animal! What folly to think of religion as so many sermons, as so many devotions, as so many church meetings, when religion means habitual recollection of God and service to man; and so far from being something for dyspeptics, and invalids, nervous people and women, finds its highest expression in men and women of robust bodies and lofty intellects and divine spirits. The world's greatest bear this testimony.

Now the test of any religion is its fruits. This is true of a nation, an age, an individual, a religion. What is the story of Mohammedism? Let Turkey answer. What is the record of Buddhism? Let India bear witness. What is the merit of Confucianism? Let China say. What is the fruit of Christianity? Let England speak. Let America give its testimony. "Ye shall know them by their fruits." An infidel was lecturing in a village in the north of England, and at the close, challenged discussion. Who should accept the challenge but a bent old woman, in most antiquated attire, who arose and said: "Sir, I have a question to put to you." "Well, my good woman, what is it?" "Ten years ago I was left a widow, with eight children, utterly unprovided for, and nothing to call my own but this Bible. By its direction and looking to God for strength I have been enabled to feed myself and my family. I am now tottering to the grave, but I am perfectly happy because I look forward to a life of immortality with Jesus in heaven. That is what my religion has done for me. What has your way of thinking done for you?" "Well, my good lady," stammered the lecturer, "I don't want to disturb your comfort, but"— "O, that's not the question! Keep to the point, sir. What has your way of thinking done for you?" The infidel endeavored again to shirk. The feeling of the meeting gave way to uproarious applause, and the lecturer had to slink away discomfited by an old woman. "You shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles?"

Our Budget

—Buffalo next week!

—Have you made your arrangements?

—See page 1284 for some particulars.

—If you can not go on "The Christian-Evangelist Special" train, go on another. But be sure to go. The convention is the main thing, not the train.

—See "Editorial Notes" for news from the societies.

—Col. Alexander Campbell, the oldest son of Alexander Campbell, founder of Bethany College, died last week at his home in Bethany, Brook county, W. Va., after a painful illness extending over a period of several months. Death was due to heart trouble and paralysis. He was in his seventy-fifth year. Colonel Campbell was perhaps best known in the south, where he served with distinction throughout the civil war in the Confederate army, and he was, at one time, prominent in political circles. We must reserve until our next issue a fuller account of his life.

—Next week we shall publish what we may call an "Alexander Campbell Pictorial Number." We have had this in view for some time, and it is something of a coincidence that the death of the oldest living son of Alexander Campbell should have occurred just about the time we had set for the production of this number. It will contain articles by some of our best-known writers who, through special familiarity with Alexander Campbell and his life and work, are peculiarly fitted for such service. This issue will be illustrated by a great many valuable pictures, many of which have not before been published. Every member of the Christian churches who has any interest in the history and the progress of the Campbellian movement will wish to have a copy of this number. As we can print only a limited number beyond our regular circulation, those who wish extra copies should write at once to our subscription department, placing their order and enclosing stamps for the same. The price will be 5 cents per copy, 25 cents per dozen and $1 per hundred. We believe that a great many preachers will see the value of every member of their churches having a copy of this issue.

—We have received an account of the recent twenty-first anniversary of the Englewood Church, Chicago, but too late for any consideration in our columns this week. We wish brethren would favor us with their reports immediately after the occurrence of any important event. We value it far more when it is fresh news, and much prefer brevity and promptness rather than detailed reports that reach us late and after they have been, perhaps, published elsewhere. This is the time of year when the pressure on our columns is greatest.

—Charles Reign Scoville is still holding great meetings. At present he is at Sullivan, Ill., from which point he has sent us an article which we requested from him, on the union meetings recently held at Monroe, Wis. We hope to find space for this in our next week's issue.

—J. R. Sparks has located at Raven, Va.

—After November 1 D. F. Sellards gives up the work at Leon, Ia.

—The new pipe organ just installed at the Jefferson Street Church of Christ, Buffalo, is to be formally opened this evening.

—The new church building is rapidly nearing completion at Ottumwa, Ia.

—A. C. Corbin, late of Ashland, has just entered upon the pastorate at Dallas, Ore.

—The beautiful new church building at Lohrville, Ia., is nearing completion.

—G. L. Bush is now at work with the Dixon Street Church, Gainesville, Tex.

—Lee Tinsley has closed his work at Olney, Ill., to take up the pastorate at Nineveh, Ind.

—J. A. Barnett is arranging to leave Pekin, Ill., soon to take up the work in Freeport.

—The Foreign Society his just reecived a direct gift of $5,000 from a friend of the work. This is a source of great encouragement to the managers of the society.

—It is at the church at Bethsaida, Ark., and not at Arkadelphia, as reported in "Our Budget" last week, that E. S. Allhands has organized an Endeavor society.

—H. E. Wilhite has just entered upon the hardest field that he has ever found, so far as immediate results are concerned—South Chicago—but he feels encouraged.

—S. L. Lyon writes that he did resign, as announced in our Ohio notes, but that his people will not let him leave them this year. So he will not go to Oberlin, but remain at Rushsylvania.

—The Baptist church at Polo, Ill., was recently purchased by our brethren and has just been dedicated. F. A. Sword, the recently called pastor, is following the dedication with a meeting.

—Boyd White writes us that the work at Mount Healthy, O., is opening up with fine prospects. It is expected that a mission work at New Burlington, a rural field of great promise, will be opened soon.

—The new building of the First Christian Church, Atlanta, Ga., which, when completed, will be one of the best equipped church buildings in the city, will be ready for use before many weeks.

—C. F. Ward has just taken the work at Boone, Iowa. He feels that the outlook there is very good. Our church has an $18,000 building. Brother Ward speaks well of his late field and the people he has left.

—As an immediate result of an excellent meeting held by A. R. Spicer at Loraine, Ill., the church will call a minister for all time and will remodel and enlarge what is already the best church in town.

—F. F. Walters, of Neosho, is assisting W. F. Turner and the First Church of Joplin, Mo., in a fine meeting. Brother Walters has ten calls for meetings now which he can not answer. He is a strong preacher and worker.

—President Hill, of Drake University, reports that that institution has opened the most auspicious year in its history. One hundred more have enrolled than the same period in any other year. The enrollment of the Bible College is unusually large.

—Extensive improvements have been made on the lot and house of worship at Eureka, Cal., where I. H. Teel is pastor. A sermon just preached on "Fallacious Claims of Modern Divine Healers," was published in full in the city daily paper.

—W. T. Clarkson, formerly of Lawrence, Kan., is now doing graduate work in the Columbia University and Union Theological Seminary, New York. He was invited to preach on a recent Sunday in a Presbyterian church at Huntington, Long Island.

—J. W. Baker, of Joplin, is in a good meeting at Sarcoxie, Mo. He will later hold meetings at Villa Heights, Joplin and Granby. He has so many calls for meetings that he has about decided to enter the general evangelistic field after November.

—A movement has been on foot to send Allen Hickey to the Buffalo convention at the expense of the Iowa brethren, but Brother Hickey has already arranged to go to Washington where he would like to engage in missionary work.

—We regret to learn of the death of Mrs. Grace Hugh, wife of Louie Hugh, the Chinese missionary under the employ of the C. W. B. M., at Portland, Ore. She was a very effective worker and thoroughly devoted to the ministry of the Christian church.

—The board of officers at Albany, Ind., have voted to send B. F. Cato, their pastor, to the Buffalo Convention. J. H. O. Smith is to be with them in a meeting in January. During Brother Cato's recent vacation he preached thirty-seven times and had twenty-seven additions to the churches.

—We regret to learn of the death of Mrs. Matthew Small. She was a most effective helper to her good husband, who is the brother of the better known James Small, one of our leading evangelists. We have received no information other than the fact of this good woman's death.

—J. E. Davis, of Beatrice, Neb., was a pleasant visitor at The Christian-Evangelist office last week. Brother Davis was about the business of the brethren who are arranging to erect at once a $30,000 church building. We congratulate pastor and people on this sign of Christian zeal and life.

—Roland A. Nichols has just preached his farewell sermon in the Highland Street Church of Christ, Worcester, Mass. Austin P. Finley will be his successor and take up the work October 21. —W. A. Dameron, who has been studying at Christian University, Canton, Mo., has just been invited to succeed C. E. Wagner in the pastorate at Shelbyville, Mo. Brother Wagner, who leaves the church there in a fine condition will enter upon the pastorate at Yates Center, Kan., early in this month.

—F. F. Grim has just closed his work at Leaday, Texas. On account of the death of Mrs. Lea the plans for the building of a school have been suspended for the present. Brother Grim goes to San Angelo, Texas, for a rest before accepting work elsewhere. We trust there will be soon a good opening for so faithful a man.

—The veteran N. A. Walker finds that total indifference is the greatest obstacle to successful work at Douglas, Ill. There was no church to help him, but at the close of the meeting, in which he preached four weeks and Alfred Tucker two, twenty-seven names were taken to form a church, some of them among the best people of the town.

—B. S. Ferrall, chairman of the pulpit supply of the Buffalo convention, has arranged for 115 different services with eleven different religious bodies, for Sunday, October 14. A great Y. M. C. A. mass meeting and a Y. W. C. A. vesper service on the same day will be addressed by well known representatives in attendance upon the convention.

—D. Millar is in a very successful meeting at Grove, Ind. From there he goes to Mendon, Mo., where he will have the assistance of 300 Christian-Evangelists each week. Brother Millar has open dates through November and December. Churches will be entitled to congratulations that secure his services for these weeks.

—W. F. Turner, pastor of the First Church, Joplin, Mo., spoke for the Foreign Christian Missionary Society recently at the Oklahoma Convention at El Reno, and at the Kansas Convention at Parsons. He also made the address for the American Missionary Society at Parsons. Brother Mohorter and others testify as to the worth of Brother Turner's address.

—A. E. Cory, our missionary to China, who returns to his field November 20, is now in a meeting with the church at Oskaloosa, Iowa. He was formerly pastor of that church. He hopes to make it a living link in the Foreign Society before the meeting closes. He will be stationed in China at Wuhu, the city formerly occupied by T. J. Arnold, who recently died.

—Horace Siberell expects to begin a meeting at Moorehouse, Mo., about the 15th of this month. This is a new place where the people know very little about our plea. Brother Siberell realizes the help that a good religious paper can give him under these conditions and will make use of The Christian-Evangelist. Brother Siberell is now in a meeting at Naylor, Mo.

—L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., dedicated during the month of September churches at the following places: Auburn, Ind.; Forest City, Ark.; Olive Branch, Ind.; New Palestine, Ind., and Fayette, O. At each place he raised money enough to provide for all indebtedness, and at Forest City, Ark., $500 additional to apply on a new parsonage.

—W. J. Frost, writing from Houston, Mo., says he is just home from the joint convention of the churches of Texas and Wright counties, held at Mountain Grove. It was a good convention for a first one. The preachers present included Brothers Hicks, Morris, Hunt, Frost, Gaylor and Abbott. Mrs. Hooten organized an auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. Towards starting an evangelistic found $27 were subscribed. All were hopeful of good results.

—John L. Brandt is, we are glad to say, recovered from his recent operation, and expects to be about his work in the near future.

—Owen Livengood entered upon the pastorate last Lord's day of the church at Spartanburg, Ind. This congregation has hitherto had only one-fourth time preaching. The change to full time was made possible by a meeting held last winter by M. W. Harkins, of Union City, Ind. Brother Livengood will soon begin a meeting at Chauncey, O., where Willard Guy, a student of the Ohio University, ministers. After this he will be with C. C. Smith in a meeting at Martinsville, O. Brother Livengood recognizes the value of a Christian paper and one aim of his Christian ministry is to put a Christian-Evangelist in each home connected with these churches.

—O. M. Thomason, of Davenport, Wash., has resigned his pastorate and will enter the evangelistic field. His first meeting will be at Ritzville where W. H. Harris is minister. Other meetings booked are Waterville, Wenatchee, Entiat, Waverly, Chelan, Cashmere and Levenworth. Brother Thomason has been asked to accept the position of state evangelist of South Dakota.

—The Maple-Miller meeting at Gas City, Ind., is reported as being one of the most successful ever held in that community. There are additions every night; the church is reunited and enthusiastic as never before. The next meeting of this evangelistic team will be at Cairo, Ill. Their time is engaged until March 10. Their last meeting is at Clarinda, Ia., and their preference is that their next engagement be in that vicinity.

—The offering for church extension, foreign and home missions has just been taken by the church at Akron, Ohio. The amount was $900, to be divided equally among these three causes. This is the best the church has ever done and will enable it to start a named loan fund for the Church Extension Society. Brother Darsie has just begun his second year with the church. During the past year 125 have been added to the membership and Miss Jennie Jenkinson, who took up the work of pastoral helper, has been very efficient. The Bible school in the good months runs between six nad seven hundred.

—"Christian fellowship prevails in our church, to which we think The Christian-Evangelist contributes." So writes one of our readers at Brookfield, Mo., where the new church building is nearing completion and will be dedicated as soon as the pews can be put in. R. E. L. Prunty, the pastor, has just closed a successful meeting at Brunswick, and E. H. Williamson, the pastor there, writing to us, says: "We all fell in love with Brother Prunty and think it is not strange he has been able to do such a magnificent work at Brookfield. Several of our people here are intending to go to the dedication of the church building."

—O. G. Blackwell, the Indiana evangelist, accompanied by his singer, is helping E. J. Church in a meeting at Seneca, Mo. These brethren are aided also by 300 Christian-Evangelists per week. Brother Church's high standing with the Seneca public, together with the talent he has rallied to his support, almost insures a splendid meeting.

—H. O. Breeden has resigned the pastorate of the Central Christian Church, Des Moines, Iowa, after twenty-one years of service. This has been a great pastorate and we have asked Brother Breeden to favor us with some of the lessons that he has gleaned from it. The resignation is to take effect January 1. Brother Breeden's main reason is his desire to engage in evangelistic work.

—We are glad to report that the thirteenth anniversary services of the Hammett Place Christian Church, St. Louis, were very enjoyable. On Lord's day evening the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist preached, and at the conclusion of the sermon made an appeal for the clearing off of the debt of the building. This amounted to $1,800 and before the meeting adjourned two dollars more than this sum were pledged to be paid during the coming year.

—Two hundred rigs in a parade and over 5,000 people at the rally speak well for the interest in Sunday-school work in Mitchell county, Kan. David H. Shields, who is the minister of the Christian Church, as well as the mayor, at Salina, Kan., recently gave the annual address at this rally, and he has been engaged as a speaker for next year. Brother Shields also made two of the addresses at the simultaneous temperance rally which the churches of Hutchinson, Kan., had last Lord's day.

—J. H. Mohorter, General Secretary of the Benevolent Association, is having a round of conventions. He reports the one in Kansas as being fine. At its close a collection was taken to pay for the admission of Brother Bell, an old Kansas preacher, to one of our homes. In West Virginia enthusiasm was great. Brother Mohorter spent one Sunday with the church at Wilmington, Ohio, and another with Vernon Stauffer at Angola, Ind., where he had a great day. He has just been at Ladysmith attending the Wisconsin convention. All reports go to show that Brother Mohorter is heart and soul in his work for benevolence, and his efforts are being recognized by the brotherhood.

—We have just received the following pathetic, yet inspiring, letter. It is addressed to the general superintendent, and is in reply to a communication from him:

Dear Brother: Your favor of Aug. 7 is before me and communications received before from your loving hand. But I could not answer for I could not write, and now I have a lap-board and hold my pencil with both hands with the end against my breast to try to write these lines. I have been unable to feed myself for nearly two years. I cannot travel any more. I will be 79 years old Jan 9 and I have preached 56 years. My work is done for this life and it pains my heart to think of laying down the sword while there is so much to do. Tell the young brethren to fight on till the victory is won for Christ. I can only pray for victory while others fight. My good wife has to feed me. Pray for me in my affliction.—Wm. Judd, Tivoli, Oklahoma.

—We hear a good report of the church at Maplewood, Mo. F. A. Mayhall has recently entered upon the pastorate there and seems to have done much in reconciling the interests that have not always worked harmoniously. The regular collections are the best in the history of the church. There were nineteen additions during the months of July and August and the most encouraging feature of the work is the deepening of the spiritual life. On September 16 it was reported that $1,200 had been raised in cash to wipe out the present indebtedness of the church, and this day the Bible school brought forth the largest collection and the largest attendance that the school has known, the 210 present giving a collection of $55.23 as against the previous high water mark of 103 attendance and $15.35 collection. We rejoice to hear of this forward step and the unity now prevailing without which there can be no successful work in such a place as Maplewood.

—"I am beginning to think 'Put me off at Buffalo.'" So writes W. A. Fite, who certainly deserves to enjoy the pleasure a visit to the convention city will have. He is doing good work for the church at Windsor, Mo. The church extension offering just taken there amounts to $60, about three times what was given last year. Of the value of a religious paper Brother Fite writes: "It is possible for a church to have several preachers at once when its members are reading our religious papers." He highly commends the lectureship course recently given by W. J. Lhamon. The following report of the work at Windsor speaks for itself: "We have recently installed the individual communion cups with which we are very much pleased; put in a fine granitoid walk and steps. We have been using 'Gloria in Excelsis' for almost a year and pronounce it par excellence. We have put in a Sunday-school teachers' library and propose to have an up-to-date Sunday-school. We have the teacher training course, in which much interest is being taken. This church undertakes to give the Gospel to Bowen, a church four miles from Windsor, which has no organization or house of any faith. We have rented a tent and began the work of evangelization yesterday. We shall be missionary at home and remember the missionary enterprises away from home." Yes, we believe W. A. Fite has a good right to say "Put me off at Buffalo."

—Bro. Charles C. Chapman, Fullerton, Cal., responding to our appeal for funds to assist in establishing our cause in Manchester, N. H., by enclosing us a cheque for $50 and expressing his interest in the work in New England, adds this important word of news concerning the wonderful progress of the cause in southern California, in which he himself has borne so honorable a part:

"Our work is progressing splendidly in southern California. In Los Angeles alone in just one year closing yesterday I have assisted in dedicating four new church buildings, and there was one more built. Our people in southern California are very active, and the demands are great on all those who have funds to give, yet I feel it is an opportune time, and we should make a splendid effort to establish as many churches as possible. Yesterday we dedicated the Naomi Street Church, Los Angeles, a beautiful, artistic building costing something like $15,000. The Sunday before I assisted in Pasadena in raising funds for their new $50,000 building. The congregation has a magnificent lot and over half the amount for the building and equipment. All honor to our business

—"LeBaron and Conrad" is a new evangelistic combination. The first meeting these brethren have held together was at the Mount Olive church, Macon county, Mo., where 35 were added to the church. They are now at Laplata, Mo. Irving Taylor LeBaron has had 18 years' experience in the field and the results of his work both in additions and church buildings that have followed his meetings testify to his fitness for this kind of service. Brother LeBaron makes use of canvas illustrations and for special work a fine stereopticon. L. Byron Conrad, who is associated with him as leader of music, is the possessor of several medals won for his ability as a vocalist and conductor, and, what is better, he can use his gift for the advancement of the cause of Christ. Macon, Mo., is the headquarters of these brethren.

—Frank L. Van Voorhis has resigned at Okmulgee, I. T., though against the wishes of the congregation and the community. The work is well established there and a new building has recently been dedicated. During the twenty-six months that Brother Van Voorhis has been there, our brethren, from being merely recognized, have grown to be the leading congregation in the community. While going through the laborious trials of building, 150 were added to the church roll and 65 other additions were won through the labors of Brother Van Voorhis at other places. He has been called to Shawnee and believes that the work there needs what he feels himself capable of doing, with the Divine help.

—"Vacation is over. Now let us devote ourselves diligently to our vocation," writes J. P. Litchenberger in his little church paper. Brother Litchenberger's vacation was passed in holding two meetings, one at Tazewell and the other at Graham, Va., which resulted in ninety-nine additions to the churches. Brother Lichtenberger thus did not forget his vocation. He is on the convention program of the American Christian Missionary Society and his address on the subject of "Evangelism" will be listened to with great interest, especially by ministers of city churches.

For a Church in New Hampshire.

Previously acknowledged	$ 968 25
Mrs. E. M. Griffis............	3 50
C C. Chapman................	50 00
Total	$1,021 75

Bro. J. H. Garrison's San Francisco pledge to the brotherhood to make every possible effort for the establishment of a church in New England before the Buffalo convention has been grandly redeemed. He has given more money to the enterprise than one in his circumstances and subject to his countless calls for help ought to be permitted to give; he used rare discrimination in sending thither an evangelist especially adapted to that peculiar field; from a sanguine heart overflowing with sympathy and courage he sustained the preacher through the early discouragements; he has arranged with our National C. W. B. M. for the early location of a pastor there and the thorough organization and nurturing of the young church until it comes into its inheritance of self-maintaining resources and power for the extension of primitive Christianity over a wide area of densely populated New England.

It seems wonderful that such a work could be established for $1,200. But such is the inherent strength of our plea that the stated sum will launch the new church free from all "entangling alliances" and with enough ready money in the treasury for a few weeks home keeping free from the embarrassment of an empty exchequer. In the confidence of their interest in this great work we appeal to our brothers and sisters in Christ for the remainder of this required amount. Kindly remit as soon as possible and as generously.—S.

—George W. Wise, who is about to take charge of our work at Alton, Ill., is a Tennessee boy who has held successful pastorates at Hampton, in that state, Plainview and Rochester, Minn., and at Leesville, La. Of his work at the latter place John A. Stephens, the state evangelist, speaks very highly. Of his departure Brother Stephens writes: "Personally, I feel that the loss will be a severe one to me and our work." Brother Wise set a pace for state missions which others were induced to follow. He has conducted two or three evangelistic meetings each year of his ministry and has baptized more than a thousand converts.

Buffalo Expected Blessing.

The convention was wanted in Buffalo because it was felt it would be such a help to the cause here. A word as to how this may most be realized may not be amiss, and I am sure it will be well received. I believe each one who comes will be happier to feel that he is contributing to this end.

I am led to these reflections by what came up in conversation in a home where I dined recently. I was impressed with the way they spoke of some people who were in their home only a few days during the Pan-American Fair. They came as total strangers and won a place as abiding friends. After those people returned they sent back pictures of themselves and their houses, thus showing the friendship was not a transient one on their part.

Whatever impression may be made in Buffalo by the sight of great multitudes and badges, or by addresses and newspaper accounts will pass away with the coming of the next excitement; but these personal touches, courtesies and friendships will be the abiding influences favorable to the great end we all have in view.

You who come to this convention have the opportunity to do in a week for the cause you all love what all your brethren in Buffalo can not possibly do in years. It will not be by what you say so much as by what you are seen to be in spirit and bearing. The most of you will be guests in homes. Homes are sanctuaries which we enter only by permission; and although pay is to be received usually, yet it is more for the favor than the pay in most cases that the homes are thrown open.

Somehow I have a notion that a Christian should enter a home not with the thought of how much comfort he is to get out of it, but how much of the Christ he is to bring into it. Would it not be good for us all to read and ponder what Jesus said about, "And into whatsoever house ye shall enter?" B. H. Hayden.

Buffalo, N. Y.

Death of Mrs. W. B. Craig.

We are deeply grieved to learn of the death of Sister William Bayard Craig, of Denver, who passed away on September 20. In a letter from Bro. B. B. Tyler, written on that date, he says:

"We are in deep grief. Mrs. Emma Pickerell Craig, wife of William Bayard Craig, pastor of the Central Christian Church, passed to the other side a few minutes ago. For some time Sister Craig has been in ill health. This morning, as a last resort, she came under the surgeon's knife. The result was as indicated.

"In the decease of Sister Craig our churches in Denver, the Central Church, especially, sustain an irreparable loss. Mrs. Craig was a queenly woman. There was a royal dignity in her bearing. She was sweet-spirited, intelligent and earnest, wise, enthusiastic, in the service of our Lord. All Denver is poorer by reason of her departure. In her sympathies and efforts she was truly catholic. As I trace these lines tears come unbidden and blind my eyes in deepest sympathy with Brother Craig. He is, as you well know, one of God's noblemen. The loss to him no tongue can tell, no pen describe. He and his wife were so truly joined together that there was the most perfect harmony and unity. They were one couple in a thousand.

"South Broadway will feel the loss of Sister Craig next to the Central Church. Brother and Sister Craig were under God, the founders of this great church. They served the infant congregation two or three years without salary, and superintended the erection of our splendid house of worship. Only one week ago this afternoon Brother Craig spoke in the South Broadway Church at the funeral of one of the older members. I have never known better work than the service rendered by Brother and Sister Craig in the organization and building of the South Broadway Church. In all of Brother Craig's work, both in the pastoral office and in the office of chancellor of Drake University, his wife was a loyal and effective helpmeet. We mourn, but not as those who are destitute of hope."

To these true and appreciative words of Brother Tyler, the Editor wishes to add his personal testimony to the high character, great ability and supreme devotion to the cause of Christ of Sister Craig. Having known her personally in her home life, in the work of the church, and in the social circle, we can testify cheerfully to her extraordinary worth. Brother Craig always spoke of their joint work in the pastorate, for she was, indeed, a most valuable helper, and never, perhaps, were two hearts more closely united in their love and loyalty to each other and to their common Master. To Brother Craig, whose loss is unspeakable, and to the church whose interests she carried on her heart equally with her husband, we tender our sincerest sympathy. The earth is better for her having lived in it, and heaven will be richer to many because of her departure from this earth.

Jellico's Church Wrecked by Dynamite.

On September 21, the Christian church, newly erected, was wrecked in the terrible dynamite explosion that took place in Jellico, Tenn. We have received a lengthy appeal signed by the present pastor of the church there, Raymond G. Sherrer, but it reaches us at a time when our columns are already crowded, so we must necessarily condense the statement.

In 1899 there were less than a dozen members of our brotherhood at Jellico. As a result of a meeting held by J. W. Masters an organization was perfected with 23 members. In 1900 D. G. Combs held a meeting in the Congregational church, but the effort to secure funds for the erection of a building for our own brethren was unsuccessful. A. I. Myhr, the state secretary, after a visit in 1902 arranged for Wm. Burleigh to hold a meeting. In 1904 E. J. Fenstermacher assisted in a meeting, and the church was reorganized. In October of the same year Milo Atkinson added to the membership. The following January W. J. Shelburne increased the interest so much that a lot was purchased for $1,000, and E. B. Barnes and H. H. Saunders held a meeting which added to the membership and led to the securing of a minister. Up to this time the congregation had been meeting in vacant stores and halls and in the city school building. For a time the brethren met in a coal office to hold Sunday-school and observe the Lord's Supper. But finally in October, 1905, a contract for a $6,000 building was let, and by much self-sacrifice and devotion on the part of a few, this building was completed just eight days before the 21st of September, 1906. Early in the morning of that day the entire town was damaged by the explosion of a car load of dynamite in the railroad yards, and the Christian church was so badly wrecked that it has been condemned and must be rebuilt. The brethren in Jellico can not do this without outside help. They have no place in which they can hold services, and they have asked Brother Sherrer, their minister, to go into the field and endeavor to secure help to rebuild their house of worship. Contributions may be sent directly to Dr. L. M. Scott, chairman of the building committee, Box 305, Jellico, Tenn. We are sure that the sympathy of the entire brotherhood goes out to the members at Jellico and that this will be demonstrated in a practical manner.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Illinois Notes.

The Illinois Christian Educational Association held its annual meeting with the State Missionary Society at Paris. While its work is in support of the college, the men trained in the school became at once the earnest supporters of state missions as well as all other great enterprises, so it is justly and wisely reckoned among the missionary forces of the state and most appropriately welcomed to a good place on the program. The 2,200 people who have been enrolled as members of the association, as well as thousands of friends of Eureka College will be glad to have a fairly full report of the past, and plans for future work.——The large attendance at the educational session, which came late in the convention, showed a live, earnest interest in Christian education. This interest is not only in the production of well trained and thoroughly educated ministers and missionaries but in the thorough education also of all our young people under good moral and spiritual conditions.——The Educational association has been at work about nine years and has raised about $25,000. Its purpose is to secure the co-operation of the Disciples of Christ in Illinois, in the enlargement and maintenance of Eureka College, by disseminating a knowledge of its work and needs by increasing the attendance and by providing financial support. Its departments are: (1) A regular membership, paying $1 annually; (2) An Attendance League, pledging to secure, if possible, one or more students; (3) A Gift League, pledging to give the college something each year; (4) A life membership by the payment of $25. The annual convention added two other departments; (5) A life directorship, on the payment of $50, entitling to a place on the advisory board; (6) A Living Link, by either an individual or church on the payment of $100, entitling the donor to send a worthy indigent young person to college free of tuition, as long as the living link is continued. This broad scope enables every friend of Christian education to do something. Very few are unable to give a dollar a year, to produce such a ministry as the Church of Christ deserves, and to thoroughly equip the college for the fullest training, highest and noblest culture of all our young people. If too poor to do this, he can become a recruiting officer in the Attendance League. But many can give the larger sums, thus adding more rapidly to the growth of the college. Beyond all this we hope for many to give on the annuity plan and others remember the college liberally in their wills.——The treasurers' report showed balance on hand, $307.64; from various membership dues, $2,176; education day and improvement funds, $892.12; Coleman fund, $2,800; other receipts, $168.89; total receipts, $6,344.45. This was expended as follows: General college fund, $5,083.22; field secretary's salary and expenses, $583.99; treasurer, $200. The rest was spent on repairs and furniture in "Lida's Wood," printing, postage, envelopes, etc., except $320.68, left in the treasury. Printed detailed statement from the treasurer can be had for the asking, Miss Clara L. Davidson, Eureka. The field secretary reported having visited 203 places, delivered eighty-seven addresses on Christian education, enrolled 103 I. C. E. A. members, and 41 life members, received in cash, $1,034.88, and in pledges, conditional and otherwise, $5,590. That the college had received from our good friend, William Britt, $2,000 on endowment.——Education day was observed by 74 churches with sermons on Christian Education and an offering of $1,405.57. This in many cases included regular dues. We are indebted much to the press, with the earnest co-operation of our editors, and to the worthy pastors and churches whose public spirit and unselfish enterprise led them to this noble and fundamental service which underlies the growth and prosperity of all departments of work.——The college people and their friends held twenty-four conferences for information in as many places, which were attended by 90 preachers and 3,765 others.——The proposition of present effort is to find thirty men who will each give $100, when 500 new names are added to the membership of the I. C. E. A. About 200 are secured and eleven men to give $100 each.——Mrs. S. J. Crawford, president of the association, gave a full outline of the persons and work of the association into which she has put so much of her life and for the large usefulness of which she is profoundly grateful.——S. E. Fisher, Champaign, gave the educational address, which was a stirring appeal to the state to put Eureka College in condition for larger usefulness. The demands of business require men of character, society demands women of true Christian refinement. The church is suffering for want of ministers, well trained and thoroughly equipped for their responsible work. The reports of the committee on future work was enthusiastically adopted. It recommended (1) that all the the churches be urged to observe Education Day, January 29; (2) that the educational conferences be continued; (3) that life directorships on the payment of $50 be constituted; (4) that living links on the payment of $100 be established; (5) that the churches be urged to make provision for a definite stated offering each year to be applied on current expenses; (6) that our ministers be urged to press upon their congregations the necessity and work of the Christian college until every church is thoroughly enlisted both in patronage and support; (7) that our centennial aims be (a) to increase the I. C. E. A. membership to 5,000; (b) to raise $150.000 endowment and (c) to increase the attendance to 400 students; (8) that the executive committee consider the selection of a centennial secretary. In harmony with this report, the session of the missionary convention recommended that this convention assume the responsibility, by and with the consent and advice of the board of trustees, of raising an endowment of $250,000, and that the presidents of the convention, the college and the educational association, select a committee of five to raise the amount, and that the state missionary board be asked to devote $100 for the use of said committee. Now for one strong pull altogether and do what ought to have been done long ago. Seventy-six preachers already pledged to observe Education day. The centennial committee will be selected as soon as possible and a centennial secretary put in the field. This all looks forward to a better day for Christian education in our great state, which ought to lead in all these great enterprises for the world's betterment The officers of the association are as follows: Mrs. S. J. Crawford, Pres.; R. E. Hieronymus and Mrs. A. T. Ross, Vice-pres.; Mrs. M. M. Conklin, Cor. Sec.; Mrs. Ada H. McGuire, Rec. Sec.; Mrs. Clara L. Davidson, Treas.; Prof. Silas Jones, Auditor. The advisory board additional, Mrs. B. J. Radford, Mrs. R. D. Smith, Mrs. Mary Major, Mrs. Jane C. Davidson, Mrs. Sue M. Elkin, Mrs. Anna Hieronymus, Mrs. Emma Darst, L. O. Lehman and W. F. Shaw.

Arkansas' Many Good People Rejoice.

"Amendment No. 8" carried by a large majority. Our secretary of state has announced the official vote on the constitutional amendment, increasing the state and district school tax from the present maximum of seven (7) mills to ten (10) mills on the dollar. It appears that a total of 152,827 votes were cast. Those voting for the amendment number 93,237. The number necessary for adoption is 76,414, so that the amendment is decidedly adopted, and will become a part of the state constitution next January. Arkansas already has many excellent public schools, some splendid colleegs, and one of the largest and best southern state universities. The enrollment for the ensuing session is anticipated to be 1,200 students.——We hope to see the day not far in the future when the C. W. B. M. will have endowed a Bible chair at this important center of education in Arkansas.——This year the vote against license in the state, taken by counties, breaks all records. As county option prevails, the big majority against license will have no effect upon the counties that have voted for license. It is very likely, however, that a few counties that have voted wet, will become dry by petition; we had six cases of this kind two years ago. It is very probable that more than one county that is reported wet will be contested and shown to be dry; this is almost certain in Mississippi county. Two years ago the majority in the state against license was only 1,953, and this was the first majority ever given by the state against license. This year the total vote against license is 82,250, being a majority against license of 14,273, the largest prohibition vote ever cast in the state. The vote breaks the record, and no doubt will forever keep the forces of temperance in the front. Fifty-three counties in this state are officially reported dry by vote. This year we gain several dry counties, and lose two only that went dry two years ago. Furthermore it is known that the full vote against license was not cast, many not voting. Still the increase in the anti-license majority over that of two years ago is 12,320.—The good people all over the state are greatly rejoicing over this great victory for temperance, and amendment No. 8, which means better education for the masses.——The writer, with others of "the true faith," are glad of good prospects to get some good preacher to join in our work; and those who come, we hope will be glad to remain, and make us glad for them to remain. Any one who desires to come, can save time by always sending a letter from his home congregation, and one also from his state or district secretary. This will enable me to put your case in the most favorable light before the brethren; and as this corresponding secretary does this work gratis, you will kindly enclose stamp for reply.

Will you come over and rejoice with those who are now rejoicing over recent victories and who hope to achieve others for temperance, education and Christian culture?

From "A Swamp Angel."

August was vacation month and was spent far from these sylvan scenes of Southeast Missouri. August 5 I preached for the Jeffersonville (Ind.) congregation, J. M. Vawter, an ex-Missourian, pastor. I found pastor and people in joyous relationship. August 12-19 I was at the "old home," Mulberry, Ohio; here I joined Brother Hays, pastor, and Bro. Jos. Armistead, of Norwood, in triple preaching, four making the good confession. August 20 and September 3, I renewed my fellowship with Henry Dodson, a brother beloved, at New Antioch, O. Three precious ones were here obedient to the faith. Our own meeting begins October 7. A. W. Kokendoffer, of Mexico, Mo., to do the preaching.

West Kentucky.

W. J. Hudspeth, South Kentucky evangelist, who recently visited Mayfield, reports over $2,000 already raised for the new year's work.——The trustees of the Smallwood fund have recently endowed two scholarships in West Kentucky College for Bible Students. These scholarships are worth $125 for four years.——W. J. Hudspeth recently closed an excellent meeting with the Murray congregation and is now visiting the churches of West Kentucky and raising funds to locate a special evangelist in the eight counties of the Jackson's purchase.——The congregation at Lynville has lately reorganized and is building a new house of worship. They were recently greatly revived and strengthened by a meeting held by W. J. Hudspeth. L. M. Hammonds, a student in West Kentucky College, preaches for them once a month.——"Ground-breaking exercises" were recently held at Mayfield, marking with appropriate ceremonies and worship, the beginning of the erection of the new house of worship. This is to cost by contract $21,000, exclusive of glass, carpets, pews, heating, lighting, and organ—the whole costing not less han $30,000.——West Kentucky College has just begun its new year with fine attendance and bright prospects.

Great Camp Meeting.

The ninth annual camp meeting of the Churches of Christ in Northwest Texas was held near Benjamin, Tex., for sixteen days. I was assisted in the preaching by J. A. Minton, of Erick, O. T. Brother Minton did a great work and pleased the people. This was the best meeting in the history of the organization. There were 72 additions, nearly all by baptism. Many of the number were cattle men of large means, some came hundreds of miles and have gone back home to establish the Church of Christ in their home towns.

In order that the brotherhood may understand something of the magnitude of the camp meeting I give the following facts: The organization has a regular evangelist employed; there have been about 2,500 additions; $10,000 expended; twelve churches organized; six houses built; $1,000 presented to Texas Christian University, thousands of dollars presented to other schools, orphan homes and charitable institutions. Brother A. J. Bush visited our camp-meeting at Benjamin, made an appeal in the interest of the orphans' home, and raised over $250 in a few minutes. Hence, you can see that the brethren are heartily in sympathy with every good work. For five years the writer has been working with these good people, and, if the Lord will, I am to assist again in 1907, and I frankly admit that this is one of the greatest opportunities for doing good that I ever saw. The next camp meeting will be near Haskell, where I am now trying to advance our cause in the growing little city.

Our church house here is small, hence we rented the "skating rink," which can accommodate more people than any other building in town. We have no regular preacher at Benjamin nor here; We need a good preacher at both places. Any one who is willing to begin on rather a small salary and work up a strong church, please send name if you can come recommended by the state corresponding secretary of your state.

A Good Meeting.

The meeting just held by Thomas L. Cooksey, and Miss Park with the church at Coffeyville, Kan., and its pastor Ellis Purlee, resulted in 56 additions, all of these adults except four. Weather conditions were unfavorable and there were outside attractions to draw the people. Brother McKinney will lead the singing for Brother Cooksey in a meeting just begun at Holton. At the conclusion of this meeting Brother Cooksey goes to the West Side Church in Indianapolis for the simultaneous meeting to be held in that city. The evangelists have open dates for December. The meeting just held shows that they have power to preach and sing the gospel with effect.

Empire State.

The brethren of the whole state of New York join with Buffalo in inviting the brotherhood to our International Missionary Convention. To have you within our borders is a privilege that we prize. You will do us much good. The fellowship of your presence will encourage us. We are comparatively few in number in the limitless field of the Empire state and our efforts will be greatly aided by the impression that a large missionary gathering will make upon the people of the past. They will be forced to see we are a great people.

It is a great mistake to suppose that the people of the east are not responsive to our plea; for our growth in this state will average up well with that of the whole country. New York City alone made a net increase of 14.6 per cent this year.

The most that we can do for you in this convention is to convince you of the unlimited field which the east presents. We can not show large numbers; but we can show a steady growth and a solid front for all missionary enterprises of our people. And we want to have you understand that New York and Massachusetts constitute to-day our greatest and most important fields for Home Missions. You will be surprised at the large number of cities in these two states, that are not occupied by us. Come to the convention. Buffalo is a beautiful city and we shall try to match the hospitality of other sections.

Our state work promises well this year under the leadership of D. C. Tremaine, who fills the position of corresponding secretary-evangelist. We are obliged to be contented with only one man in the field for the present. The open doors would employ half a dozen if we had the money to enter them. Several new pastors have come into the state since our state convention. Miner Lee Bates has taken up the work at West Fifty-sixth street, New York City. J. A. Serena has become pastor of the First Church, Syracuse. T. F. Burger is pastor at Brewerton. We look for good results in these important places.

It has just been learned that Bro. Lowell C. McPherson has resigned the work in Havana, Cuba, in order to afford his children the educational advantages of this country. We rejoice to know that he has accepted a call to become pastor at Wellsville. The brethren of New York love Brother and Sister McPherson for their sterling qualities and their work of love both upon the mission field and in Buffalo. The six and one-half years of their leadership at Jefferson street, Buffalo, were attended by probably the most signal advances that any church in the east has ever made, all things being considered. We welcome them back to the state with open arms, feeling assured that the Lord will bless their labors in the new field as he has done in the past.

Our state day occurs November 4. We expect the largest offering ever made in the state. Brethren of the state, come to the Buffalo convention. This is your opportunity to attend one of our great conventions near home.

Eli H. Long.

ZUMWALT.

Brother Zumwalt died in Topeka, Kan., September 7, 1906, after a long sickness and terrible suffering, at the age of 78 years. He had been a faithful member of the Christian church over fifty years. He was twice married; by the last union there were two sons—Clarin and Irwin, both in the Christian University. He was born in St. Charles county, Mo., and left an orphan at the age of five years. He leaves three sons and one daughter by his first wife and the two by his last, with Sister Zumwalt to mourn the loss of a kind, Christian husband and father. His work of faith and labor of love deserves a far more extended notice. B. Matchett.

WINTERMOTE.

In the death of Bro. Joseph F. Wintermote, the First Christian Church of Kansas City, Mo., has lost one of its most faithful members, and his household a most devoted and honored husband and father. Brother Wintermote was born in Darke county, Ohio, January 1, 1832, and died in Kansas City, Mo., August 19, 1906, aged 74 years, 7 months, 19 days. He was married in Lexington, Ky., February 16, 1859, to Miss Maria J. Van Pelt, with whom he lived in most happy union until his death. He joined the Christian church at the age of 24, and lived in most cordial fellowship with the people of God wherever his home chanced to be. He lived in Clarkesville, Tenn., during the war, after which he moved to Versailles, Ky. In 1888 he came to Kansas City, which has been his home ever since. Besides his widow, he leaves five sons and three daughters, all of whom are members of the Christian church. His life was a benediction to the world, and his memory will be an inspiration unto righteousness to all who knew him. W. F. Richardson.

THE TEN VIRGINS.—Matt. 25:1-13.

Memory verses, 1, 2.

Golden Text.—Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.—Matt. 25:13.

We are still dealing with the events and discourses of Tuesday of Passion week, the "day of conflict," which was occupied largely with controversies with the Scribes and Pharisees, denunciations of them, and discourses concerning the destruction of Jerusalem and the end of the world.

Matthew 24 has furnished much trouble for the commentators. Just how much of it refers to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans and how much (if any) to the end of the world and the coming of Christ at that time, is not always clear. It is clear, however, that the disciples understood Jesus to tell them that he would come again and set up his kingdom with glory before many years. This is indicated not only by the report of this discourse of Jesus as given by Matthew, Mark and John, but also by the history of the first generation after Pentecost and by many allusions in Paul's epistles.

Doubtless the expectation of the apostles and their interpretation of Jesus' words was colored largely by the Jewish apocalyptic literature with which they were familiar. This literature dealt largely with sudden and spectacular manifestations of power and glory, the discomfiture of the enemies of the faith and the visible triumph of the faithful.

When such an expectation was prevalent, evidently the duty and necessity of watchfulness would be emphasized. It is equally important even though the method and circumstances of the final triumph and judgment be quite different from the apocalyptic picture.

The parable of the wise and foolish virgins illustrates the duty of watchfulness. Although the kingdom of heaven is like a seed in its gradual growth, as other parables declare, yet there are in every man's experience certain crises and times of special opportunity. The life of the soul, like political, social or financial life, is not a dead level of equally important moments.

To be preparing for the crisis during the quiet hours when there seems nothing to do but wait, and, with the strength gained in these dull times of standing still, to go forward swiftly when the hour for going forward arrives—this is the true method of spiritual progress as inculcated by this parable. "The unlit lamp and the ungirt loin" are among the most common and the most fatal of failings.

A CHURCH IN TRIBULATION.—Rev. 2:8-4.

Be strong!
We are not here to play, to dream, to drift;
We have hard work to do and loads to lift.
Shun not the struggle—face it, 'tis God's gift.

Be strong!
Say not, "The days are evil, who's to blame?"
And fold the hands and acquiesce. Oh, Shame!
Stand up, speak out and bravely, in God's name.

Be strong!
It matters not how deep intrenched the wrong
How hard the battle goes, the day how long.
Faint not, fight on! To-morrow comes the song.

O, the consolation of the assurance that God knows it all!—the outer provocations and the inner repressions; if our failures, no less truly our aspiration; our contrition as well as our transgression; our love for him notwithstanding our contradictions before men; our passion for Jerusalem even if our outer life is of Babylon.

Most of the tribulations in which our churches are involved spring from within rather than destroy from without. When a church fails in its loyalty to Christ's manifest program of Christian benevolence, evangelism, and the cultivation of the higher life it at once becomes the victim of legalism, factionalism, worldliness, and its light is as dark as if its candle were removed.

With a church as with an individual, persistent faithfulness is a great desideratum. Good they did in earlier years is no justification for half-heartedness now. Resting on laurels, idleness begets the self-satisfaction and vainglory from which spring troubles, as did dragons from ancient Greek soil, but encompass the destruction of men and congregations. Few churches take cognizance of hindrances, clouds, threatenings, or mustering foes while faithfully performing the work God committed unto them.

There was a great difference between Smyrna and Jerusalem. Abounding peace and prosperity were tokens to the latter of Jehovah's approval; while drouth and siege were proofs their sins were known and God displeased. But with the church in Smyrna trials and tribulations indicated the malignancy of Satan and not God's wrath. They became rather means of grace, for God helped them to bear their crosses and through them revealed himself as their Father, loving, sympathetic, sustaining.

"Be thou faithful until death and I will give thee a crown of life," is heaven's recognition of the fact that most of the visible fruitage of the Christian life is beyond the Jordan of death. But there were anticipations of happiness in Canaan that gave joy to Israel even in the wilderness. Likewise there are visions of peace and plenty, of usefulness and nobleness coming to the faithful in even the most troubled church that thrills the Christian's heart with rapture. If we will look up toward God more, rather than around upon our vexations, the earthly happiness of us all will be greatly increased.

A vivid distinction should always be made between our spiritual and physical estates. Poverty may point threateningly toward the almshouse, but we can not say we are poor if good angels are pointing to the gates of paradise. The higher denomination should control the lower and we are to reckon our standing and lot in life not from the lower but the higher conditions. We are rich or poor, beatific or pitiable according as we are rich or poor toward God, whether we can look unflinchingly up into his face or whether we shield ourselves from his glance as the inflamed eye blinks in the sunlight. Lazarus in tatters, sores and hunger was richer than Dives though few would have supposed it.

> "'Almost persuaded,' harvest is past;
> 'Almost persuaded,' doom comes at last!
> Almost can not avail;
> Almost is but to fail!
> Sad, sad the bitter avail—
> Almost, but lost."

The Lord is long suffering now but his character is symmetrical, full orbed, and justice is one of his attributes. An unprepared spirit in the celestial Eden would despoil it and justice to those who have entered in requires the alien nature should be barred out. Therefore the heavenly Bridegroom will say to those too unappreciative to take oil in their vessels, when they stand knocking, "Depart, I know you not."

It is not enough to be prayerful. We must also be prepared. Prayerfulness is a going to school, but the actual performance of duties revealed to us in the visions of our season of prayer is largely the justification of our devoting time to prayer. To pray for forgiveness without ceasing that "easily besetting sin" is mockery. To pray to be more like Christ without struggling to overcome an evil disposition, and to abound more in love and holiness is sealing our own doom. Let preparedness be our quest.

Had the bridegroom come at the expected time those foolish virgins had passed as wise as the others. The difference between them, wide as the eternities, consisted in part of them making provision for emergencies. When the unexpected happened, they were ready. Here is seen the wisdom of our cultivating a faith that will weather all the storms of doubt; of our making a repentance that needeth not be repented of; of our developing a spiritual vitality that will sustain us through fiery and unexpected trials. The over soul is the wise soul.

Many doubtless thought the virgins who not only filled their lamps but also carried an additional vessel of oil were foolishly over-cautious. There are not lacking those to-day who smile pityingly on brethren very zealous in religious activities, very ardent in their devotion, very self-sacrificing in their giving. But the decision of judgment day will be none ever made too much preparation against the coming of the bridegroom. That day consecration will receive its crown and dalliance its doom. Let the world pronounce your course foolishness, if only God will call it wise.

Heaven's gates open not to receive those who were wanton all through life, but who after death and at sight thereof are in terror fleeing the horrors of hell. They swing wide ajar rather at the approach of those who honor the Lord and serve him and are drawn after him by the affinity of love and holiness. Had the celebration of the marriage been the supreme desire of the hearts of those maidens, they would have neglected other things rather than the most minute preparation for the coming of the bridegroom. The doors were opened to the wise maidens who desired above all things else that day to honor the bridegroom and enjoy the wedding festival. Where one's heart is there is his eternity also.

What will in our experience correspond with the coming of the bridegroom of our parable is the coming of the death angel to bear us to judgment and on to our eternal destiny. At his coming all our tasks will be left finished or incomplete. We can make no further preparation after it is announced. We can not "go to them that sell." The time of his coming is so uncertain that there is only wisdom in being always ready. Could we enter in with him into the heavenly marriage were he to come now with the suddenness of an earthquake or of the lightning's flash?

People's Forum

Significant Signs.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

In addition to many various and even variant signs of the progressive trend toward the unity in mind and spirit of the Christian thinker in the many membered family of Christendom, I think it exceedingly important that we note the constantly converging lines in what we call secular learning.

It was my instructive pleasure to be present at the opening services of the University of Missouri. I have spent most of the summer in and about Columbia, the Athens of Missouri, preaching during July for Brother Winders' great congregation, and having myself domiciled, by the courtesy of Brethren Lhamon and Sharpe, in the Columbia Bible college building, from which vantage position I might read and look around. I have been much impressed with the wisdom and enterprise of the projectors of the Bible college in such close touch with the State University.

I have been a silent witness of the battle raging with more or less heat around the phrase, "Higher Criticism," and I have not been thrown into any straining panic over the apprehensions of some of our Jeremiahs. It seems there is a widespread feeling that the higher institutions of learning are taking the bit into their teeth and are running away with our religion. While it may be true that "much learning doth make some people mad," I am of the impression that we are in more danger from the lack of learning. I was impressed with the very evident religious center through the whole opening program of Missouri State University. In truth, the dominant note of the entire service was religious. The convocation opened with a musical number by the director of the musical department and it was that highly devotional Aria from St. Paul by Mendelssohn, "I praise thee, O Lord." The only other musical contribution was of the same spirit, "The Heavens are Telling the Glory of God," by Beethoven. The great student body in reverential attention followed these musical outreachings toward God as if they had never been questioned by critics high or low.

President Jesse made a simple straightforward address in which he was searchingly insistent on character as the central significance in the business of a university training. He thanked God that he had the gracious good fortune to be president of an institution that belongs to God. He disclaimed being anxious about a large enrollment, but "we want quality rather than many." A university to succeed must have a faculty competently trained and animated with high purpose; students with the well intentioned purpose of the completest manhood and womanhood. Not a word was uttered as to how to succeed in life. How different this from the burden of our magazine literature! It was a plea for complete men and women, and that plea was accentuated in every utterance with the religious note. It was the insistence that even in the so-called secular studies, the successful teacher is he who leads his students into methods of "thinking God's thoughts after him." If this initial announcement argues anything as to class work, and I think it does, the sons and daughters of Missouri will find here a sane and safe atmosphere for their academic training.

I wanted to call attention to at least one state university that is helping the real cause of unity among all religionists without directly applying itself to what we call Christian union. May not this way be quite as effectual as many of our most direct attacks on the question of divisions? After all that has been said for and against "Higher Criticism" may we not be lacking in proper viewpoint? Might it not help much if we stop to see that criticism high or low is simply an affair of the intellect? And the lower or obstructive critic is just as much an intellectualist as is the higher critic. Even this so-called secular institution recognizes that transcendent quality that sings a faith it can not prove.

I can not overestimate the auspicious opportunity to the Christian church of Missouri our Columbia Bible College affords, with free access to the university with its faculty of university trained men. Our church never, to my thinking, cried so loud for pulpit men, trained not only in the Bible, but equipped with academic training. The larger conception of unity is the growing feeling that the nature world is God's world, controlled by God's laws, and any scientific study is a part of any real religious study, each is complementary to the other. The University of Missouri now grants credit for Bible study here and what an unspeakable opportunity for our people, first on the ground with an institution where the candidate for the pulpit may go out with university training, able to undergird the pedantry of "science falsely so-called" with a learning broader and deeper.

The Dead Line at Forty.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I want to thank you for the timely words you have given us on the Centennial page in The Christian-Evangelist concerning the action of the board of one of our Illinois congregations barring from the pastorate of their church all preachers above forty years of age. Do those brethren realize that if such action should become general among our churches that it would result in barring all young men of brains and energy from our ministry. What young man that possesses real talent would feel that he could afford to spend the time and means necessary to prepare himself for this great work with such a rule, or even such a sentiment as this, staring him in the face? One of the deplorable things in the church to-day is the fact that so many of our ministers are forsaking the pulpit and embarking in business to make a living, and that too many of these are pushing these land sale and mining schemes as a means of filling up their depleted pocket-books. Every church that passes such a resolution as this should follow it immediately with another binding the church to pay a sufficient salary that the preacher may be able to lay by something to support him when the evil day comes and the fortieth birthday arrives. If the young preachers can only realize what a blow such resolutions are to the sacred calling of the ministry, they would avoid pulpits that are hedged by such unwise resolutions, unless perchance they may hope to turn the official boards away from such unwise action. I can well remember that the ministers who influenced my life most were such men as Elijah Goodwin, J. M. Mathes, A. I. Hobbs, John C. Miller, H. R. Pritchard, Love H. Jameson, and men of like character and ability and at a time when all would have been barred by this rule. Let this sentiment become common among our churches and we will have no more men to compare with them in our ministry. Fraternally,

T. J. Clark.

[These timely words from Brother Clark, in a letter addressed to Brother Snively, are well worth serious consideration. We do not believe the sentiment that would limit the period of a preacher's usefulness to forty years of age, is very widespread. No doubt, however, there is a tendency to make an artificial age limit, which is not wise or healthy. It is not a question of age, but a question of physical, intellectual and spiritual strength and vitality. We doubt if many men in normal health reach the period of their greatest usefulness as preachers much under sixty years, and still fewer is the number that reach the zenith of their powers before fifty. The church needs both its young men and its gray-haired veterans in the ministry. Each of these classes can do a work which the other can not well do. They supplement each other, and neither class should ever feel that the other is in its way. As a purely economic question it is easy to see that the longer we protract the period of a preacher's service up to the limit of his usefulness, the more we conserve and utilize the forces of the church and the greater will be the results. Then there is the consideration Brother C. suggests of its effect on young men entering the ministry. The tendency, therefore, should be to lengthen rather than to shorten the period of active service of our ministers.—Editor.]

SCIENCE AND IDEALISM. By Hugo Munsterberg. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 85 cents, net.

A year ago Yale University received a gift from a Harvard graduate and it was decided to use the money for the establishment of a series of lectures to be delivered every year at Yale by members of the Harvard faculty. In the first year of that lectureship Harvard was represented by President Eliot and Professors Palmar and Munsterberg. This small volume contains Professor Munsterberg's address on "Science and Idealism." The task which the philospopher set himself in this lecture was to find in the world as defined by modern science, both physical and psychological, an abiding basis for the fixed and universal values of truth, beauty and right which give life its significance. Gross materialistic science has no place for values. The business of science is not valuation but discovery, description and classification. So long as it keeps within its proper province it can neither affirm nor deny with respect to values. On the other hand, individualistic idealism and current pragmatism would destroy all permanent and universal values by referring all judgments and estimates to the irresponsible whim or fancy of the individual. If the individual creates his own world, unhelped and unhindered by any external realities, then there is no ground for the affirmation of any principle or value as having universal validity. The author, as an idealist, is interested in finding a basis for a belief in logical, ethical, aesthetic and metaphysical principles which shall be independent of individual fancy and free from the relativity and mutability of mere pleasure-and-pain concepts. He does it by finding in the external world—that chaos of raw material for experiences out of which each of us must construct his own orderly world—certain established and immutable demands which condition all experience. The universe is not ready-made, finished and dead. It becomes, in fact, truly a universe only as each observer for himself exercises upon it a constructive process. But it does impose upon us certain requirements which we must observe if "we want the world to be a world for us," and not merely a dream or a chaos. The conclusion is that "science falls asunder if we disbelieve in absolute ideals."

IN QUEST OF LIGHT. By Goldwin Smith. The Macmillan Co. $1.00.

This is a collection of letters written to the "New York Sun" during five or six years past. They are short, disconnected and repetitious. The attitude of Goldwin Smith toward religion illustrates the familiar dictum that man is incurably religious. In spite of his lack of faith he could not help considering religion as a matter of primary concern. He was an agnostic not satisfied with his acknowledged inability to answer the questions about God and immortality, and therefore always honestly and earnestly in quest of light. While he accepts, as assumed results of science, many conclusions which most orthodox persons would regard as destructive of Christian and even of theistic, belief, he can use the expression "a Christian of my way of thinking," and he represents himself as chiefly interested in "challenging the extreme assumptions of the materialist school." While he asserts that he has no theory—which of course is not true of any man—he defines his position by saying that he is "one of many who in these days of perplexity and doubt are trying to find some secure foundation for belief in the moral government of the universe, in the authority of conscience, and in the more hopeful view of the change which is to take place at death." On the negative side he defines himself as "one who, though he has by no means renounced theistic belief, has lost faith in the evidences of a miraculous revelation and in the authority of dogma." While most of us would be compelled to call such a man an "unbeliever," if forced to classify him, his letters contain many suggestions which are helpful to faith. His constant insistence that there is something in man which rises above the world of sense, that science and the senses can not exhaust the universe, that evolution, while it may show us whence man came as a physical being, can set us bounds to his development and worth as a spiritual being—these are all helpful considerations coming from a man of science. It is rather extraordinary to see a man of Professor Smith's erudition refer to the "immaculate conception" (page 127) when he evidently means the miraculous birth of Jesus. The immaculate conception is the recent Roman Catholic dogma of the birth of the Virgin Mary free from the taint of original sin and has nothing to do with the birth of Jesus. Another unwarrantable statement, which is six times repeated almost verbatim in as many letters, is to the effect that our belief in the Incarnation and Redemption hinges on our acceptance of the Mosaic account of the Creation and the Fall.

Professor Smith is a seeker after religious truth—an unsuccessful one in the main, but it is worth a great deal to see a man honestly seeking and honestly stating what he thinks he finds. There is tonic in reading such a man's writings, though one were compelled to disagree with him on every point. He is orthodox at least in this final statement: "Nor is there any way of salvation for us but unwavering and untrammeled pursuit of truth."

THE CONQUEST OF ARID AMERICA.. By William E. Smythe. Revised Edition. Macmillan. $1.50 net.

This is an elaboration and amplification of Greeley's famous advice, "Go west, young man." It tells what sort of young men should go west, why they should go, and what they may do when they get there. "Arid America is that half of our country lying west of the ninety-seventh meridian of longitude. West of this line there is, in general, not enough rainfall for general agriculture." But here, according to Mr. Smythe is incomparably the better half of the country. Its aridity is a blessing because it means irrigation and irrigation means scientific and accurate control of those conditions which make crops certain; because aridity always means richness of soil; because irrigation farming encourages intensive cultivation of small areas, resulting in relative density of rural population and consequent social advantages; and because of the climate. So great is Mr. Smythe's faith in the west that he says "if the Pilgrim Fathers had landed at San Diego rather than at Plymouth, that half of the country which now contains over 90 per cent of the total population whould be regarded as comparatively worthless.

However, that may be, arid America is well worthy of being conquered and transformed from desert to garden, and the process is being carried forward on a scale which is beyond comprehension of those who have not seen it and with results almost beyond the belief of easterners even when they have seen it. The book is divided into four parts. The first, "Colonial Expansion at Home," discusses the general question of the development of the west and the "miracle of irrigation." The second describes certain "real Utopias of the west," where wonderful results have already been achieved. The third, on "undeveloped America," gives a series of chapters descriptive of the resources and present development of each of the so-called arid states and territories. The fourth tells of irrigation as a national movement and of the work now being done by the federal reclamation service.

OUTLINES OF THE LIFE OF CHRIST. By W. Sanday, D. D. LL. D., New York. Charles Scribner's Sons. Price $1.25 net.

This book is a reprint of the article "Jesus Christ," in the second volume of Dr. Hasting's dictionary of the Bible. The publishers feel that the time has arrived when it would be right to accede to the wish that has been expressed in various quarters for a separate issue of this article by the distinguished Lady Margaret Professor and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, England. We agree with the publishers and are glad to have this able treatment put into a form which is more readily accessible than it was in the larger and expensive book. The article has been reprinted much as it stood, with such change as is necessary to carry out the principle of mutatus mutandus and to convert it into a book. As Dr. Sanday has in preparation a larger work on the same subject he has thought it best not to attempt to bring his first experiment more strictly up to date, but to leave it as an expression of his own mind in the year 1899, when it was written. The probabilities are that he will not have any serious alteration to make in the general treatment of the life of Christ. A map, however, which forms an important addition to this volume embodies the writer's changed opinion as to the site of Capernaum. The author, at the start, makes a survey of conditions treating those external laws as government, sects, and parties, and the internal ones, such as the state of religious thought and life, and passes to the early ministry, the teaching, and miracles, the later ministry, the Messianic crisis; and, as supplementary chapters, he discusses the nativity, infancy, and the verdict of history. Dr. Sanday does not make any great concessions to negative criticism. His book is a scholarly and dispassionate review, and it will be very interesting to compare it with the book that is promised in some years to come.

EGOISM: a Study in the Social Premises of Religion. By Louis Wallis. The University of Chicago Press. $1.00 net.

The thesis of this interesting little volume is, that Egoism is the basic principle or force in all human activity. The recognition of this fact lends illumination to historical biblical study. The inability of higher criticism to make any advance to-day is due, the author believes, to its failure to employ this sociological principle. This is the bond that is to unite the cold facts of a mere historical study and to transmute them into the constituted elements of a practical popular faith. The thesis is developed upon a basis of biblical history. Our sacred literature is an expression of social progress, whose value depends upon its fidelity to that egoistic or social principle. The concluding chapter applies this principle to present social problems.

What Answer?*

BY MRS. P. R. GIBSON.

Summer has passed away—what has it taken,
  With all its beauty and its bloom, from me?
Has there been in my life one sin forsaken?
  Have I from secret error been set free?

Have I, dear Lord and Master, drawn still nearer
  To thee, to walk more closely by thy side?
O, has thy love to me seemed ever dearer?
  Am I content in that dear love to abide?

And do I trust thee with a faith unshaken,
  As autumn follows summer, and life's flowers
Like blossoms in the frost's chill fingers taken,
  Wither and die with summer's passing hours?

O, is my life with richer beauty glowing,
  In this its golden autumn afternoon?
Are love and trust their brightest hues bestowing?
  And am I ready if the night come soon?

Dear Master, be my help in each endeavor
  To follow on, as thou shalt lead the way,
Till I may come to dwell with thee forever,
  Where is no night, but everlasting day.

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

PART III.

CHAPTER XIV.

During that Christmas breakfast—which was just as frugal as any other breakfast—Rhoda and Raymund wondered what the bad news could be with which Miss Pinns had threatened them. They were soon to know. As soon as the meal ended, Mr. William Hodges asked his niece to go with him into the repair-room; and as they passed through the door and closed it after them, Miss Pinns gave Raymund a triumphant look which seemed to say, "Now she's going to catch it!"

When Rhoda and her uncle were alone, she found the old man unusually embarrassed and bowed over upon his two canes. "Rhoda," he said, "I have something to tell you." But instead of telling her, he sat down and nervously knocked the canes together. He took off his spectacles and looked at them, then put them on and ducked his head to peer through the upper lenses at the girl. "Rhoda, I-er-Miss Pinns-er-we are going to get married, to-day."

"O, Uncle William!" cried Rhoda, turning pale.

"And you and Raymund will have to find another home," continued the other hurriedly. "Miranda says we can not afford to keep you any longer."

"Who is Miranda?" asked Rhoda rather sharply.

"That's Miss Pinns," said her uncle William, knocking the canes together louder than before.

Rhoda began to cry. "I just couldn't help it," she explained afterwards to Raymund.

"I'm awfully sorry," said the old man with a quaver of distress, "it tears my heart. Rhoda, you can't imagine how dear you and Raymund have grown to me. I often reproach myself that when your mother lived here I didn't go to see her or have anything to do with her. Once she came to the shop, just after her husband's death, and she had you twins with her—you weren't more than four at the most, and I would hardly give her civil words. It's this way with me, child; I've never felt like falling down before a person just because kin to me. I never cared for relations on the ground that they were relations. I'd never known Susie Revore, and she was no more to me, although my half-sister, than any other stranger. Of course I'd known her as a little girl, but that wasn't knowing the woman. And as to you twins, you were entire strangers, of course; as I may say, she hardly knew you herself. But you've lived with me now over five months, and you've been good and faithful in helping me to save, poor as I am." Rhoda believed the old man spoke at such length to hide his nervousness, but she was sure he felt kindly toward her.

"Oh, Uncle William," she cried, "if you like us and think we've done our part, will you send us out into the world when there's no place to go? If you don't care for us because we are kin, can't you give us a roof till we are a little older just for our work?"

"Miss Pinns won't hear to it," said the other. "I want you to believe, Rhoda, that I've urged your case."

"But why must you do what she says?"

"Because she is Miss Pinns, I suppose," said the old man glancing timidly toward the door. "Don't speak so loud, Rhoda."

Rhoda came nearer. "Uncle William, I don't believe you can be happy with her. Don't let her come between us! She can never love you as we can."

"She is very saving," said Mr. Hodges slowly. "She is a money-maker. I could not do without her. She knows just what I need, and what I like. She saves. I tell you, child, that woman's a miser. She is a great character. I can't do without her, and I suppose it's best to make everything rounded up and agreeable to feelings that we should marry.

Rhoda seized his hand and said in an urgent whisper, "Uncle William, break away from her influence!"

"Child, I can't!" murmured the other, trembling.

"Run away," whispered Rhoda. "Come with me and Raymund. Run from her. We'll hide somewhere."

"Where?" asked Mr. Hodges, a gleam of hope showing for a moment in his eyes. "Do you know of any retreat?"

Rhoda could not answer.

"No," said Mr. Hodges with a sigh, "it's not to be thought of. Look at me, on my two canes. Do I look like running away? And then there's this to consider: Miss Pinns would come after me! No, the only way to do for her is to marry her. And I'll marry her!" he added somewhat bitterly. "Oh, yes, I'll do it! And then we'll see which of the two of us is the biggest saver and tightest squeezer!" He thumped his canes on the floor and looked defiant. "Let her come on!" he muttered, still afraid to speak aloud lest Miss Pinns be listening at the door. "Hist, now, Rhoda, here"—He made a sudden motion and thrust some bank notes into her hand. "I'm not going to send you out helpless on the world. That's seventy-five dollars, that is! Be careful of it; turn it over and over, and you'll be rich one day. S-h-h! hush! Don't say a word. She's awful sharp. Go on out before she begins to suspicion. Hide those bills in your bosom."

As Rhoda started away, the old man said softly, "Come back, child!" She returned. The old man put his hand in his pocket, kept it there a good while, and drew it out apparently with the greatest effort, as if it were partially paralyzed. "Here!" He handed her some more notes. "That's another seventy-five. I meant to give you a hundred and fifty from the first, but I-er-I-a-ah-I forgot."

"Uncle William," said Rhoda, laying her hand upon his bowed shoulder, "I'd rather have your love and protection than all the money you have."

"It isn't worth that much," said Uncle William, shaking his head. "But I'm a poor man. Run on, Rhoda, get that money put somewhere quick, it makes me nervous."

So Miss Pinns married Mr. William Hodges on Christmas day, and Raymund and Rhoda were the melancholy witnesses. That day Raymund wrote a letter to Mr. Willby, of Frog Bend. It was as follows:

"Dear Mr. Willby—"We have been with Uncle William five months and two weeks. He married to-day, and they can not let us stay here any longer. Do you remember once telling me that if Rhoda and I ever needed a friend to call on you? We do indeed need a friend now, that our only relation in the world (but he was only mamma's half-brother) will not let us stay with him. Is there any work I could do in Frog Bend? I am willing to do any honest work, I don't care how hard it is. Yesterday Rhoda and I were sixteen. In a few more years I will be a man. We can stay here till we hear from you, if an answer comes within the week. Maybe you could get me a place on a farm as a farm-hand—I've had experience in that, as I told you; or I could help in a second-hand clothing store, or could clerk, or do anything that just depends on perseverance and strength."

Two days after the mailing of this letter, a boy appeared at the pawnshop

QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS

BY S. D. GORDON

The author of "Quiet Talks on Prayer" (now in its 55th thousand), and "Quiet Talks on Power" (now in its 80th thousand).

Cloth, 12mo. 288 pages. Net 75c.

"QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS" is an attempt to group up in simplest Anglo-Saxon English the statements of the entire Bible regarding Jesus. The purpose is wholly practical, that one may get at a glance, for his own thought and heart, the swing of the Bible from end to end on its central theme.

Mr. Gordon's life work has been leading up to the theme of this new book.

TOPICAL ARRANGEMENT

FIRST—The purpose of Jesus' coming; the plan of his coming; the tragic break that occurred in the plan; the surprises that worked out of that break.
SECOND—The Person of Jesus from three points of view: the human; the divine; the winsomeness of his personality.
THIRD—The seven great outstanding experiences which reveal Jesus: the Jordan Baptism; the Wilderness Temptation; the Transfiguration as an emergency unusual; the Gethsemane struggle; the Victory of Calvary.
FOURTH—Study Notes. One of the most important features of the book, making it possible for the earnest reader to follow for himself Mr. Gordon's essential methods.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY
ST. LOUIS. MO,

with a yellow envelope addressed to Raymund Revore. It contained a telegram to this effect: "Come immediately, green umbrella and all. Big surprise for you.—Nathaniel Willby."

Two days later Raymund and Rhoda got off the train at Frog Bend and had no difficulty in finding Mr. Willby's big brick house. He seemed as much delighted over their coming as if they had not been orphans, discarded by their sole surviving relative. His wife, a gentle refined lady, with snowy hair and a face of peace and beauty, made them feel at home as soon as she entered the room, for an atmosphere of home enveloped her. She was not really old, and the young people learned in the course of the day that her hair had turned white after the death of an only child, a young man of talent and promise. Perhaps it was to take her mind from the grave overlooking the Missouri that her husband had grown eccentric, abrupt and somewhat childlike. When her face settled in its most pensive calm, he would burst forth impetuously about some trifle, quarreling about the merchant who had not given him quite as much for his money as he would have given had he been the merchant and had the merchant been the purchaser—or quarreling because the neighbors let their cows roam the town and their chickens inundate his front yard—or, in short, railing about any trifle—but never a harsh word for Mrs. Willby.

When the first bloom of the meeting had been rubbed off by the friction of Mr. Willby's many questions, he said, "And now I want you to tell me how old that old woman is!"

"Who—Mrs. Weed?" said Rhoda. "I think she is seventy-eight."

"But you never asked? Didn't you ever find the ear-trumpet?"

"We found the ear-trumpet, but—"

"Amazing!" cried Mr. Willby, starting up. "Amazing! Have you no interest in your fellow-men? But come! I wired you that I had a big surprise in store for you. Come! Follow me!" He led the way across the street to a one-story cottage perched upon a bluff that skirted the river shore.

"Go up there," said Mr. Willby, pointing his finger at the cottage, "and ring at that door!"

Rhoda would have felt some hesitation about ringing at a strange door, had she not detected Mr. Willby with a triumphant smile, digging his elbow into Raymund's side. Rhoda timidly passed up the walk and rang the doorbell. As soon as she did so, she caught sight, through a transparent square in the frosted glass, of a gray-haired man, with a long blue-checked apron fastened about his waist, wielding a broom upon the hall carpet. At the first sound of the bell, the gentleman wildly snatched at his apron and fled, swinging the broom over his shoulder. Rhoda could not help smiling at the panic she had produced. The figure of the fugitive seemed familiar.

"Ring again," called Mr. Willby impatiently, as he and Raymund came upon the porch. "Stamp hard, Raymund! Let's make him think a houseful of company has come. They're always coming here, as it is. They will kill his wife some day, this prowling, dressed-up, count-your-calls everlasting company. Ugh! how I hate it!"

Rhoda rang again. She was beginning to understand the big surprise in store for her. So when the door presently opened, and Brother Bellfield confronted her she was not quite as surprised as Mr. Willby had expected.

THE HISTORY OF A HEART TRAGEDY.

BY OLIVE A. SMITH.

(Concluded from last week.)

Well, the plan worked beautifully, and at 8 o'clock that evening we were sitting in front seats at the hall. It is not the most elegant and refined auditorium in our town, and, after looking around, Dorothy whispered: "Bess, I don't know anybody here. The people don't seem to belong to our set. I'm kind of frightened; aren't you?"

"Nonsense!" I replied. "What if the audience is composed of persons belonging to a social stratum somewhat beneath our own? It is an evidence of a small nature to notice such trifles. See, there comes Madam Luvaney. O, look at those diamonds! And that dress!"

The costume was of pale blue silk, trimmed with perfectly elegant lace. The upper end of it was very greatly abridged and abbreviated. The lower end was as greatly extended and expanded. It (the lower end) expanded almost over the entire hall platform. Dorothy giggled and whispered: "That's a decolette toilette, and you know, Bess Merwin, it isn't proper to wear it to lecture in! They only belong at balls and dinners, and such things. I'm going right home, I am!"

My own nerves were a bit tremulous, but I had committed myself to the cause of emancipation, and I would not turn back. So I said, bravely: "Nonsense! Who cares about such trifles? She's going to lecture on the subject, and it's proper for her to ignore conventionalities herself. Sit still now and listen. She's going to begin."

If it were not that editors all object to the use of time-worn phrases, I would say that Dorothy and I were spell-bound by Madam Luvaney's beautiful lecture. It was grand! I can see her yet, as she raised her tall, graceful figure to its full height, and hurled from her charming red lips the following impassioned appeal:

"Why, O why, my sisters, will ye not rise in your might and break the shackles of conventionality with which the despot man hath bound ye? Why will ye who know the divine fire of human love sit passive, hiding your bruised and bleeding hearts from the world, and from the object of your affection, while man goes forth, free as the birds of the air, to seek his mate? Why, O why, my sisters, will ye bow down to tradition? O be free! Be free!"

At those words Dorothy got so excited that she stood right up. I took hold of her sash to pull her down, but the bow just untied and dangled down, looking so funny that, deeply moved as I was by the cause of emancipation, I giggled just like a silly school-girl. That made her cross, and she turned around and slapped my hand. But the audience was all applauding and shouting so that they didn't notice us. I tied her sash, and she sat down, and our eyes met, just as they did in the morning, and we understood each other. But to say more on that subject now would ruin the delicate unfolding of the plot that the editors are so fond of.

On the way home, we heard a woman say: "She's pretty well fixed, so she might have got along without taking up a collection. She's got six divorced husbands, and they averaged thirty thousand apiece in alimony."

"O!" whispered Dorothy, "just listen!" But I was not in the least excited. "What if she has made six uncongenial matrimonial alliances?" I answered. "She is a woman of lofty ideals, and it would naturally be difficult for her to discover her true soul-affinity. Perseverence is much to be admired in matrimony, as in any other realm of life."

I am now rapidly approaching the climax to my story. Some editors say that it is the most important of all the parts. Others insist that the introduc-

Charcoal Kills Bad Breath.

Bad Odor of Indigestion, Smoking, Drinking or Eating Can Be Instantly Stopped.

Sample Package Mailed Free.

Other people notice your bad breath where you would not notice it at all. It is nauseating to other people to stand before them and while you are talking, give them a whiff or two of your bad breath. It usually comes from food fermenting on your stomach. Sometimes you have it in the morning—that awful sour, bilious, bad breath. You can stop that at once by swallowing one or two Stuart Charcoal Lozenges, the most powerful gas and odor absorbers ever prepared.

Sometimes your meals will reveal themselves in your breath to those who talk with you. "You've had onions," or "You've been eating cabbage," and all of a sudden you belch in the face of your friend. Charcoal is a wonderful absorber of odors, as every one knows. That is why Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are so quick to stop all gases and odors of odorous foods, or gas from indigestion.

Don't use breath perfumes. They never conceal the odor, and never absorb the gas that causes the odor. Besides, the very fact of using them reveals the reason for their use. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges in the first place stop for good all sour brash and belching of gas, and make your breath pure, fresh and sweet, just after you've eaten. Then no one will turn his face away from you when you breathe or talk; your breath will be pure and fresh, and besides your food will taste so much better to you at your next meal. Just try it.

Charcoal does other wonderful things, too. It carries away from your stomach and intestines, all the impurities there massed together and which cause the bad breath. Charcoal is a purifier as well as an absorber.

Charcoal is now by far the best, most easy and mild laxative known. A whole boxful will do no harm; in fact, the more you take the better. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made of pure willow charcoal and mixed with just a faint flavor of honey to make them palatable for you, but not too sweet. You just chew them like candy. They are absolutely harmless.

Get a new, pure, sweet breath, freshen your stomach for your next meal, and keep the intestines in good working order. These two things are the secret of good health and long life. You can get all the charcoal necessary to do these wonderful but simple things by getting Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. We want you to test these little wonder workers yourself before you buy them. So send us your full name and address for a free sample of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. Then after you have tried the sample, and been convinced, go to your druggist and get a 25c box of them. You'll feel better all over, more comfortable, and "cleaner" inside.

Send us your name and address to-day and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 60 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

tion is the most important. I do not wish to take sides either way, for I understand that editors are very sensitive men, and that their feelings are easily wounded, especially by their contributors. Only a few days ago I read in a magazine that "The editor experiences an acute pang every time he is forced to return an unsuccessful manuscript to its owner." That statement impressed me, gentle reader. because I saw, in another magazine, that some editors return 25 manuscripts every day. Just think of a poor editor experiencing 25 "acute pangs" every day in the year except Sunday! I used to think, in my childish ignorance, that editors lived an easy, luxurious life. Perhaps they do, with the exception of those "acute pangs," but they must be dreadfully wearing on the constitution.

I pass by the soul-stirring events of the next few days, not because they are unworthy of narration, but because the principles of art demand that I make the denouement of the story a complete surprise to you and the editor. I will proceed at once to the denouement.

On Tuesday afternoon, the door of Professor Ramey's room was burst open with great violence, and two suffering heroines, with tear-dimmed eyes and dishevelled locks, stood, hand in hand, before their hearts' idol.

"We have come," sobbed Dorothy, "because we can no longer hide from the world our bruised and bleeding hearts.'

"We can not!" I echoed, from the folds of the handkerchief where my swollen face was hidden.

"We have risen in our might—and broken—the shacks—of conven—tion—ality," gasped Dorothy. She is so excitable! She should have said "shackles," but I thought it was no time to be exacting about trifles, so I moaned faintly, for I was very weak, "We have."

"Pray choose one of us," I wailed, "and the other—will go—forth to—her fate."

We could stand no longer, gentle reader, and we sank exhausted on the front seats. At the same time we were conscious of a peculiar, spasmodic sort of a noise that came from the region of Professor Ramey's desk. So great is the power of tradition over the feminine soul that we had kept our faces hidden. But the silence became so oppressive that I finally peeped out with my right eye, just as Dorothy peeped out with her left eye. The north window was open, and Professor Ramey stood there, his back turned toward us, and his broad shoulders heaving with emotion. Presently he turned around and walked to his desk. His eyes were red and watery, and he looked so grave and tragic! He stood there, twisting his mustache violently for some minutes. Then he looked at us as if he were going to speak. Then—O so suddenly!—he dropped his face into his hands and laughed! Such a great, hearty laugh as it was! I never heard anything like it from a professor before.

I will not attempt to describe our emotions. I will simply say that our womanly pride came to our rescue, and that we arose and walked haughtily and rapidly down the aisle. I had grasped the handle of the door, when I heard the professor's voice. It had a ring of authority in it. We had heard that ring before. "Girls," he said, "come here."

We went.

"Sit down there," he said; "I want to talk to you a few moments."

We sat. I hope, gentle reader, that you and the editor do not expect Dorothy and me to remember every detail of that conversation. Our minds were in too great a tumult for that. But the professor talked nicely. He said that he appreciated our excellent work in history, and he feared he had encouraged us to confine ourselves too closely to books. He said that we must romp around during vacation, and not be in too much of a hurry to get hold of the lives of other people.

"In regard to the madam's cause," he continued, twisting his mustache again, and looking very grave, "you know we learn in history that reform is always of slow and difficult growth. You may live to see the day when the lady's ideals are realized, but I do not expect to. I shall probably have passed on to a higher plane of life. Personally I derive great comfort from that thought."

Then he said he must finish grading the "C" class papers, and asked us if we would like to help. Dorothy brightened right up, and said yes. We spread our wet handkerchiefs on the desk to dry, and, strange as it may seem, we were soon actually smiling over the limited knowledge of history revealed by those "C" class papers.

School closed the next week, and the professor made a lovely speech. He said he was going to travel during vacation, but was glad that he would have us all again next term. I have thought that perhaps we ought to be brave and cheerful, and wear smiling faces when we can. So we girls are going for a picnic tomorrow. I'm going to wear my new white dress, and—O, but we'll have a time!

EPILOGUE.

There is one point in my story that has worried me. It is the moral. Dorothy and I read up on the subject, and one editor said that "the moral should not stick out like the sting of a wasp." Another editor intimated that the custom of introducing any kind of morals in stories is an obsolete custom. We decided to adopt that view, so you will find no moral in the story.

After settling that question, we hunted up a book entitled "Hints to Young Writers." One of the hints was, "Stamps for the return of a manuscript should be enclosed in case it should be unavailable." Dorothy got out her dictionary to see what "unavailable" means, but the word wasn't there. Then I knew, as soon as I thought about it, that editors need dictionaries of their own, somewhat different from the dictionaries used by the masses. I told Dorothy that they would need words of their own in which to give adequate expression to their emotions when suffering from those "acute pangs" heretofore mentioned. I shall not enclose any stamps, for I know that my story will not be unavailable, no matter what that may mean.

Another hint was: "Letters of advice should be enclosed with the manuscript, not sent in separate envelopes." I shall not advise the editor very much, for men often resent advice given by females, even their own beloved partners. I shall merely advise him to publish my story in the very next number of his magazine, and to begin it on the first page after the advertisement of "Pond's Extract."

After we get the story off we are going to discuss our plans for the future. We are to go abroad after our educations are completed, and I think Dorothy intends to marry a French count, or something of that sort. I shall either dedicate my life to the cause of literary art or wed an Italian nobleman and reside in a villa on the banks of the Tiber. My plans can not be fully matured until I hear from the editor who is to publish my story.

"Nayther; I wants to put some money in," was the reply.

The clerk entered the amount and pushed the slip toward her to sign.

"Above or below it?"

Secret of Woman's Health.

If the woman of the twentieth century is going to give the greater part of her waking hours to unnecessary care of her body, she sinks to the level of the Indian squaws, who were the pets of the great chiefs hundreds of years ago. The squaws were oiled and painted and overhung with sharks' teeth and wampum—they had rings on their fingers and bells on their toes. What real differences are there between those fine ladies of the Choctaws and the Iroquois and the fine ladies of to-day? And yet there echo in the ears of the modern woman the cry of the tenement house, the cry of the child laborer, the cry of all the pressing, unsolved problems of the home and of the world—the cry of her own immortal soul—the while she dawdles over her silly face, and grimaces before a mirror! The squaw was the nobler woman of the two. At least, she "lived up to her lights."

The whole "beautification" enterprise is delusive. The woman who scrupulously regards neatness, who observes the laws of health, who does the duty of each day as thought it might be her last, and then gives her best efforts to making her world better and happier, without much considering her own complexion—that woman is not only admirable for her character, but she is also likely to be far better looking than her be-laced, over-dressed, powdered, roughed, "cerated," massaged, and over-manipulated sister.—Kate Upson Clark in Leslie's Weekly.

How to be Very, Very Popular!

Never hesitate to talk about yourself and your affairs. This will interest everybody.

Do not fail to throw cold water on other people's plans and to discourage their ambitions. Nobody is sensitive about this.

Be sure to dwell upon the defects and failings of others, and call everybody's attention to them. Everybody likes gossip.

Always be on the watch for slights and insults. Remember, most people are your social superiors and are trying to cut you.

Always take the best seat wherever you go, and, after you are well seated, offer your seat to others without the slightest intention of getting up.

Just look out for your own comforts. Let other people do the same.

Never do anything that you do not feel like doing.

Never try to force your moods. Let them take care of themselves. Nobody will mind if you get into a rage, or nag or scold, or if you have the "blues." It is pleasant to have gloomy, moody people with long faces around the house; it is so uplifting to everybody.

Never hesitate to show it when your feelings are hurt, or to indicate your jealousy when others receive more attention or are better dressed than you.

If things do not suit you, slam things around the house. Be just as disagreeable as possible. Never mind if you break a thing or two now and then. It will relieve the blood pressure on the brain.

Always remember that praise is a splendid thing for you, but very bad for others. It encourages vanity, and people who are praised get so "puffed up" and "big headed" that there is no living with them. —Success.

Bees that Burrow in the Ground.

The burrowing-bees are commonly ranked with solitary insects. Certainly they are not "social," living in organized communities, like honey-bees. But one might venture to call them "neighborly insects," for they love to make their cavernous hermitages in well-peopled neighborhoods.

Their burrow sites are preferably upon hard, dry spots, with a bit of slope, maybe. Therein the mother will sink a shaft eight or ten inches deep and about three-eighths of an inch wide. On either side she will dig out small ovate cells, five or six in all, which she duly provisions and supplies with an egg apiece.

The burrows are about the bigness of the occupant and extend inward for a foot or so with sundry enlargements, after the fashion of their kind, wherein the young are bred. In the height of the season these bee neighborhoods are the scene of a busy life. The air resounds with the hum of wings as the insects fly to and fro on parental duties bent, plenishing their nurseries with pollen and honey-of-the-flowers. But just inside each burrow gate an interesting phase of insect life goes on. Beyond the gateway, which is about the length of the bee, there rises a vestibule—a tiny expansion of the burrow—whose use soon appears. Just within the gateway, with face toward the opening, one of the housekeepers, now the male and now the female, but oftener the former, keeps constantly on guard. And great need there is for such sentry duty; for insect rogues and thieves besiege the doors to plunder the contents of the nurseries or infect them with parasitic eggs.

Here, then, we see the male on sentry duty, his body blocking up the gateway and his rounded head closing up the entrance. When his mate comes home with her bee-basket full, the guard backs into the vestibule, which is large enough to allow the passing of the female, and returns to his post. A loving welcome awaits the incomer; for the doorkeeper with open mandibles and waving antennæ, the apian style of embrace, greets his partner right joyously. Thus the good mistresses of our homes and their maids at the back gate are not the only order of housekeeping creatures that exchange kisses at one's doorways!—A. C. McCook, in Harper's Magazine for September.

Twenty Times a Day.

BY W. E. RAMBO.

Twenty times a day, dear,
  Twenty times a day,
Your mother thinks about you,
  At school, or else at play.
She's busy in the kitchen,
  Or she's busy up the stairs;
But like a song her heart within,
  Her love for you is there.

There's just a little thing, dear,
  She wishes you would do,
I'll whisper, 'tis a secret;
  Now, mind, I'll tell it you;
Twenty times a day, dear,
  And more, I've heard you say,
"I'm coming in a minute,"
  When you should at once obey."

At once, as soldiers instant
  At the motion of command;
At once, as sailors seeing
  The captain's warning hand,
You could make the mother happy
  By minding in that way,
Twenty times a day, dear,
  Twenty times a day.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

I announced two weeks ago that our ice cream social was closed, but since then I have been obliged to send out and get more ice cream, for the orders have kept coming in right along. At that time we had taken in, you will remember, $91.50, which we thought pretty well, considering that the ice cream was all imaginary and you had to stay at home to eat it. So we cried "Hurrah!" But this week I think we will all have to throw up our hats, for we have inched our way above the $100 line. Here's a note from Mrs. V. F. Johnson and her children, Everest and Majorie, Clinton, Ia.: "We have become very much interested in orphan Charlie. Everest and Majorie are two little Clinton residents; each wants to send 10 cents for the educational fund. Count it in your ice cream social. What is required of the members of the Av. S.? We think we would like to join. We pray that Charlie may grow to be a good and useful man." (We mustn't forget that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is getting new subscribers all the time, and though we know so much about the Av. S., others may not. The Advance Society was founded for the purpose of leading people to read good literature regularly; primarily for young people and secondarily for anybody. The rules are: Read 5 pp. history and 30 lines of poetry every week, memorize a good quotation weekly, read at least one verse in the Bible every day, and keep an account of work done in a notebook; at the end of 12 weeks, "a quarter," send me your report. Every time you keep a "quarter" it entitles you to be printed on our honor list. Our new honor list is as follows: Beulah Shrotridge, Glenwood, Ind. (10th quarter); Ruth E. Day, Sparta, Mo. (5th); Harriet M. Causland, Coffeyville, Kan. (the number of quarter is not marked on this report); Edna Bear, Iberia, Mo. (11th and 12th); Walter S. Whitacre, Mt. Vernon, Ill. (9th); Flossie Davis, Des Moines, Ia. (9th); Mrs. F. A. Potts, Chattanooga, Tenn. (22d); Grace Everest, Oklahoma, Okla. (7th); Jean Chambers, Richwood, Ky. (14th); Nannie D. Chambers, Richwood, Ky. (30th and 31st). While I am still in this parenthesis I will thank Edith Slightman, of Spokane, Wash., for a picture card entitled, "On the Stump." The illustration is a white-and-gray cat, lying upon a stump. It is not nearly so handsome and graceful a cat as my Felix, but I presume it was the best feline they could find up in Washington. I certainly appreciated the remembrance, though this may not sound as if I did. Had it been anything but a cat I wouldn't have said a word, but of course any cat instinctively invites comparison with Felix. I also have an illustrated post card from our old-time Av. S. member, Susie Scearce, from Colorado Springs. She writes: "We took the trip through the Garden of the Gods Friday. It is certainly wonderful. Wednesday I walked up to the Halfway House. It is a steep walk of three miles. The mountains are wonderful. We leave for Salt Lake City to-morrow." The picture on this card of the Balanced Rock is novel and pretty; there is no cat on it. Also I have a picture card from Bessie Tracy Ryman, Liberty, Mo., of the Smithville High School. The building, I observe, is of two stories, and the telephone pole of four, which is about all I can say for this picture. I suspect there are cats in that basement. I will crawl out of my parenthesis now and get into the open where there is more air, though it does look as if it were "fixing" to rain—and a church social at our house this very night!)

Mrs. Ella G. Parker, Hannibal, Mo.: "Here we are, the Junior Christian Endeavorers of the First Christian Church, with the proceeds of our literal ice cream social. Last summer we sewed and made many things for the Babies' Home, St. Louis, but this summer sickness prevented—my boys sew beautifully. As superintendents, we promised our Juniors an interesting social. We had 1,300 tickets struck—sold every one, and some paid 20 cents for a ticket just 'to help along.' We told everybody about Charlie, and that we also wanted to send part of our proceeds to the other orphans at the Orphans' Home, St. Louis. Mrs. T. G. Delaney offered us the use of her lawn; she thinks so much of the Av. S." (And we think so much of her.) "So Mrs. Delaney, Mrs. Arnold, Miss Austin and I met with the children and prepared to make a fine appearance. We had beautiful Chinese lanterns, etc. So many people came that we sold all our cream and had to send for more," (just as I had to do.) "And such fine home-made cake as our mothers made for us!" (Um-mm-mmh!) "We inclose $15 for Charlie's education; that is half of what we cleared. We wish you could visit our Junior meeting some time." (And so do I.) "Our attendance has been 25 to 50 every Sunday during the summer, though many of our 100 members were out of town. Mrs. V. Arnold is assistant. We wish Charlie a pleasant winter's work, and all success this life can afford." Mrs. N. C. Skinner. Dorsey, Ill.: "While Charlie was visiting us we noticed his crutches were rather short, and a few interested friends send you this little donation ($3.30) to get him new ones. We wanted Charlie to stay to our basket meeting September 1. Brother Groner has preached for this church 26 years tomorrow, and we celebrate each anniversary with a basket dinner, free to all. Please come and take dinner with us." (I am thoroughly in sympathy with that basket dinner, and appreciate your kind invitation so much, but am sorry to say that I have already had my dinner of September 1 and feel that I could not take another bite during that day.) Manie Bayless, Mulkeytown, Ill.: "Have been wishing I could help with the social ever since you proposed it. A friend has given me a little money to use, so I send a dime for a dish of Charlie's ice cream. Hope you are not sold out yet." (I would have been sold out if I hadn't heard from faithful old comrades like yourself.) "May God shower his richest blessings on you and Charlie and Drusie." Sarah Ann Gibbs, Fresno, Cal.: "I have just got home from San Francisco for the first time. I struck the strike. From there I went to Santa Clara Valley, visited Aunt Abby on her prune ranch; went to San Jose to the ice cream social at the Woman's Exchange, gave Aunt Allie the ice cream and now send you the 20 cents for Charlie. I hope Charlie will meet Rhoda and Raymund in St. Louis and have a good chat with them." Flossie Davis, Des Moines: "Have been visiting all summer and have had company ever since I got home. I almost forgot to read my history last week. I neglected to send to the library so I had to hustle around on Saturday and borrow one. I've read all we have. I got 3 books of poetry Christmas and am almost through the last one. I guess I am too late for the social, but will send my little dime anyhow. I must close and get some dinner for my company." (Yes, that's the trouble with company. Nobody cares about their being around except at meal time. Oh, give me company who do not eat! Your dime was on time. They always are. I smile inwardly when people meet me and say, "I am so sorry I didn't know about your social, so I could have given something." What's to keep 'em from doing it yet? The laws of Arkansas may not be all they should be, but they don't forbid that.) "We are going out to Ft. Des Moines this afternoon to see the soldiers' quarters. It is very pretty out there." Edna Bear, Iberia, Mo.: "It has been 4 years since I began keeping the Av. S. rules. I inclose $1.15; 15 for Charlie's education, 10 for Drusie, and for the 90 cents, send me a gold Av. S. pin." (I have ordered the pin to be sent you from N. Y. Let me know when you receive it.) "I attended the picnic of the Farmers' Institute one day. It was held Sept. 14, 15. In the morning was the parade, headed by the Iberia cornet band, followed by the M. W. A. and the farmers with their display of corn, also dairying. Then came the flower display and lastly the young women riding white horses. I visited the new dormitory built for the young ladies of Iberia Academy. In the evening I heard some very able speaking, also music by the band." Mrs. A. B. Cornelius, Humboldt, Neb.: "I look forward to the time when my little daughters will become interested in the Av. S. work. It is a relief to turn from theology and sectarian discussions to children who do not talk so much, but are doing things. Thanks for introducing me to Felix. Like yourself I like cats,—at a respectful distance; then Felix always amuses and never annoys me." (Yes, in other words, for let us be plain about this matter, you don't have to feed him.) "Here is a dollar each for Charlie and Drusie. I thank you for your words about chain letters. You said what I have long wanted to say; you gave me much moral encouragement." Reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: "I inclose money order for $25 for orphan Charlie's educational fund. From all accounts I judge him a promising lad, one who will make good use of any advantages given him. Am much interested in the aim, work and progress of the Av. S." (This note, brief and eminently to the point, hails from Riverside, Cal.) Walter S. Whitacre, Mt. Vernon, Ill.: "I have about two more quarters finished now, and will copy and mail them as soon as I can. I send my 9th quarter anyway, because my ability to do anything is so uncertain that I must wait no longer. I was greatly surprised and pleased to receive your novel, 'Garcilaso,' as an Av. S. premium, but was unable at the time to sit up to write my acknowledgement. I am very sorry I could not attend the ice cream social. That's just the kind I like—a social where I can't get hold of the cream or anything to eat." (At some socials you don't hold much when you are given sure enough things.) "I attended this one in spirit but for certain legitimate reasons failed to order my cream. I am proud of the Av. S., proud to be a member of it. If I were president of such an organization I fear I would be too proud for 'anything.' But you have too much to think about to be affected that way; writing books and stories and letters, and reading letters and counting money and watching it rain, and looking after Felix is enough to keep any one in an humble frame of mind. I have been thinking of going to Eureka Springs for my health; that's in an adjoining county to yours. They claim to average 309 clear days there per year." (If you could secure a claim like that and settle on it, you would be rich before the year was out. Seriously, though, my county stays dry from the first of January to the end of those wornout, listless, unsatisfactory days that follow Christmas; yes, we've just voted it.) "When I go to Eureka and fatten on spring water I'll make it a point to climb the mountains and call on you and Felix." (Good! You'd better lay in a supply of alpenstocks, though, before you try to reach Bentonville. It is needless to caution any one who has followed me through these pages to fetch an umbrella.) Mrs. Mary S. Lemar, Rich Hill, Mo.: "Here is a dollar for Charlie's educational fund; hope I am not too late for a dish of ice cream." (We have sent the boys to bring in some empty benches from the old church; plenty of room yet.) Nelle Northcutt, Knox City, Mo.: "Our ice cream social is a little late. It came off some time ago, but on account of illness have been unable to send the money before, $2.05. I am so glad you have been so successful. I send the names of those who contributed." (Among which I note with pleasure that of my old friend Brother H. A. Northcutt.) Anna P. Smith, Howard, Kan.: "Am I too late for the social? If the freezer is empty and the angel food all gone, give me 15 big red Arkansaw apples—here is $1.50 for myself and S. S. class. I had one of those apples at the World's Fair and know they are good. I pray the Lord's richest blessings upon all members of the Av. S. for their noble work, and I pray that Charlie may live to be noble and good." Mrs. F. A. Potts, Chattanooga: "I congratulate you on the success of the ice cream social. It is very encouraging. It seems there should be enough to start Charlie in school. How long do you expect it to take him to finish the course? If I have anything encouraging to tell you a little later I will write you again." (Mrs. Potts tells me that she collected $1.30 for the social and has placed it in the bank at Chattanooga to our credit. I do not count it in with our receipts because I have made it a rule of my life and of the Av. S., never to count any money till my eye has gazed upon its honest face. All the same, we will remember it is down south for us, for Mrs. Potts has put it with a little sum which is drawing interest at the bank for Charlie. I have several letters from Charlie and from Drusie, but must wait two weeks to hand them out; at which time we will discuss Charlie's educational prospects. Oh, here is a post script to Walter Whitacre's letter which I overlooked): "When it came to getting this letter and Av. S. report ready for the mail, I just kept wishing a dish of Charlie's ice cream worse and worse, and so my partner and I hunted around till we found a couple of dimes and here they are for our two dishes. I could eat a dozen or two of that kind of cream if I had dimes enough. I am a little older than Charlie and I remember when I was about his age, how badly I wanted money to go to school on. I owe Drusie a letter and now that I am able to write I must write to her the very next one. By the way, is the South Chih-li Mission a union mission?" (It is union in the sense that when its missionaries left this country they laid aside all denominational differences, and went simply on the Bible, without any creeds, or under any organizations. These missionaries among whom Drusie is so happy, find the natives wholly ignorant of predestination, original sin and close communion; but as they are equally ignorant of the story of our Savior, they think it best to devote all their time to teaching the heathen about the Blessed One of Bethlehem. A last word about our ice cream social; it has brought in, up to date, $138.15!

Bentonville, Ark.

The Right Kind of Hearts.

BY MRS. L. MEALEY.

'Twas only a little dead baby lying there so pale and cold, its little form like sculptured marble. The little dimpled hands were meekly crossed above the quiet breast. The golden curls were brushed from off the broad, white brow, and the long, silken lashes swept the rounded cheek. 'Twas just a pale little rosebud broken from off the parent stem. Its little life ended almost before it had begun. The pure soul had escaped from its tenement of clay, and gone to live with God.

Sweetly it rests and on dream wings flies
To play with the angels of paradise.

Its mission on earth was ended. No more would the silent rooms echo with its childish laughter and the pattering of little feet. But the baby hands are now reaching down from above to draw the hearts of the grief-stricken parents heavenward. There lay the little casket in all its snowy loveliness, fit emblem of purity. We, too, must become pure in heart like little children if we would enter the kingdom of heaven, and behold its glories. For nothing unclean or tarnished may enter there. We must have our robes washed white in the blood of the Lamb. We must live pure lives day by day, and do nothing that is displeasing to the Master. Let us not be desirous of vain glory, provoking one another, envying one another. We must also be careful in little things as well as in great things. It is the little things sometimes that tell. I once knew a dear old Christian woman who was poor in this world's goods, but who had treasures untold laid up above. Well, this dear old mother in Zion wove carpets for a living, and one day a customer accused her of keeping back some of her carpet rags. "Why, my dear woman," she said, "I wouldn't do a thing like that for the whole world, for what would it profit me if I gained the carpet rags but lost my immortal soul?"

And so the little things count as well as the great things. We should also have a spiritual housecleaning occasionally; in fact, we should have one every day. We must not only sweep out the middle of the room, but we must dig out the corners and sweep down all of the spiritual cobwebs, such as roots of bitterness, wicked thoughts, jealousies, etc., that may be lurking there awaiting a favorable opportunity to spring forth some unlucky day to confound us. A friend of mine one time asked her minister how she could obtain a pure heart and keep it pure. She had made a profession of religion and united with the church, but she was not satisfied. She feared her religion was mere empty form. She attended church regularly, but she feared her devotion lacked the life and spirit that they should have; besides, she realized that she was proud and vain, easily puffed up, and was conscious of cherishing roots of bitterness towards a friend. She felt that she was wrong in every way. She was in the slough of despondency and was not spiritually strong enough to climb out. And so she carried her troubles to her pastor. He told her that in the first place she must humble herself and become as a little child; carry her griefs to her heavenly Father, just as she would to her own earthly parent; and make a complete surrender. She must not keep back anything. If the gift was complete, and she was truly sincere, God would pour out his richest blessings upon her. She took the advice and made the surrender, and she became a power for good both in her home and in the church.

Perhaps some of us are not living as close to the Master as we should. Only God and our own hearts know.

Our first supply of rally day souvenirs was quickly exhausted. We have a new shipment and can now fill all orders promptly.

This sentiment is expressed in scores of letters—"Having examined several church hymnals, our committee has decided to purchase 'Gloria in Excelsis.' Send them at your earliest convenience."

We are receiving many orders for the picture of Editor J. H. Garrison that we are giving as a premium for one new subscription and one renewal accompanied by the necessary $3. This picture should be in home, study and church library.

Though not conspicuously advertised of late, the "Holy Spirit" by J. H. Garrison, and "Victory of Faith," by E. L. Powell, have been great sellers through the summer. Only $1 each, or either in combination with The Christian-Evangelist for $2.25.

Below we present a cut of the "Buckingham," The Christian-Evangelist's headquarters in Buffalo. We can get the management to agree to receive only a limited number of our guests, as this popular resort is usually full to its utmost capacity. Two dollars per day, American plan, will be the rate. It is within two blocks of the convention hall.

When told other Bible school literature is "just as good as the Dowling," a tribute is being paid our Bible school supplies that we highly appreciate. Such testimonials have their part in securing for this house orders from thousands of our schools for lesson helps, juvenile papers and song books. Samples always sent on application. We court comparison of quality and prices.

The Christian-Evangelist and a fountain pen for $2. The Christian-Evangelist and the "Ladies' Home Companion" $2.25. The Christian-Evangelist (to a new subscriber) and a self-filling fountain pen warranted ten years, $2.50. The Christian-Evangelist and the "Review of Reviews" to either a new subscriber or a renewal, $3—the latter alone will cost you $3 if ordered from the Review office.

I am glad you have taken hold of this method of supplying preachers with the best books published on the greatest themes of our times and on such favorable terms that many of us could not buy on any other conditions. You keep abreast of the times as a publishing house and an appreciative ministry will doubtless reward you by their gratitude and patronage.—Joseph Lowe, Oakland, Kan.

Write us for the installment plan of buying the best books at the lowest prices.

The Christian-Evangelist Special over the Wabash leaves St. Louis at noon, Thursday, October 11. We will have a specially conducted party, and will gladly welcome all disciples who wish to go with us up to the convention city. Officers of the Wabash company will be in attendance and every accommodation possible will be granted our companions in travel. Remember you have the choice of a lake trip without added expense.

Arrangements have been made in the interest of our Foreign Missionary Society to sell regular $1.50 books like Mrs. Susie Rijnhart's "With the Tibetans in Tent and Temple," at 60c. Bishop Thoburn's "Conquest of India," John H. De Forest's "Sunrise in the Sunrise Kingdom," Wilson S. Naylor's "Daybreak in the Dark Continent," and Ralph E. Diffendorfer's "Child Life in Mission Lands" at 50c. Cloth bound.

Adding new galleys to our mailing list is a prominent feature of our composing room. Our constituency and even those who were not formerly our constituents, but who realize as never before the need of journalistic leadership surcharged with the sentiment "In faith, unity; in opinion and methods, liberty; in all things, charity," have thrown themselves in uncalculating devotion and enthusiasm into the enterprise of placing The Christian-Evangelist in 100,000 homes. They bid fair to succeed before 1909. Every mail brings multitudes of subscriptions by ones and twos accompanied by the regular $1.50 fee. We are happy to report the following clubs also, during the week:

CHRISTIAN UNION:

A Historical Study

By J. H. GARRISON.

This latest book of J. H. Garrison deals with the living question of Christian Union from the historical point of view. The author presents Christian Union as it existed in—

I. THE APOSTOLIC AGE.
II. THE POST-APOSTOLIC AGE.
III. THE GRAECO-ROMAN AGE.
IV. THE PROTESTANT ERA.
V. THE PERIOD OF REUNION, beginning with the Nineteenth Century.

These are the five chapters of the book with numerous subtitles under which the subject is discussed. The closing chapter deals with present day movements toward Christian union, in which the plea of the Disciples of Christ is strongly stated. One of the most interesting features of the book is its treatment of recent interdenominational movements, including that of federation, in their relation to Christian union.

This is one of the timeliest books that has ever been issued from our press, and we predict for it an extraordinary demand as an up-to-date statement of this vital question, both in the light of history and of current movements in the religious world. It contains 207 pages, is bound in the best silk cloth, and sells for $1.00, postpaid.

Marching to Victory.

BY O. M. THOMASON.

Tune—"Marching Through Georgia."

Let us tune our voices for the great triumphant song,
Let us glean the golden sheaves as we march along,
Let the Pittsburg meeting be fifty thousand strong,
As we go marching to victory.

Chorus—

Hurrah! hurrah! we'll make the music ring,
Hurrah! hurrah! the gospel we will sing,
And many a weary soul to Christ in triumph we will bring,
As we go marching to victory.

From the land where heathen souls are in the greatest need,
There will be the sowers who have sown the gospel seed,
Telling of the precious souls from bondage they have freed,
While they were marching to victory.

There will be the reapers from the islands of the sea,
Telling of the joy there is in making sinners free,
Telling of the work that yet remains for you and me,
As we go marching to victory.

There will be rejoicing by the workers gathered there,
Telling of their fields of labor scatter'd far and near,
Don't you want to do your part and in the glory share?
When we accomplish the victory?

There we'll get encouragement to press on evermore,
And gather inspiration for the work that lies before,
Till our ship will anchor on the happy golden shore,
And we've accomplished the victory.

Davenport, Wash.

LOOKING TOWARD PITTSBURG.

It is not surprising that under the inspiration of our Centennial's appeals for heroic initiative and achievements sublime our poets whose hearts are full should break forth into song.

During that great festival there will be triumphal odes read to applauding thousands, and afterward commemorative ones will find way into our literature. But doubtless the songs angels will most approve are those sung along the way, helping us past discouragements, cheering us under the clouds and through the dust of the conflict, and bringing us victory beaming into the Centennial Assembly in 1909. We shall sing your song, Brother Thomason, and thank you for its pictures and sentiments of sacred conquest.

Congratulations, Brothers Gates and Johann. We rejoice in the rising tide of interest in our Bible colleges. Christian missions, Christian benevolence and Christian education constitute a trinity of interests embracing most of the best incentives and activities of our churches. There should be a proportional development of these. The greatest good to our common Christianity will be conserved by their being builded up together. Let us closely scrutinize the statistical tables and rally to the help of the weakest while rejoicing in the progress of the more prosperous.

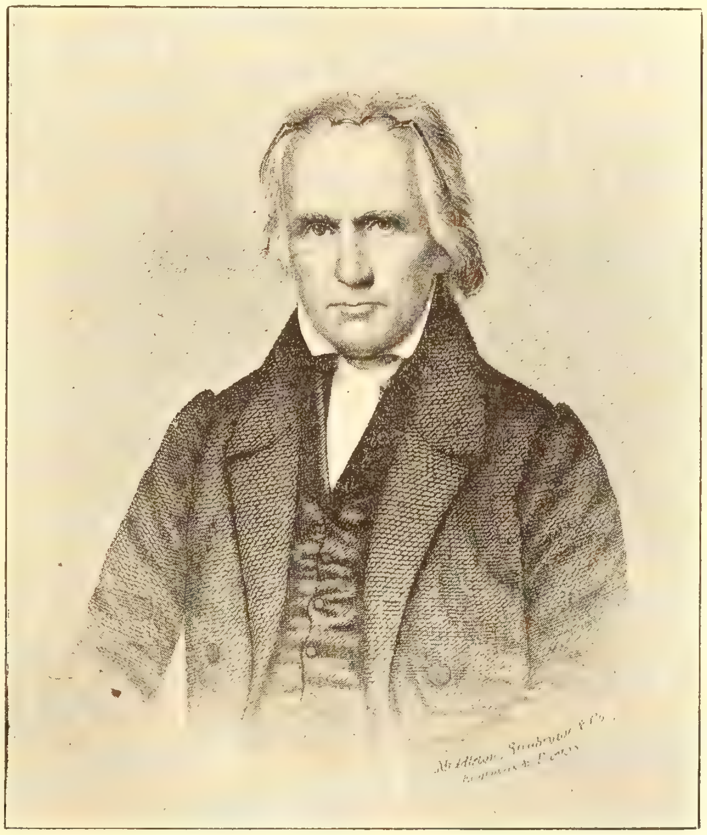
A Large (Conditional) Gift.

Mrs. E. L. Ford and daughters, Estelle and Nell B., have agreed to give to the Disciples' Divinity House the sum of $10,000 to establish an endowed scholarship fund, on condition that a like sum be added to it from other sources.

The interest from this gift of the Fords will be used to aid young men to study in the Divinity School of the University of Chicago. A scholarship of $100 will be offered annually to the graduating classes of each of the colleges. They will be assigned by a committee of the college faculty to the students best qualified by character and scholarship, for the ministry of the Gospel. The ultimate end in view is to raise the average of ministerial qualification and equipment among the Disciples. Each $100 of revenue from the fund will bring one new student annually to the university.

Errett Gates.

THOMAS CAMPBELL,
Father of Alexander Campbell. (See Easy Chair.)



To the memory of Thomas Campbell, the saintly pioneer, who, in an age of religious strife and bitterness, breathed the sweet spirit of peace and catholicity, and who, moved by the Spirit of Christ, lifted a banner of unity which is to-day an ensign of hope to millions of longing souls who are praying for a united Church.—Dedication of "Christian Union," J. H. Garrison's latest book.

Christian University.

There is much rejoicing in Christian University, Canton, Mo., and among the friends of the school elsewhere. When the old university building was destroyed by fire, March 23, 1903, the trustees of Christian University immediately took steps to erect a modern structure, adapted to the present and future needs of the school. We have now the best and most convenient school building owned by our brotherhood. When the time came for it, we did not have money enough and were compelled to borrow $15,000, and the trustees have been able to reduce the debt by only $1,250, so that we now owe $13,750 and interest.

Five weeks ago some of our creditors demanded their money, so it was decided to try to raise the money to pay off the entire debt together with the accrued interest.

Subscriptions were taken on condition that enough be raised by October 1 to pay off all our debts. Many thought the task too great but as the work progressed interest increased and when the books were closed on October 1, the subscriptions, all of which are to be paid within the next ten days, amounted to $15,800.

There were many liberal givers. One brother in St. Louis pledged $5,000; another in Kansas City $500, one in Illinois $500, one in Iowa $500. In Canton one donor pledged $1,000, five promised $500 each, several gave $250 or more, while many others donated smaller sums.

I have never witnessed a more liberal and cheerful response to a call for help and desire hereby to publicly thank all those who have assisted us in word or deed.

Within the next two weeks Christian University will be entirely out of debt. The new building with its furniture and apparatus is worth $60,000 and we shall be glad to present it to the brotherhood, free of all incumbrance.

It is now our purpose to work for additional endowment and expect to report an increase of no less than $100,000, when we come to the Centennial in 1909. Carl Johann, President C. U.

Current Events

Cuba.

Several years' of history have been enacted in Cuba during the past week. President Palma's threat of resignation was duly carried out. The retirement of Palma and his cabinet and the unwillingness of the moderate party to participate in any function of the government left the island practically in a state of anarchy. Secretary Taft exhausted all possible devices in the hope of galvanizing the defunct government into life, but without success. It was utterly dead. There was nothing to do but administer its estate. Under the conditions which prevailed on the island it would have been folly to expect an effective and united government to result from a new election. The moderates (the party of the Palma administration) appeared to resent the presence of Secretary Taft and have done everything in their power to obstruct his work of investigation. It is not probable that they would go to the polls if a new election were held. They are too anxious for everything resulting from American intervention to prove a failure. With half of the country in this intractable condition, there was obviously nothing for Secretary Taft to do but to establish a provisional government with himself at its head. This he promptly did. The situation in Cuba is, therefore, closely akin to what it was in the period after the war and before the American troops had been withdrawn from Cuba. At that time, however, we were administering the government of Cuba by no definite right except the obvious fitness of things and the fact that there was no one else to do it. Now we have a treaty obligation to preserve order in Cuba and a treaty right to take charge of the government if it is necessary for the attainment of this end.

Intervention and Annexation.

The most important thing to remember about the present relations between the United States and Cuba is that intervention is not annexation. The first no more implies the second now than it did when we first went into Cuba to help her cast off the Spanish yoke. At that time it was freely predicted, both by foreign powers and by many of our own citizens, that our forces would never leave the island. But they did. The flag was hauled down without the least disgrace and Cuba was started on her independent career. Her experiment in self-government during the greater part of these five years has not been unsuccessful. One four-year administration passed quite peacefully and prosperously. The first serious trouble arose out of the first presidential election held after the withdrawal of our troops. The weak point of the South American republics has always been the unwillingness of the party in power to retire from office when its time is up and the unwillingness of the party out of power to stay out patiently when it is the victim of an unfair election. From the most reliable indications, it seems that the election by which Palma was made president for a second term was not much more honest than the elections in St. Louis and Philadelphia used to be a few years ago, and that the Liberals had very little chance of voting. The Cuban Liberals, moreover, were not nearly so patient as the St. Louis Republicans and the Philadelphia Democrats used to be, and they tried to get their rights by fighting for them. That started the trouble which ended in the resignation of Palma and the setting up of the new provisional American government in Cuba. Taft is just the man for such an emergency. He has been through the same sort of thing in the Philippines, and he is big and strong and wise enough to manage the matter. It is lucky for us that we had him to send and lucky for Cuba that we sent him. One failure does not prove incapacity for self-government, and the president is determined that Cuba shall have another chance. Most babies fall at least once while they are learning to walk. When they do, it is a kindness to them to pick them up—that is intervention—but it is not necessary to strap them back in their go-carts forever.

Hearst and Hughes.

The New York Republicans have nominated Hughes for governor and the Democrats have put Hearst at the head of their ticket. Jerome says he will stump the state for Hughes "for the good of the Democratic party." This means, clearly enough, that he will withdraw from the independent candidacy to which he had seemed committed. Hearst's nomination splits the Democratic party as wide open as the Republican party was before the recent reconciliation of its factions. Mayor McClellan of New York says he is too good a Democrat to vote for Hearst. Numerous other prominent Democrats declare that they will bolt Hearst. Bourke Cockran makes a lame apology for the nomination by saying that the only choice open to the convention, as between Hearst and his rivals, was the alternative between "rottenness and riot." As between these two evils, he prefers riot—that is, Hearst. This definition of Hearst may or may not be just. We are inclined to believe that he is really not so bad as his own papers would lead one to suppose. But at any rate it represents the opinion of many both in and out of his party, and there will be a good many thousands of Democrats and independents who, when it comes to choosing at the polls between Hearst and Hughes, who stands for neither rottenness nor riot, will vote for Hughes. Mr. Hughes is known to the public only as the man who conducted the insurance investigation before the legislative committee with conspicuous ability and therein showed himself immune to the baleful effects of corporate influence. There is no reason why he should not get a tolerably full vote from his own party and he will certainly get a large number of independent and Democratic votes.

Rival Prophets.

Five new and conflicting prophets have arisen in Zion City, we are told, each with his separate scheme for reforming and redeeming that religio-medico-financial enterprise, and most of them proposing to lead the faithful away from the flesh-pots of Dowie's and Voliva's commercialism into a Canaan flowing with purely spiritual milk and honey. At the same time it is announced that Dowie himself has decided to remain in Zion City and take his chances of recovering his health there. No wonder he feels it necessary to remain and stay the tide of such dangerous and destructive reformation. Zion City without its commercialism and Dowieism without its abundant rake-offs for the "General Overseer" and its glittering prospect of fat dividends for pious investors, would be like the play of Hamlet with Hamlet and Polonius and Ophelia and the King and Queen and everybody else left out—except the grave-digger.

The St. Louis Parade.

On Thursday of last week occurred one of the most imposing civic parades which the city of St. Louis, accustomed to pageants of this kind, ever witnessed. The occasion was the unveiling of the statue "St. Louis" in front of the Art Building, on Art Hill, in Forest Park, the scene of the recent World's Fair. The presentation speech was made by ex-Governor D. R. Francis, and the response thereto was made by Mayor Wells, whose little daughter, at the close of his address, pulled the rope that unveiled to the gaze of cheering thousands this splendid statue symbolizing St. Louis on her onward march. Governor Francis took occasion to urge a subscription of at least $500,000 to renovate and enlarge Art Hall and put it in condition for receiving the finest works of art, and of throwing it open to the public as a free art museum. Later he subscribed $50,000 to the enterprise, and others joining him have insured the raising of that amount. The various departments of the city—its post-office clerks, its fire department, its water department, the street-cleaning department, together with the representatives of the different kinds of business and the military organizations, marching under a bright October sun, made an imposing pageant for the immense throngs of citizens and visitors that witnessed it.

Where Jesus Placed the Emphasis.—VIII.

Obedience.

One of the cardinal principles which Jesus taught and exemplified in his own life was that of obedience to the will of God. At the beginning of his ministry he went from Galilee to the Jordan unto John to be baptized of him, and John, recognizing his sinless character, would have hindered him, saying "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" The sufficient reply of Jesus was, "Thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." It was, in his thought, then, a "righteous" thing to submit to an ordinance which had been instituted under divine direction and which would place him at once in touch and fellowship with those who were seeking to honor God and to separate from sinners. In the light of this example of Jesus it is difficult to understand the attitude of some toward the ordinance of Christian baptism. If Jesus felt it becoming to him to submit to baptism, why should any one seeking to follow in his footsteps hesitate in rendering obedience to an ordinance which still stands as the line of separation between the church and the world, and obedience to which is a token of surrender to him in whose name we are baptized?

But we are not to think of baptism as exhausting the meaning of obedience, or even of constituting its most essential feature. Obedience is conforming to the will of God, both inwardly and outwardly. All the beatitudes indicate the obedience of the heart and mind to the will of God. But it is no token of our loyalty in spirit, to be neglectful of any command of God. Jesus said, "Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach them, he shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 5:19.) Jesus taught that men's characters are to be judged by their lives. "By their fruits ye shall know them. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" (Matt. 7:16.) Again he said, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." (Matt. 7:21.) By doing the will of the Father, we must understand general conformity to the will of God, as far as we understand it.

The close of Jesus' Sermon on the Mount, it will be remembered, likens the man who hears his words and doeth them, "unto a wise man who built his house upon a rock," while he who hears and does not obey his sayings, is likened unto "a foolish man who built his house upon the sand." Human destiny is here clearly involved in our doing or not doing what Jesus requires of us. If any one doubts whether the obedience which Jesus enjoins is internal as well as external, let him recall the "woe" which he pronounced against the Scribes and Pharisees, whom he denounced as "hypocrites" and "like unto whited sepulchres which outwardly appear beautiful, but inwardly are full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness, even so ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, but inwardly ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity." All tendency to limit our thought of obedience to a few external requirements, is a tendency to that outward formalism which Jesus so severely condemned in the Pharisees of his day.

Jesus not only taught the necessity of obedience to God in order to acceptance by him, but he emphasized the value of obedience as a means of distinguishing between what is the will of God and the will of man. He said: "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching, whether it is of God, or whether I speak for myself." (John 7:17.) Here the obedient spirit, or a sincere purpose to do the will of God, which is inward obedience, is made the very organ of knowledge by which we come to a clearer understanding of the will of God. Few sayings of Jesus indicate more clearly than this his profound knowledge of human nature, and of the art of teaching. Given the will to do God's will, we can safely predict a clear knowledge of what God's will is. Jesus would, therefore, say, and have his ministers say, to all who are in doubt concerning certain parts of the divine teaching, "Be sure that you have willed to do the will of God, and are obedient to that will, as far as you understand it, for it is in such obedience that you will be led to a clear knowledge of what the will of God is, in other matters."

The supreme test of the obedience of Jesus was in his becoming "obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." There is no picture in all literature so profoundly impressive and touching as that scene in the Garden, where, on the night of his betrayal, the shadow and agony of the cross were upon him. "Father, all things are possible with thee; remove this cup from me; howbeit not what I will, but what thou wilt!" This thrice-repeated prayer, in which he was consenting to drink the bitter cup of suffering and humiliation if it were the will of his Father, touches the profoundest depths of obedience. Had he failed here, all would have been lost. It is comparatively easy to obey God in his external requirements, but when it comes to meekness, patience, forgiveness, long-suffering under persecution and in the face of an excruciating death, this is far more difficult. Sometimes it is easier even to suffer martyrdom than to endure patiently the temptations, sorrows, afflictions and adversities of life, and yet the latter is obedience as well as the former. What Jesus emphasized as vitally important is the submergence of our will into the will of God, and seeking daily and continually, in season and out of season, to conform our lives, our characters, our tempers and dispositions, to the will of our heavenly Father. Only thus can we enjoy citizenship in the everlasting kingdom of God, and be sharers in the life everlasting.

Alexander Campbell as a Reformer.

In certain polite circles the term reformer is one of reproach. He is considered a vulgar disturber of the peace by this easy-going class of people whose governing principle is that of laisser-faire, or letting things alone as they are. He who attempts to disturb the existing order of things in politics or religion is sure to be the target for many a poison arrow from those who prefer to be in error, and to have other people in error, than to have their mental furniture disarranged by the introduction of new ideas, or to have their ease disturbed. But the world needs reformers, and has never made any progress without them. Not every man, even though he be true and loyal-hearted, is fitted to be a reformer. God chooses the man whom he would have lead his church forward out of its errors and false practices into a larger and better life.

Alexander Campbell was a reformer. Like Luther and Wesley, he had a message from God for the church and for the world. The times in which he lived demanded a reformation, just as the times of Luther and Wesley demanded the reformations which they inaugurated. In each of these cases there was the conjunction of the man and the occasion. This is not accidental. It is God's method in history. When he has a special work to accomplish he raises up the man to do it, and fits him for the work. The men whom God has chosen for the work of reformation, besides the pre-requisites of intellectual ability and mental discipline, have had unfaltering faith in God and in the omnipotence of truth, high courage to speak and act in harmony with their deepest convictions, and a love for humanity so intense that they are willing to be counted "of no reputation" if only they may benefit their fellowmen and extend the kingdom of God.

Such a man was Alexander Campbell. He was born to be a reformer. Endowed by nature with a remarkable physical and mental constitution, he had that religious training and intellectual culture which fitted him for the important work he was called to do. One of his most striking characteristics was his mental independence. Once convinced by his own investigation of what God's Word teaches, he hesitated not to declare that truth, no matter how many great names or high ecclesiastical councils were arrayed against him. He acknowledged himself indebted to all the world's great reformers and thinkers, both in philosophy and religion, who had gone before him, but he ventured to test all their conclusions by what was to him the ultimate standard of truth—the revealed will of God. Nor was he ever troubled by statistics, as if God were dependent upon numbers for the success of his truth! He loved truth, as all noble souls do. His mind was open to the truth, as all true souls are.

Given a man with these qualifications, and let him stand, untrammeled, in the presence of religious error and ecclesiastical corruption, and you have a reformer. What Mr. Campbell saw, as he looked out upon the religious world with a heart yearning to serve God and humanity, was a divided church, split up into denominations and making war with each other over their respective creeds, instead of the ideal church of the New Testament, united under the leadership of Jesus Christ and moving forward against a common foe. He saw that the resources of the church were being wasted in fratricidal strife, and in sectarian propagandism. His father, Thomas Campbell, a man of equal spiritual vision and insight, if less gifted in some other respects, had seen it before him and had issued a most remarkable appeal to his fellow Christians to surrender their party names, their party creeds, and party spirit, and come and sit together at the feet of Jesus to learn of him, and to be led by him alone. Alexander took up this appeal, and, possessed of a religious genius and commanding ability which would have made him a marked man in any age and in any country, he made the world hear it.

It may be said that Mr. Campbell was an idealist, a dreamer, an advocate of an impracticable reform. True, the ideal for which he contended is not yet realized, but it is in process of realization and the church is stronger, purer, and more united to-day because of his life and labors. The religious world does not yet know Alexander Campbell. His time has not yet come. Some day when the church has outgrown its rankling prejudices and forgotten its old time strifes, and shall have entered into a new era of unity and catholicity, his name will be written with the great reformers in the church, who, with prophetic vision were the heralds of better days yet to be. It is sometimes said that Mr. Campbell was a restorer rather than a reformer. But restoration was only a part of his work. There were errors in faith and practice to be removed as well as neglected truths and practices to be restored. Reformation covers both these phases of his work.

What would be the attitude of Alexander Campbell to the questions of our time, were he now living in the full prime of his vigorous manhood? This, of course, can only be surmised. Those who know him best would, we are sure, say that he would be open-minded and open-hearted to all the truth shining out of the history of the past, out of science and philosophy, out of the great religious movements of our time, and out of the sacred volume. He would not be afraid of any investigation. He would welcome truth from every source. His heart would rejoice at all the movements looking in the direction of Christian union. His voice would be heard in all the great councils of Christian men, called to promote the unity of Christians and the triumph of Christianity in the world. But every move that tends to compromise the glory, dignity, and supreme authority of Christ, or to subordinate his teaching to the philosophy of men, would meet with his stern and unfaltering opposition. But, standing immovable upon the sure foundation which has been laid in Zion, how gladly he would co-operate with all kindred spirits in seeking to bring about the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the union of his followers! His voice would be lifted for education, for enlightenment, for the diffusion of Bible knowledge, for healing our own petty divisions and alienations in order to the success of our plea and the evangelization of the world.

We shall best honor his memory and the memory of those who stood by him and who came after him, by maintaining the same open-mindedness, the same loyalty to truth, and the same adaptation of our message to the needs of our day which characterized these great men of God. May we have grace and wisdom to be loyal to the inheritance of truth which we have received from them, while seeking to enlarge that inheritance for transmission to those who shall come after us.

Notes and Comments.

Rev. W. H. Smith, of Richmond, Va., writing to the "Central Baptist," says:

> "The carnal Christian is a regenerate man, a babe in Christ, in whom the flesh is still predominant. A spiritual Christian is one in whom the spirit is predominant."

Paul divided Christians into two classes as "spiritual" and "carnal," the latter being "babes in Christ." There is a constant tendency to ignore this distinction, and to think and speak of all who may rightly claim the name Christian as occupying the same plane of spiritual development. There are degrees in Christianity as in everything else. But whoever is satisfied to remain always a babe in Christ, can know nothing of the deeper experiences which belong to Christian manhood and womanhood. They are "spiritual" who are dominated by the Spirit; they are "carnal" who are dominated by the flesh. In every life, one or the other of these is the dominant factor.

Dr. James Mudge, writing on "Fifty Years of Christian Experience," in the "Western Christian Advocate," in urging the necessity of Christian progress, utters these wise words:

> Having close connection with this is the reflection, how fundamental to permanently wholesome, unvarying progress is a clear grasp of the difference between the loyal Christian and the ideal Christian. The two are very wide apart, and yet are often confounded, with most disastrous results. It is one thing to have a right intention, quite another thing to do right actions. The knowledge may be small, though the zeal is great. Until the spirit and the understanding, both in fullest development, are perfectly combined, the result desired can not be reached. Ignorance may not be blameworthy, but it flaws the deed. He who is faithful to his light, whatever that may be, has a certain meed of praise; no conscious, intentional transgression can be set down against him; he is without condemnation. But there will doubtless remain in his case very much room for improvement, and it may take him an extremely long time to reach flawless beauty of character, entire likeness to Christ.

The man who is loyal to all the light he has, and whose mind is open for a better knowledge of God's will, is on the way to the highest type of Christian manhood.

"The Standard" (Baptist) of Chicago, on the need of the denominational Newspaper gives among other reasons the following:

> As to all the grave problems that are continually arising, theoretical and practical, the inspired and inspiring word to all is: "Come now and let us reason together." The denominational paper is thus an open council, and one always in session. It is pre-eminently the meeting place for the whole denomination, a central clearing house for the most earnest and practical thinking of the time. It is, indeed, not all this in every weekly issue; it is all this as the weeks and months and seasons go on, and this with the supreme advantage of being continuously timely. Were it sustained at its best equipment and support its total influence through the years would be enormous. In the everlasting crises that are going on, always at some vital points acute enough, these various denominational papers might be, as they are more and more learning to be, quick to sense each emerging situation and, jointly, strike at once, with multiplying effectiveness, for the main things.

A hundred good reasons could be given why any religious body having a good reason to exist should support religious journals that fairly and adequately represent the things for which it stands. It will be found, we think, that any declining sense of the value of such a religious journal is accompanied by a corresponding declining appreciation of the things for which the body stands.

> "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" (Rom. 6:3.) Those, therefore, not baptized into Christ are not in him.—Gospel Advocate.

Nothing could be more logical. But here's another: "But speaking the truth in love may grow up in all things into him, who is the head, even Christ." Therefore those who have not grown up into Christ, are not in him—not to any great extent.

The report of Evangelist Scoville and Pastor Berkey, of the union meeting at Monroe, Wis., which we have been compelled to condense, will be found richly suggestive. The time has come when our evangelists who can do so should enter into this union evangelistic work. In what other way can they do so much to make known to others our evangelistic methods?

Editor's Easy Chair.

Never did ancient Jew, with his heart overflowing with patriotic pride and religious devotion, turn his face toward Jerusalem, to attend one of their great annual feasts, with more eagerness than the Easy Chair this week turns its face toward Buffalo—our Jerusalem for the present year, whither the tribes go up for counsel, for fellowship, for information and for inspiration. There is no legal enactment compelling attendance at these annual conventions, but there is a force mightier than law which is turning the feet of thousands toward Buffalo this week. It is the impulse of love—love for God, love for the truth, love for the brotherhood, love for humanity. The impulse which is drawing thousands of the Disciples of Christ from various states of the Union and from the Canadian provinces to the city of Buffalo, this week, comes from heaven. There are no rewards to be distributed, no honors to be conferred, no offices to be gained, no personal ends to be served. We are engaged, as we believe, in a divine enterprise, co-operating with Jesus Christ for the extension of his reign over the hearts and lives of men. As this is his work, pre-eminently, we expect him to meet with us in spirit and to be the unifying power of the convention. Those who gather there will be drawn thither by his spirit, to do his work in his name. Can any one doubt that it will be a great convention? If where two or three are met together in his name he is in the midst of them, surely we may rely upon his presence at Buffalo and feel sure that he will be the inspiration of every prayer that is offered, every song that is sung, every report that is made, every address and sermon that is delivered, and of every motion that is passed.

We are giving our readers this week a number of articles and pictures relating to Alexander Campbell and his work, which we hope will serve to renew in the hearts of our readers the fire of devotion to the great reformation with which we are connected and to the aims and ideals which our fathers had before them in the inauguration of this work. We are no worshipers of Mr. Campbell. We do not regard his statements as possessing any final authority. We feel at perfect liberty to differ from any conclusion of his just as we do from the conclusion of any other reformer. He wrote no creed for those who were to carry on the work which he began. He left them as free, as he claimed himself to be, to accept truth from every source, and nothing but the truth. We regard him as an eminent servant of God, chosen to be the leader in a movement for a return to the simplicity and purity of the religion of Jesus Christ, and for the union of all Christians upon the original foundation upon which the church was built. It was a movement conceived in the broad spirit of Christian brotherhood, and of utmost loyalty to the New Testament ideal of the church. We need to be on our guard continually against all the narrowing influences and partisan tendencies which would divert a great Christian union movement into sectarian channels and toward sectarian aims. Nothing, we think, aside from the presence and guidance of the divine Spirit, will help us to avoid this danger more than the keeping alive in the memories and hearts of the brotherhood the beginnings of the movement and the great men who under God had most to do with its inception, and in giving it that character which has been the source of its strength and success.

There is one saintly man whose personality has always stood in the background, in the history of this reformation, who, we believe, in the days to come will be given his rightful place at the very front of that heroic band who in the early part of the previous century consecrated their lives to the work of religious reform. We refer to Thomas Campbell. No one can read his famous "Declaration and Address" without seeing therein not only a splendid statement of the principles for which we plead, but the manifestation of a spirit which is eminently in harmony with his plea for unity. We have always felt that the movement has lost something very essential to its success in losing, as so many of us have, the spirit of catholicity, of brotherly love, and of profound piety, which breathes throughout that Address. Without questioning the superior fitness of Alexander Campbell for leadership in a movement that antagonized to such a degree prevailing customs and conceptions, we may still regret that, in connection with his fearless assault upon error, and his brave defense of the truth, there could not have been maintained, among all those who succeeded these great leaders, the same gentleness of spirit, the same breadth of fellowship and spiritual power, which marked the writings of Thomas Campbell. These are no less vital than the truths and principles themselves in order to draw together and cement in bonds of unity the severed and alienated people of God. We believe it would be well, therefore, for our cause if we had a revival of interest in the life and writings of Thomas Campbell, and if his spirit were carried into the advocacy of the great principles which he was the first to formulate.

It is sometimes said that Protestantism has passed through the Petrine and Pauline stages of its development and is just entering upon the Johannine period. It would be truer, perhaps, to say that the church of to-day is adding to the Petrine and Pauline teaching that of John, as he is understood to be the apostle of love. It is doubtful, however, whether John had any pre-eminence over Paul in his emphasis of love. Of one thing, however, we are sure, and that is, whether in the case of Protestantism in general, or of our own religious movement, there is a manifest tendency to grow away from the period of polemics into that of irenics, and this growth or transition is being effected under the increasing dominancy of love as the law of the Christian life. The more Christian people love each other, the more they can afford to differ from each other without forfeiting mutual respect and confidence, or severing the bonds of fellowship. That Christian people must all think alike and feel alike and act alike in order to be brothers, and to recognize each other as such, is a delusion that is rapidly passing away and giving place to a manlier and saner conception of Christianity. In such a time, it seems to us, a spirit like that of Thomas Campbell must come into his due inheritance of honor as one of the great leaders in the Church Universal, who opposed sectarianism without becoming sectarian, and who advocated union in the broad spirit which alone makes union possible.

It has always seemed to us that one of the first meetings in our great annual gatherings should be a prayer and praise service. Coming together from fields remotely separated, and many meeting each other for the first time, face to face in the flesh, how delightful it would be to spend an hour together in the atmosphere of praise and thanksgiving in which our spirits would be attuned to the Infinite! It is not so much the great addresses or the great reports that will make the Buffalo Convention a real Bethel to many a heart, as the glimpses of the celestial world, that will come to them in moments when all hearts are kindled into a flame of devotion. All that is retained distinctly in our memory of the first national convention we ever attended, is a prayer which was offered by one of the old veterans of the cross, which lifted us to the very gate of heaven. Who preached, who made addresses, what motions were passed—these are all forgotten, but the memory of that prayer and the inspiration of it remain with us. Those moments in the convention in which we come in closest touch with God and catch a glimpse of heaven on earth will be the most memorable. May there be many such at Buffalo!

Born Sept. 12, 1788, near Ballymena, Antrim, Ireland.

Alexander Campbell

Died at Bethany, W. Va., March 6, 1866.

A Brief Sketch by

T. W. Grafton

In a storm off the coast of Scotland a vessel was stranded. On its deck, on the stump of a broken mast, sat a young man in meditation. In the near prospect of death, he awoke to an appreciation of the purpose of earthly existence. Life came to him with new meaning. Its true object appeared as he had never before conceived it. On the one hand was the folly of earthly aim and ambition. On the other only one motive seemed worthy of human effort and that the salvation and everlasting happiness of mankind.

That young man was Alexander Campbell, and it was there that he formed the resolution that, if saved from the threatening peril, he would give himself wholly to God and his service, and spend his entire life in the ministry of his Word. From that time onward he never faltered in his purpose. Immediately following his rescue he bent all his energy in fitting himself as best he could for his life work.

A few months were spent in the University of Glasgow. They were important months, but more important because of new religious impressions received than for anything learned in the class room. He had entered the university with no other purpose than the newly-formed one of preparing himself for the ministry of the Presbyterian church. But the religious atmosphere of Glasgow began at once to exert a modifying influence upon his views and was destined to work an entire revolution in his convictions and feelings with respect to existing denominations. A religious ferment was going on at that time stimulated by the influence of Robert and James Haldane who were pleading for a return to some neglected primitive practices. While Mr. Campbell was in the midst of his studies, he was brought in contact with this new movement and its chief promoters. Cherishing as he did the feeling of religious unrest he listened the more readily to men, who like himself were longing for some better way than the old beaten paths of tradition. Though not as yet accepting their peculiar views, a profound impression was made upon his mind and the defense of the principles which they advocated, in a modified form, was destined to become the ruling passion of his life and ministry. In after years, in explaining his course, he declared that he had "imbibed disgust at the popular schemes, chiefly while a student at Glasgow."

At last his doubts led him to question his right to continue in the fellowship of the Presbyterian church. At the semiannual communion service he entered the church with the required metallic token as a guarantee of his religious fitness, but his scruples overcame him and instead of taking his place among the communicants, he cast his token into the plate that was passed around and declined to partake with the rest. The ring of that token as it fell from his hands, like the ring of Martin Luther's hammer on the door of the Wittenberg cathedral, announced his renunciation of the old church ties, and marks the moment at which he forever ceased to recognize the claims of authority of a human creed to bind upon men the conditions of their acceptance with God. Henceforth, he resolved, with the help of God, to stand for the defense of "the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

With the sublime purpose of breaking the shackles of religious tradition and of starting upon an independent search for truth as revealed in the word of God, Alexander Campbell came to America in 1809. To his surprise he found a soil already prepared for the planting. His father, Thomas Campbell, who had preceded him by two years, had inaugurated a movement leading in the direction toward which the young man had resolutely set his face. A company of rugged pioneers in Western Pennsylvania had adopted as a Magna Charta of religious freedom a few resolutions written by the pen of Thomas Campbell, which closed with these words: "Nothing is to be received as a matter of faith or duty for which there can not be expressly provided a 'thus saith the Lord,' either in express terms or approved precedent." Upon this platform after months of deliberation a church was organized, now famous as the Brush Run church, and Alexander Campbell, though but in his twenty-third year, was, in recognition of his great talent, chosen as its preacher.

Here began the real life-work of Alexander Campbell and throughout his splendid career it never shifted its center. At first he felt his way cautiously. But having adopted the famous maxim of his father, "where the Scriptures speak we speak, and where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent—" he did not shrink from the logical consequences of his new position, but determined to follow wherever it led him. Having resolved to accept nothing on the tradition of the fathers the whole realm of accepted faith came upon him afresh for investigation. He determined that each step should be taken under Scriptural guidance and not until he was clearly convinced that he was following in the Master's footsteps. This accounts for the gradual unfolding of the new reformation covering a period of some sixteen years, from 1811 to 1827.

The first question to force itself upon his attention was that of Scriptural baptism, a subject to which he had hitherto given but little thought. But now he must know the mind of the Master. A careful study of the whole subject followed. Abandoning all uninspired authorities, he applied himself afresh to the study of the Bible, with the result that he and the larger part of his little congregation were driven into the waters of baptism, holding that immersion in water upon a true profession of faith in Christ alone constituted Christian baptism.

From this point onward Mr. Campbell's natural affiliation was with the Baptists, and he with his congregation, were received into the Red Stone Association of the Baptist churches. Here his growing talent and originality in dealing with Scriptural themes won him widespread reputation and at the same time awakened the bitter opposition of the clergy who branded his disregard of time-honored customs as heresy. Finally their hostility led to open attack, and to his arraignment before a religious tribunal of the association, to escape which, and for the sake of peace he and thirty of his friends withdrew from the old Brush Run church and organized a new church at Wellsburg, Va., and upon application was admitted into the Mahoning Association of Ohio, an association of Baptist churches characterized by greater liberality of feeling and a readier disposition to follow the Scriptures.

From this point onward Mr. Campbell gave himself to the wider advocacy of the principles he had adopted. This was in the autumn of 1823, and for the first time, he cherished the hope that something might be done on a more extended scale to restore religious society to its primitive simplicity. Travelling up and down the country on his trusted horse, he now preached, wherever he could get men to listen, a crusade against religious corruption with all the fire and zeal of a Peter the Hermit. These early excursions took him through portions of Pennsylvania, Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky, and wherever he went his plea was for a new order of things, or rather a return to the faith, customs and practices of the apostolic church. But the old horse was too slow a vehicle for the transportation of such a plea, so he called to his aid the press.

The first number of the "Christian Baptist" was issued July 4, 1823. Its appearance marks a new era in religious literature. It was a veritable John the Baptist in religious journalism. Its continuous message was a call to repentance to erring ecclesiasts. It at once fearlessly attacked whatever was conceived to be a departure from New Testament standards, and it fell like a fire-brand onto hundreds of widely scattered communities.

The effect of the "Christian Baptist" was magical. First it provoked everywhere a new spirit of inquiry and won to the movement for the restoration of primitive Christianity thousands of loyal supporters. But on the other hand it awakened the bitter opposition to those whose authority it attacked, and made impossible longer fellowship in the Baptist fold for those who shared Mr. Campbell's views and urged the cause of reformation. Unable to check the spirit of discord and intolerance that now swept the church, the great leader calmly awaited the result, at the same time disavowing any responsibility for the dissensions he lamented. Between 1827 and 1830 the work of separation went on, and from this point dates the separate existence of the religious body known as the Disciples of Christ.

From 1830 onward Mr. Campbell's energies were spent in training and organizing this new force. This was no small task. Heterogeneous elements representing the various schools of religious thought were brought together in many communities. There were questions of expedience, and forms of administration to settle, and but for the leadership of a commanding genius, sound and sane, broad and rugged like that presented in the mind and heart of Mr. Campbell, the cause would have been shipwrecked in the first decade of its history.

Recollections

By James O. Carson

Realizing how wholly incompetent I am for the task I comply with your request to note some recollections of the early days of the religious movement in western Pennsylvania known as the "Campbell movement;" the men who were in it from the first and the condition of the religious world in that district of country at the time. It was my good fortune to have been familiar with this great work since it began to take form, and to have been personally acquainted with the greater number of the men who were in it from the first, as well as with many who were their immediate successors. Of the first there is, perhaps, but one living—John Schaffer—who recently celebrated his one hundredth anniversary.

The religious condition of the people was pitiable, and fitly described as "a people sitting in a valley overhung with death shades." They knew God only as the great avenger, who visited the sins of the parents on the children to the third and fourth generation." Every vicissitude of life was looked upon as a punishment sent by God for sins committed by the affected one or his parents. Their conception of religion was to propitiate God and "make gracious." The great converting power was the wrath of God and the effective "means of grace" the "mourners' bench." Here the struggle was made to "reconcile God to the sinner." Here both saint and sinner wrestled with God for a blessing as did Jacob of old. The unsuccessful sinner was exhorted to persevere, and told that in "his own good time the Holy Ghost would come and speak peace to his soul." They were strangers to the "obedience of faith," and to the assurance of acceptance with God which this gives, and hence were subject to seasons of trust and of doubt; seasons of hope and seasons of fear. These were favorite subjects for recitation in "experience meeting."

Among the denominations party spirit dominated, and each denomination was as separate from another as were the political parties. Sound doctrine—which meant "our creed"—was the gospel preached, and served well to foster the party spirit and embitter it.

These, briefly outlined, were the religious conditions existing at the time this movement began. As soon, however, as the new religion began to spread, these conditions, as respected parties, changed. A truce was called and an alliance, offensive and defensive, was entered into by the heretofore belligerent forces, and a crusade began on the "new religion" that in bitterness of feeling and expression, can not be conceived as possible by Christians of the present day.

An actual occurrence will give some idea of the state of feeling that existed. An old man—a "Campbellite"—who sometimes preached, was walking up the aisle of an orthodox church where services were to be held, and was discovered by an alert sister who at once began to sing:

"Jesus, great shepherd of thy sheep,
To thee for help we fly,
Thy little flock in safety keep.
For lo, the wolf is nigh."

The vigilance of the sister was perhaps commendable for it is quite probable the wolf was out foraging for material for a sermon, and deserved the shot.

This conflict was kept up for a long time, but, under the influence of the conservative element on both sides, began to soften and disappear. The first formal challenge of the "orthodoxy" of the "Disciples" was made in St. Louis. At the solicitation of personal friends, members of the society, several members of the Disciples' church made application for membership in the society of "Evangelical Alliance," then in its infancy here. Their acceptance was opposed by the ultra orthodox element in the society, led by Rev. N. L. Rice, of "Campbell and Rice debate" notoriety, on the ground that they were not "orthodox." The applicants for admission were represented by Alexander Proctor, then quite a young man and pastor of the only Disciples' church in the city. The meeting to determine the question was held in a public hall, and after a full discussion of the question the applicants were received, much to the discomfiture of the reverend doctor, and probably leaving him feeling somewhat as the boy who had been apprenticed to a blacksmith, who, after two days' experience, said he wish't he hadn't learn't the trade; that he'd been blow'en cold wind into that fire for two days and the harder he blowed the hotter the blasted thing got."

In the early days of this movement, few, if any of the churches could support a minister his entire time and the preacher's work was purely evangelistic, he going from village to village, and from district to district, wherever a courthouse or schoolhouse could be obtained in which services could be held. In their eagerness to hear the people would often follow the minister from the public service to the private residence where he was staying, and there sit and listen the entire interim between early and late services. Under the inspiration of such conditions these men preached with an earnestness and pathos seldom heard in the present day. This may be regarded as extravagant, but I appeal to the fact that audiences, packed beyond comfort in a room, would sit for two hours and more, and listen to an address without the least evidence of impatience or fatigue. It has been said of Thomas Campbell that after speaking an hour he would say, "and now dearly beloved, with these introductory remarks we are prepared to enter upon the investigation of this very interesting and important subject;" yet no one grew impatient or weary, no one quitted his seat. Under like conditions during like period of time I have listened to Alexander Campbell, when the entire audience would become wholly unconscious of the passing of time. An incident will give some idea of Mr. Campbell's power. On one occasion he was addressing a large audience; an old gentleman was sitting near and immediately in front of the platform, his elbow on his knee and his head on his hand, intently gazing into the face of the speaker. Straightening himself up he gave a yawn that was heard in every part of the large room; changed from one hand and knee to the other, wholly unconscious of his action, and, moreover, without the least perceptible effect on the audience. Nor were these alone and singular—as much may be said of a host of others. Under the inspiration of an expectant waiting audience, Walter Scott would stand on the mount of transfiguration, talk of the sufferings of Christ and the glory to come after, lead his hearers up to the New Jerusalem, through the gates into the city, and over the golden streets up to the dwelling place of the "blessed Father," and there in the divine presence, as it were, appeal to his hearers in irresistible eloquence and pathos to accept the great salvation.

But among the remarkable men of that remarkable period John Smith—"Raccoon John Smith"—stands alone in his own unique personality. In intellectual strength he had few, if any, superiors; as a minister of the Gospel he was a great power, and to "orthodoxy" a terror. With the dexterity of an expert anatomist he would dissect the old body; with the cold indifference of an experienced undertaker prepare it for "the last look of friends;" and then bury it under an unmerciful avalanche of denunciation, sarcasm and ridicule.

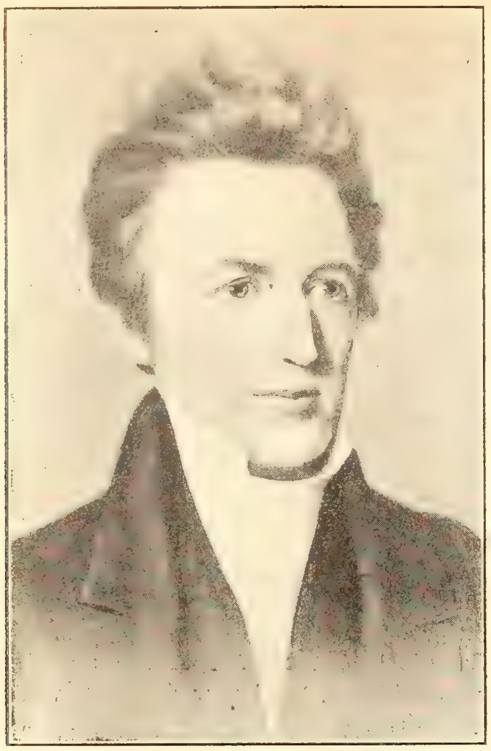
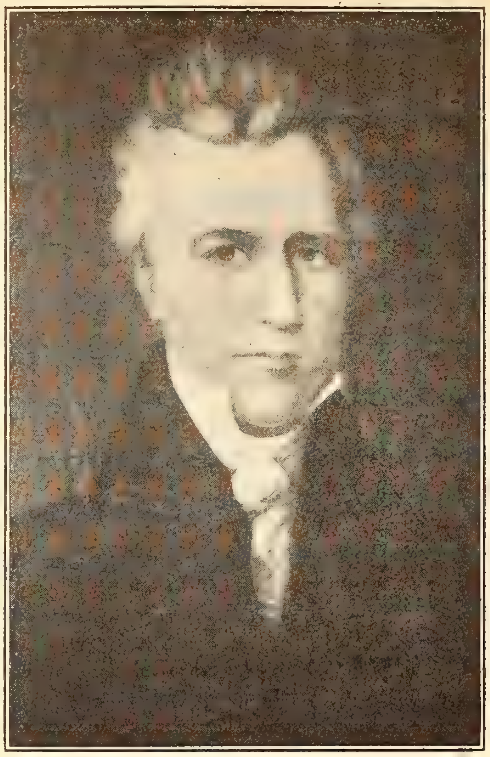
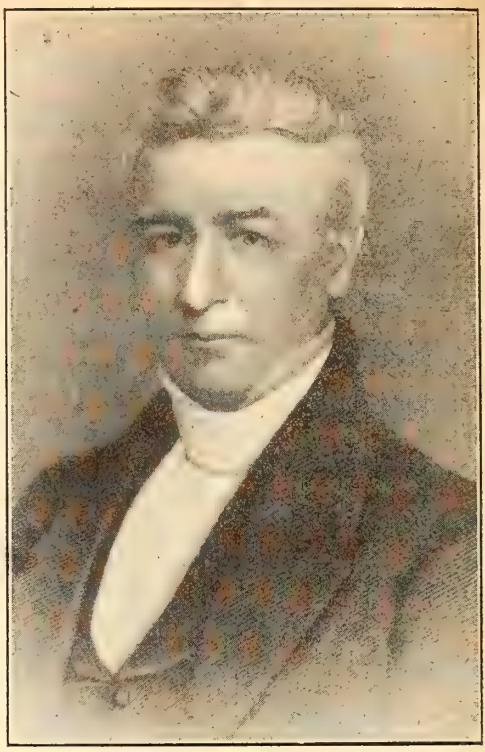
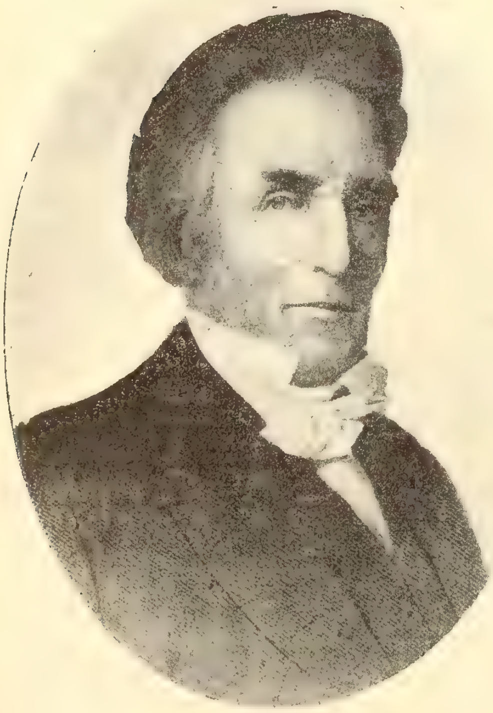
PORTRAITS OF ALEXANDER CAMPBELL









We have made an effort to secure copies of the different photographs and paintings that were made of Alexander Campbell, and we present in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST such as we have been able to obtain. If any readers of the paper have other pictures that are not represented in our pages this week, we shall be glad to hear from them. The picture which we have used on our frontispiece was painted from life when Mr. Campbell was seventy-two years of age, six years before he died. It is considered by his relations as a most striking likeness. The photograph was made from an oil painting by Bogle in 1859, and has been copyrighted by his daughter, Mrs. Decima Campbell Barclay, of Bethany, W. Va. In sending it to us for reproduction she says "it is by far the finest picture of him in existence." It represents Mr. Campbell as he often appeared before the students in Bethany College pulpit. Mrs. Barclay says the attitude portrayed by the artist was quite characteristic of her father, who would stand with his eye-glasses in one hand while the other rested on the Bible, the fingers indicating a purpose to turn to further citations from the Book of books. The picture of Mr. and Mrs. Campbell found on page 1298 is, also, a very good one and is in the possession of Mrs. Barclay. It was taken in Cincinnati in 1861 while her father and mother were attending the annual missionary meeting and were the guests of R. M. Bishop and wife. The mother of the Assistant Editor of The Christian-Evangelist went with them to the photographer's when it was taken.

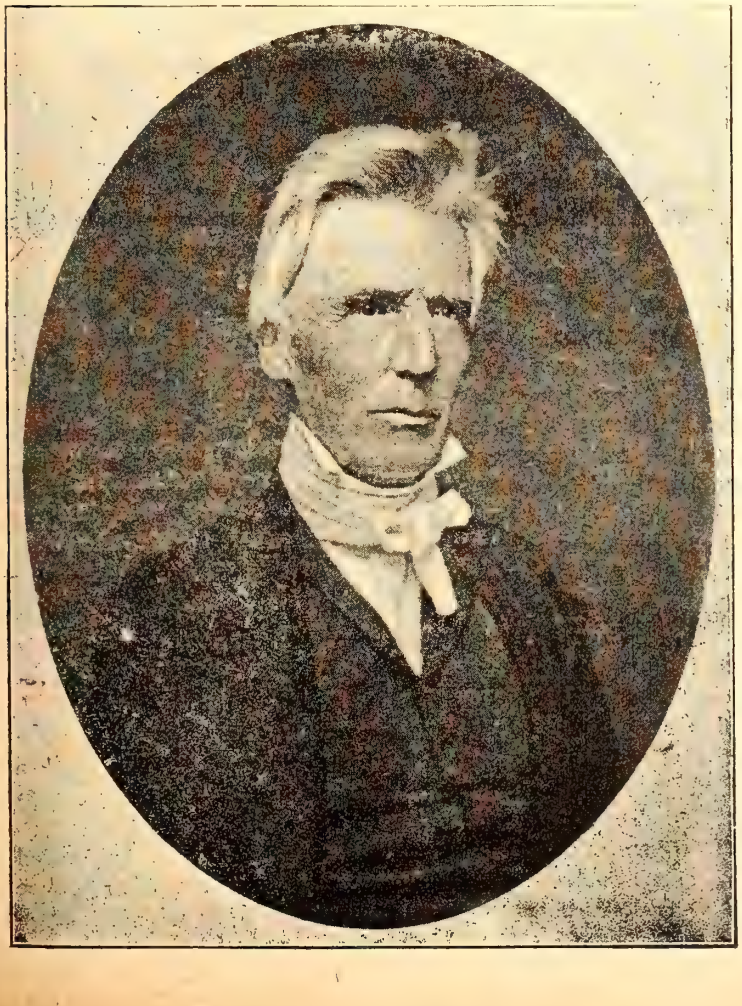
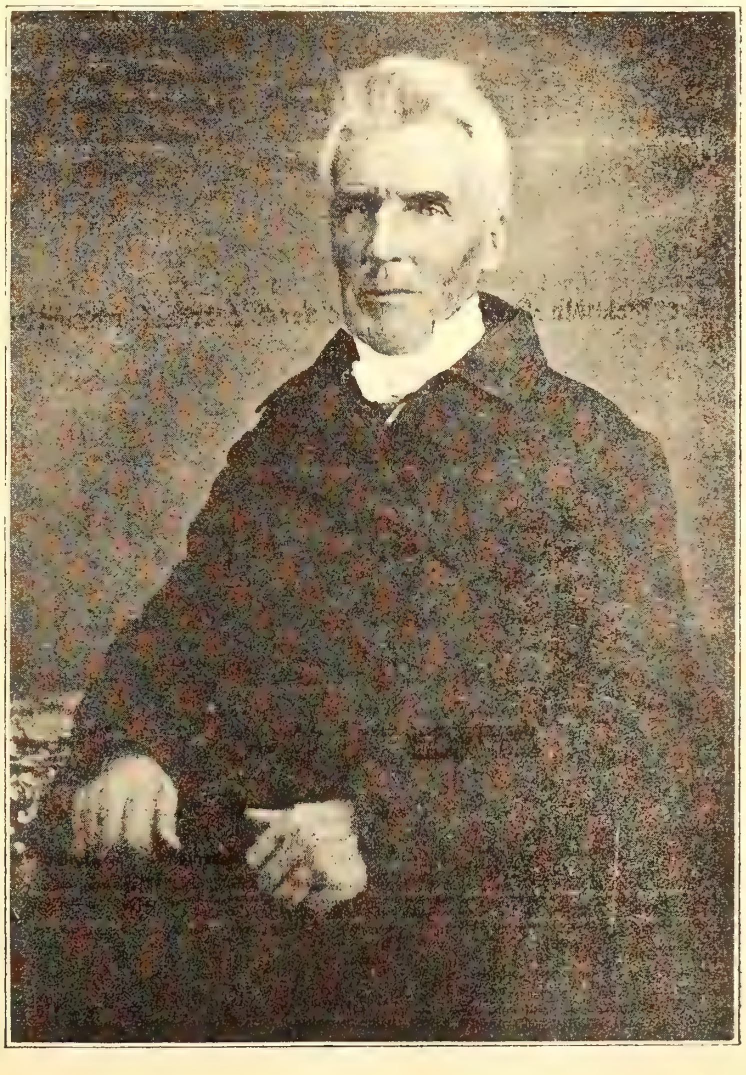
Of some of the portraits we are unable to give particulars. The first one on the previous page is the earliest one of which we have any traces. Mr. Campbell was probably about thirty years of age. The one representing him at the age of about thirty-five was painted by the artist Cooper in Nashville, Tenn. There is another picture made from a steel engraving representing him at the age of forty-one. The rather rough looking portrait on the lower left hand corner of the other page was taken just after his arrival in Philadelphia on the boat, and about the time he was arrested for libel. It is in the possession of C. C. Redgrave, as is also the next one taken from a daguerreotype made when he was in his prime and at the height of his great power. This daguerreotype was owned by Dr. A. M. Collins, but is now the property of Russell Errett, of Cincinnati. Bro. James O. Carson possesses a very fine daguerreotype from which we have made the picture presented next. The other portraits we are not able to date, with the exception of the one with the beard on the page before, made by J. Perry Elliott in 1864.





Recollections.

I would gladly go on and speak of others of the mighty men of these bygone days, of their individual peculiarities and rowth—of Challen and Church; of Burnett and Darsie; Creath and Anderson and Pendleton and Errett and others. But there are others unnamed but not less worthy whose unmarked graves I can not pass without a tribute of grateful remembrance, however weak and imperfect it may be. These are they who, in response to the emergency call of the Master, went out "without scrip or purse or two coats," into the byways and highways to carry the bread of life to his helpless famishing children, going on foot or as best they might, from village to village, from log cabin to log cabin; on the way posting at cross roads their own appointments to preach the next Lord's day at the nearest school house, and receiving, for the most part—all the recipients had to give—the warm hospitality always found in a log cabin, a cake of corn bread, a shuck mattress bed, made vacant for the stranger, and at parting a grateful tear-moistened "God bless you, won't you come again?" It would have been strange—more than strange—if at times, to the weary sore-footed one, the way had not seemed hard and dreary; the sun to shine with a sombre hue; the leaves seem listless on the trees; the songs of the birds dull and discordant, and stranger still, if in moments like these the tempter had not come with the proffer of the easier life, the larger compensation, the greater opportunities that were waiting over in the settlements. But from the wilderness beyond the Jordan there always came the voice of the Master, "Get thee behind me, Satan. Man shall not live for bread alone, but for every duty that comes to him from God." And the dusty feet were washed, the dreary way made cheerful, leaves danced with delight, and mingling with the song of the birds, a strong, clear voice was heard:

> "Jesus, I my cross have taken,
> All to leave and follow thee.
> * * * * * * * *
> Go then earthly fame and treasure,
> Come disaster, scorn and pain,
> In thy service pain is pleasure,
> With thy favor loss is gain."

The sacrifices and self-denials of these men, like their names, have not been recorded, and when it is asked in heaven, "Who are these?" the angels will bow their heads and answer: "These are they who came up through great tribulation, and who have washed their robes white in the blood of the Lamb."

"And the angels all were silent."

The Personality of Mr. Campbell

By W. T. Moore

Personality is the biggest word in the English language. No matter from what point of view we regard it, it must always occupy the chief place. This is why biography is the best of all history. The history of wars, battlefields, governments and empires may be interesting and even instructive, but these have no real meaning until they reach personality. Things are important in their place, but they were made to serve persons. A world without personality would be a body without life and mere framework without potentiality. Personality must therefore be regarded as the sublime end of the whole physical universe.

But what is personality? We need not now consider this question from a psychological point of view. This point of view is important, but it need not enter prominently into our present discussion. Nevertheless, it is difficult to treat the subject under consideration without reckoning with certain differentia which distinguish individuals from one another. Some of these differentia are easily perceived; others are only dimly indicated by certain phenomena in character which can not be readily defined, and yet these phenomena are among the most determining factors in what we call the character of a man.

During the last half century, it has been my good fortune to know some of the most distinguished men of both Europe and America, and also to have come into contact with many others in a way that gave me a knowledge of their characters; and I can say, without hesitation, that Alexander Campbell possessed the most striking and interesting personality with which I was acquainted during all that time. I do not now refer to his superior intellect, nor again to his fine physical development, but rather to that indefinable something we call personal influence, without which a man may be a giant in other respects and yet practically fail to make a very decided impression upon those with whom he comes in contact. Mr. Campbell was richly endowed with that indefinable quality which gives power to its possessor, though no one is able to tell precisely what this quality is or where it specially resides. Carlyle was a man of great intellectual endowments, but he was personally almost disagreeable, and certainly not attractive to many people. Bismarck was the impersonification of intellectual force, but he had not a single quality that attracted to him personally those by whom he was surrounded. Mr. Gladstone was a very different kind of a man. He possessed to a large degree the quality of magnetism. I have seen him arise to speak in the British parliament, during a somewhat stormy session, and immediately all eyes were fixed upon him, while perfect silence reigned among his hearers during the time of his address. Mr. Campbell possessed this personal magnetism in even a greater degree than that possessed by Mr. Gladstone. When he arose to speak in an assembly he did not have to win the attention of his hearers by his introductory remarks; immediately every one was attentive, and often he almost annihilated time by the intense interest he created in his hearers, so that an hour and a half speech seemed really only a few minutes.

This same quality was constantly manifested in the social circle. He was remarkably companionable, and never seemingly attempted to monopolize the time in conversation, and yet unconsciously on his part, as well as on the part of the entire social circle, he became the center of that circle and usually did most of the talking. Nor did he show in this the slightest degree of egotism. Every one seemed to assign cordially to him the chief place in conversation, and this was so decidedly the case that sometimes he practically lectured while every one else became listeners. Nor was this privilege granted him simply because of his superior intellectual power. It was rather owing to that indefinable quality which distinguished his personality, and to which attention has already been called. Well do I remember a visit he made to me while I was in Bethany College. I had preached the night before at the church. I had always said I would not preach in his pulpit when he was present. I had given special instruction to his daughter, Virginia, to keep him at home when I was announced to preach at night. On the night referred to, I had just gone into the pulpit with a friend of mine who was to open the meeting with the reading of the Scriptures and prayer. The congregation was singing the introductory hymn, when Mr. Campbell came in and took his seat in the front pew. I immediately walked down to him and told him that he must preach, as I could not. He answered by saying that he had no appointment to preach and therefore could not do so. I then urged him to go home, as I felt my utter inability to preach in his pulpit when he was present. He took hold of my hand and drew me down by his side, and in a few words he both shamed me and encouraged me in such an effective manner that I went back into the pulpit and implicitly threw myself on my Heavenly Father for help, and if ever I prayed in my life, I prayed that night that I might have strength for the service and overcome all difficulties in my way to accomplish some good in my Master's cause. Perhaps I never preached a more effective sermon. A protracted meeting was held in the church a little time after this, and a number of the converts dated their conversion to that evening's service.

The day following Mr. Campbell called at my room in my boarding house and spent nearly an hour with me questioning me with respect to my plan of life. I do not now remember much that he said, but I shall never forget the impression his great personality made upon me. Indeed, I owe much of whatever success I have made in life to that remarkable visit. His fatherly advice would have been very effective if that had been the only influence wrought upon me; but there was something indescribable in Mr. Campbell's personality that told more upon my future life than anything he specially said, however important this may have been. In after years I was with him frequently, and often in the most intimate relationship, and I never failed to realize the curious, magnetic power which he seemed always to possess in a remarkable degree.

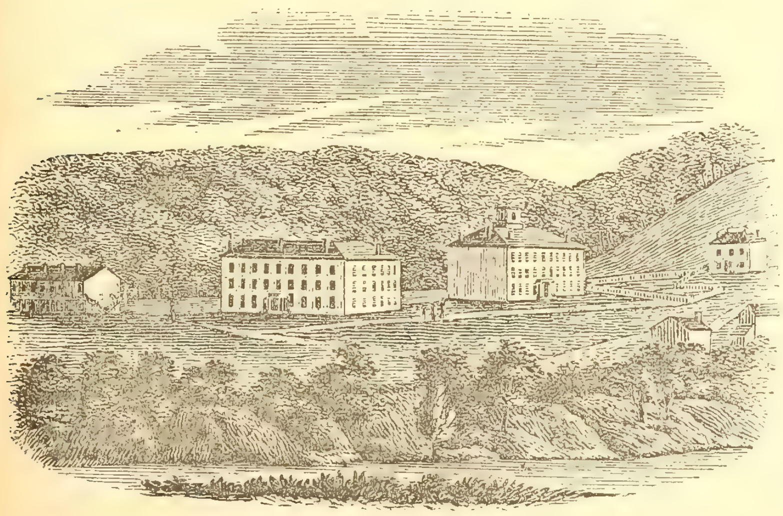
Perhaps this magnetic power was augmented because Mr. Campbell seemed always to live in the sunshine. I have never known a brighter nature than his. He could weep with those that weep, but it was his supreme delight to rejoice with those that rejoice. There was not a particle of pessimism in his nature. Hope reigned supremely over every day of his life. Whoever will read his writings will be impressed with the hopeful spirit which breathes in every line. He knew no such thing as discouragement. His strong faith in the Son of God gave him an assurance doubly sure that victory would ultimately crown every worthy effort made in the interest of Christ's great cause: and so thoroughly was Mr. Campbell convinced that he was pleading for Christ's cause that nothing seemed to permanently cloud his vision or create a doubt in his mind as to the ultimate triumph of the principles he advocated.

It is also worthy of notice that the single, definite purpose of Mr. Campbell's life must have had a powerful influence in giving his personality the charm it possessed. He lived with a definite aim before him to the end of his life. It was this terminus ad quem, or aim in view, which gave to his character a power almost irresistible. Perhaps no one has ever become great who did not live for some supreme end. Our divine Lord himself had just one aim in view during the whole of his personal ministry. He came to do the will of his Father. This was the beginning and end of his earthly mission, and this fact gave a power to his personality which nothing else could have done. The moment Alexander Campbell became convinced he had a special mission, from that moment he gave himself up supremely to that mission, and it dominated his whole life, and subordinated every faculty of his being to the accomplishment of the great work he undertook to do. This singleness of purpose impressed itself upon his personal life and made that life one of sunshine, beauty, fellowship and power. Perhaps it is too early for any one to take his true measure, but I do not hesitate to predict that the time will come when he will be reckoned as one of the greatest men who lived during the nineteenth century.

Alexander Campbell and Bethany College

By J. W. McGarvey

I take pleasure in complying with the request of The Christian-Evangelist for a short article on the subject announced above. I do so the more willingly because the recent death of Alexander Campbell, Jr., whom I have known intimately for fifty-nine years and more, has carried me back to the early days of Bethany, and brought afresh into my memory many of the scenes in which he and I mingled in boyhood. He and his four younger brothers and sisters, of whom only two of the latter survive him, were then but children. Mrs. Barclay, the younger of the two sisters, was then a little girl of 8 or 9 years, and frequently followed her father into the cheap little pulpit at the church, and sat there during the sermon. She occupies and owns the old homestead. Mrs. Thompson, now of Washington City, was a half grown girl in short dresses, not yet receiving the attention of beaux. Alec was yet in the primary department, and as frolicsome as a boy could well be. Their venerable father was entering the last decade of his wonderful career, and the grandfather, Thomas Campbell, was leaning on his staff, too dim of sight to walk abroad without a guide. I was myself just rounding out my seventeenth year, but was prepared to enter the Freshmen class.



Bethany in the 'Forties.

The chief work of Mr. Campbell in the college consisted in delivering a lecture on the Bible to the whole college every morning. He alternated between the Old Testament and the New; but he seldom went farther in the former than the Pentateuch, and in the latter, than the Gospels and Acts. He did not comment on these portions exhaustively, chapter after chapter, but he selected in consecutive order such subjects in each as enabled him to set forth the great themes which they suggest, and the distinctive features of the several dispensations which they represent. His remarks were very discursive, as was his habit in preaching, and by pursuing this method he not only threw light on the particular passages in hand, but on all the leading themes of divine revelation. His lecture room was one of the class rooms of the old college building, about 20 by 30 feet in dimensions, seated with rude benches, which were whittled with all manner of devices by idle students while pretending to hear the lectures. He sat in a plain chair on a small platform about six inches high in one corner of the room, with a plain unvarnished desk before him. His career was near its close when the new and splendid college edifice was completed.

All students of the college, without exception, were required to attend these lectures. Usually there were not more of them than could be conveniently seated in the room. No study was required except to listen to the lectures and to answer a few general questions propounded about once a week. Under this system of instruction, thoughtful students who were careful to take notes and study them in the light of the Scripture text, gained much invaluable information; but the idle and irreligious young men gathered only a few crumbs of Scripture knowledge. I well remember an incident that illustrates the manner in which some of these received the great addresses. After having lectured for several days on the events connected with the valley of Mesopotamia, Mr. Campbell put this question: "Mr. B, will you tell us some of the remarkable events connected with Mesopotamia?" After a little hesitation and scratching his head, B. answered: "I believe, sir, that that is the place where God made the world." Many in the room who joined in the roar of laughter could not have given a much better answer. But little as idle students learned from these great lectures in the way of facts laid up in the memory, they were every one deeply impressed by the eloquence and power of the lecturer, and in very many instances these impressions led to earnest religious lives in later years. Some, indeed, who were careless and idle while in college, were so impressed that they afterward became preachers. The educational power of a great personality has been exaggerated, I think, by some writers in recent years, but it is undoubtedly one of the chief factors in developing the mental and moral powers of the young. Parents and young persons who choose for themselves should think of this in selecting their teachers. It was only in this that Alexander Campbell was a teacher of extraordinary merit; but in this he was pre-eminent. Every student who sat many months before him in that humble chapel can recall bursts of eloquence the equal in thrilling power of the grandest which fell from his lips in his great orations.

Alexander Campbell and wife in 1861.

I think it was for a time almost universal among younger colleges founded by our brethren, to follow the example of Bethany in morning lectures on the Bible; but the lecturers did not prove to be Campbells; and in every instance, I think, even in Bethany, the custom has been discontinued. I am not sure that the discontinuance has been wise; for a daily lesson in the Scriptures, even if feebly presented, keeps the conscience aroused and prevents the young mind from forgetting God. It is now the custom to require of all who graduate a small amount of Bible study; but this is escaped by those who do not aim at graduation, and a large majority of college students who suspend their studies without graduating go out into the world almost as ignorant as horses about the Bible. These are the victims of all the fads and fancies in the name of religion, and the readiest victims of every new phase of skepticism. When young men are once made familiar with Abraham and the prophets, Christ and the apostles, they can afterward no more doubt the reality of their existence than that of their classmates and professors.

In closing this brief sketch I venture the suggestion to the managers of all of our colleges, that they should put their heads together at once and provide more instruction in the Bible. Their Bible courses should include more of the book and Bible study should be required, not only of all who graduate, but of all who matriculate. The question of religious instruction in the public schools is now undergoing fresh discussion throughout the country; why not a movement for more of it in the colleges? I said, religious instruction; but the best religious instruction, and the only kind that can possibly hope for introduction into public schools and state universities, is the study of the Bible. Especially ought this feature of higher education to characterize all so-called denominational colleges. No youth can now graduate from a college with a full curriculum without a knowledge of Greek and Roman history. The reputable college graduate can speak freely of all the great names of heathen antiquity; but he knows nothing of the early history of God's ancient people, or of those mighty men whose example has done more to uplift our race than that of all other men combined. This ought not to be so; and it will not be when believers in the Bible get their eyes open to the interests involved. It will not do to say that we have not room in our curriculum for more Bible study; we must make room. Some years ago I spent an hour in the class room of a theological professor in Vanderbilt University. The recitation was in the Greek New Testament, and somehow both students and professor got to questioning me about the College of the Bible. When I informed them that the most characteristic course in that college was a careful study of all the historical matter in the Bible, running through four years of daily recitations, the professor expressed admiration for such a course, but asked me, "How in the world do you find it possible to get that much Bible study into your curriculum?" I answered, "We put this in because we regard it as indispensable, and then we put in just so much of other studies as there is room for." This, the experience of more than forty years, has convinced me, is the most effective way to prepare men for preaching the Gospel, and for living a right life. To Alexander Campbell is due the credit of leading American colleges into the way of rightly appreciating this, the greatest theme of human study. All honor to his great name!

Our opponents too often seem to proceed upon such a principle. We would wish to see them discriminate with more accuracy, and examine with more candor." —Alexander Campbell.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. POWER

On March 4, 1866, Alexander Campbell died. We are soon to celebrate our Centennial, which is only a brief period of forty-three years from the death of the great leader and preacher. Everything connected with him has a fresh interest as we approach the great assembly in Pittsburg in 1909. It will do no harm to revive the memories of our heroic days; and in all our literature, and all our conventions, state as well as national, we should be awakening the attention of our people to the great principles and history of our movement. It is not too early to begin to prepare for this great event. There will be pilgrimages to Bethany as one of the special features of our Centennial celebration, and the story of the reformer, of his home and his college, of his family and his associates, of his work and his teachings, will be of thrilling interest to scores of thousands to whom his life has been a benediction.

The recent death of his oldest son, Col. Alexander Campbell, at Bethany, has called forth many expressions of sympathy and kindness. He passed away September 25, after an illness of two months. It was my pleasure to visit him in June, and he was then evidently declining. He was 75 years of age, and a severe attack of pneumonia hastened the end. Surrounded by his beloved ones, he fell asleep peacefully. The funeral service was conducted by Prof. R. H. Wynne, of the College, and his remains were laid to rest on the hill near those of his revered father. Old students will remember his genial nature, generous hospitality, fine social gifts, and kindly interest in the boys. He had been since 1870 one of the trustees, had attended every commencement with, I believe, one exception, since the institution was founded, was himself a graduate, and always deeply interested in the work of the college. He was a man of unquestioned ability, and filled many positions of honor and trust. Always with a taste for politics, he served twelve years as a member of the Democratic National Committee. He was also a member of the West Virginia Constitutional Convention of 1872. President Pendleton, who served in that body, said of him: "Mr. Campbell is deservedly one of the most popular members of the convention, and has been a true and untiring worker for the interests of our people. The citizens of Brooke, I am satisfied, could not have found in the county, a more influential and watchful guardian of their interests." During his first term President Cleveland appointed Col. Campbell one of three Commissioners to the Melbourne Exposition, and he spent a year in Australia. He was very useful in this office to the Government, and subsequently was sent to Australia to work up the interests of the Chicago Exposition, and with excellent results. Mr. Campbell married Miss Mary Anna Purvis, of Louisiana, a gracious Christian woman, who survives him, and whose aged mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Rose Miller, passed away at 93 years of age in his home at Bethany the week before his death. He leaves seven children—Virginia, who married Alexander T. Magarey of Australia, and has two children; Mary, who is the wife of B. C. Hagerman of Lexington, Ky., and has one child; Robert M., who is our pastor in Owingsville, Ky., and has one child; Archie, who lives in San Francisco; Ewing, whose home is in Nevada, and Alexander and William, who live at Bethany.

The Campbell Home at Bethany, W. Va.

Mr. Magarey, who married Col. Campbell's oldest daughter, Virginia, died suddenly at his home in Adelaide June 20. He had recently visited the United States and was with us here, and preached for me in the Vermont Avenue Church. While not regularly in the Christian ministry, he often rendered such service. He was able and consecrated, a man of large influence in his own country, and was sincerely mourned. He was one of the founders and honorable secretaries of the Royal Geographical Society, and a gifted naturalist. He was a man of beautiful character, of strong religious convictions, and of varied learning, a member of the Church of Christ at Stirling East in Adelaide, and preached frequently there. Mr. and Mrs. Magarey's only daughter married Julian Barclay, son of J. J. and Mrs. Decima Campbell Barclay. His son, Archibald Campbell Magarey, is a student of medicine at Adelaide University.

Mrs. Virginia Campbell Thompson has been for nine years a resident of Washington, and has a position in the Congressional Library. She was for thirteen years Postmaster at Louisville, Ky. She married William R. Thompson, of Louisville, a prominent lawyer, and her children are A. C. Thompson of Pittsburg, Robert Thompson of Wilmington, N. C., and Virginia Campbell Thompson of this city. We have had Mrs. Thompson, Robert and Virginia in our Vermont Avenue fellowship, and hold them in high esteem.

Mr. Campbell's tenth child was Mrs. Decima Barclay, now of Bethany, wife of J. J. Barclay, son of Dr. J. T. Barclay, missionary to Jerusalem and United States Consul there, and author of "The City of the Great King." Mr. Barclay served as United States Consul at Tangier. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Barclay are Dr. Judson Barclay of Topeka, Kans.; Alexander C. of Portland, Ore., and Julian T., who married Miss Mary Magarey, now professor of modern languages in the University of Louisiana. The Barclays occupy the Old Mansion, Bishop Campbell's old home at Bethany, where they dispense a gracious hospitality, and will welcome the Centennial pilgrims. Mrs. Barclay will this winter take the cruise of the Arabic to the Orient.

William Pendleton Campbell, Mr. Campbell's youngest son, lives in Wellsburg, W. Va., and is engaged in the real estate business. He married Miss Nannie Cochran of Louisville, Ky., and has four children—Patrick C. of Joplin, Mo.; Argyle, of Chicago, and Jeannette and Alice, who reside with their parents.

The descendants of Alexander Campbell by his first wife are not numerous. His oldest daughter, Jane Caroline, married Albert Gallatin Ewing. Her daughter, Margaret, became the wife of Joseph Pendleton, a cousin of W. K. Pendleton, and a successful lawyer of Wheeling. John O. Pendleton of Wheeling, who served in Congress, Mrs. Virginia Wilson, Miss Lizzie and Miss Maggie Pendleton are her children. Sarah Ewing married John W. Bush of Texas, and nine children were born to them. Maria Louise Campbell became the wife of Robert Y. Henley of Virginia, and their

Alexander Campbell---A Master of Assemblies

By Archibald McLean

Alexander Campbell was ordained on January 1, 1812. It is safe to say that he was one of the most effective preachers of all time. While he lived in Bethany, he traveled much and preached everywhere. The announcement that he was to speak called together a throng too great for any building. When the weather permitted he spoke in the open air to the thousands that assembled from near and from far. Much of his preaching was done in what was then the frontier. The people were hungry for the bread of life. No man in a metropolitan pulpit spoke to more intelligent or responsive audiences. Like most of the preachers of the wilderness, Mr. Campbell was an extemporaneous speaker. The pioneers liked men who "could shoot without a rest." While he made the most careful preparation for the pulpit, he wrote but little. Because of this, few of his sermons have been preserved, and even these are not verbatim reports.

Mr. Campbell's sermons can not be placed in evidence. The most one can do is to gather up the testimonies of some of those who heard him. Judge Black said: "As a great preacher, he will be remembered with unqualified admiration by all who had the good fortune to hear him in the prime of his life. The first sentence drew the audience still as death, and every word was heard with rapt attention to the close. It did not appear to be eloquence; it was logic, explanation and argument, so clear that everybody followed without an effort, and all felt that it was raising them to the level of a superior mind." Robert Graham said: "He charmed all alike, the old and the young, the educated and the uneducated. No one could listen to him and not confess him to be one of the greatest men of his age. He had a style of his own, and always elicited the admiration of his hearers." J. S. Lamar spoke of the way the people followed him and quoted him and hung enchained upon his lips, and how they spread his name and fame wide and far. He adds: "He did not belong to that class that is commonly meant when we speak of popular preachers. He did not preach like them. He filled and moved in a sphere of his own. He seemed to have, and deeply to feel that he had, a special mission, an appointment from his Lord, to do a peculiar and world-wide work." He spoke of him as a great man, God-appointed and God-inspired. He represented him as a figure statuesque, colossal, mighty, a grand and masterful man, worthy of his sacred mission, worthy of the great brotherhood he led into the light and liberty of the gospel, and worthy of the large place he will one day be given in the history of the Church. President Humphrey spoke thus of Mr. Campbell: "In listening to him you feel that you are in the presence of a great man. He speaks like a master of assemblies, one who has entire confidence in the mastery of his subject and his powers, and who expects to carry conviction without any of the adventitious aids on which ordinary men find it necessary to rely. There were many fine and truly eloquent passages in the two discourses I heard, but they seemed to cost him no effort, and to betray no consciousness that they were fine." President Madison said: "It was my pleasure to hear him very often as a preacher of the Gospel, and I regard him as the ablest and most original expounder of the Scriptures I have ever heard." One Baptist preacher said what many felt, "I once thought I could preach, but since I heard this man, I do not seem any larger in my own estimation than my little finger." The people heard with delight. Not only so, but the truth was retained and treasured up in their hearts to be solemnly reconsidered and pondered, changing in very many cases the very currents of life, and leading to a blessed and glorious destiny.

Mr. Campbell's style was his own. He did not aim to copy any of the famous orators of ancient or modern times. Strangers were surprised to find in him an entire want of gesture or mannerism; that he talked as men commonly talk. Leaning on a cane, he often spoke in a true conversational style for two or three hours. He rarely made a gesture of any sort. "There was no attitudinizing; no pointing upward to the stars; no stretching forth of outspread arms, as if to embrace mountains." He was seldom tender or pathetic. His style reminded some of the Apostle as he opened the Scriptures and alleged that the Jesus he preached was the Christ. At rare intervals he spoke with the utmost fervor. Then he was like a living fire or a sweeping tornado, forcing the hearer to forget all idea of logical connection, and impressing him only with the idea of power. President Pendleton said of him: "His ideas flowed on a perpetual stream, majestic for its stately volume, and grand for its width and sweeping magnificence of its current. With a voice that thrilled with the magnetism of great thoughts, and a person imposing and majestic as his mind was vigorous and commanding, no one could hear and see him and fail to discover that he was in the presence of one on whom nature had set the seal of transcendent greatness."

Robert Richardson called attention to Mr. Campbell's singular ability to interest the hearer in the subject he treated. While his voice was heard nothing could dissolve the charm. Minutes became seconds, and hours became minutes, so that the auditor became unconscious of the lapse of time, and his attention during the longest discourse never flagged. One minister complained that he rode thirty miles to hear a man speak thirty minutes. On looking at his watch he found it had been two hours and thirty minutes. Two hours had gone, and he knew not how, though he had been awake all the time.

His style of sermonizing was as peculiar as his delivery. Mr. Campbell did not believe in textual preaching. He spoke on the themes that run like rivers through all Scripture. In all his preaching his one aim was to set forth the mind of the Spirit. One man went to hear him to learn if he were a Calvinist or an Arminian. On being asked if he discovered where Mr. Campbell stood, he said: "No, I know nothing about him; but be he devil or be he saint, he has thrown more light on that Epistle and on the whole Scriptures than all the preaching to which I have ever listened." Mr. Campbell went back of Calvin and Arminius and Athanasius to Christ and his apostles. He saw in Christ, and in Christ alone, the one true rallying point for all believers. Christ was the core of all his preaching, his character, his offices, his perfection, and his supremacy. No other preacher ever held more consistently and more firmly to the essen-

LOOSE TEETH

Made Sound by Eating Grape-Nuts.

Proper food nourishes every part of the body, because Nature selects the different materials from the food we eat, to build bone, nerve, brain, muscle, teeth, etc.

All we need is to eat the right kind of food slowly chewing it well—our digestive organs take it up into the blood and the blood carries it all through the body, to every little nook and corner.

If some would ask you, "Is Grape-Nuts good for loose teeth?" you'd probably say, "No, I don't see how it could be." But a woman in Ontario writes:

"For the past two years I have used Grape-Nuts Food with most excellent results. It seems to take the place of medicine in many ways, builds up the nerves and restores the health generally.

"A little Grape-Nuts taken before retiring soothes my nerves and gives sound sleep." (Because it relieves irritability of the stomach nerves, being a predigested food.)

"Before I used Grape-Nuts my teeth were loose in the gums. They were so bad I was afraid they would some day all fall out. Since I have used Grape-Nuts I have not been bothered any more with loose teeth.

"All desire for pastry has disappeared and I have gained in health, weight and happiness since I began to use Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Get the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

tial deity of our Lord. He saw in him the only hope of men and of nations.

Mr. Campbell's preaching may be summarized as follows: Christ, the only teacher; the Bible, the only authoritative book; the Church, the only institution for spiritual ends; faith in Jesus as the Christ, and repentance towards God the only prerequisites to baptism; obedience to the divine commands, the test of Christian standing; the gospel, the essential channel of spiritual influence in conversion; the truth of the gospel to enlighten; the love of God as seen in the gospel to persuade; the ordinances of the gospel as tests of submission to the divine will; the promises of the gospel, as the evidence of pardon and acceptance; and the Holy Spirit in and through all these accomplishing his work of enlightening, convincing of sin, guiding the penitent soul to pardon, and bearing witness to the obedient believer of his adoption into the family of God.

In his youth Mr. Campbell preached a sermon in which he contrasted the gospel with the law of Moses. He combated the idea, then so common, that in every conversion there must be a work of the law. The sinner must hear the thunders of Sinai before he could hear the pardoning voice of the Son of God. Mr. Campbell held that Mosaism was provisional and local. It was for one people and for one age. It had no glory because of the more excellent glory of the Christian system. He never denied or doubted the value or the permanency of the ethical element in Mosaism. That was taken up and incorporated in the Christian system. But as a system, Mosaism waxed old, and long since passed away. Mr. Campbell distinguished between the dispensations. He spoke of the patriarchal as starlight, of the Jewish as moonlight, of the mission of John the Baptist as twilight, and the Christian dispensation as the sunlight of the world. The patriarchs had the bud, the Jews had the blossom, we have the mature fruit of divine grace. The sermon was thoroughly evangelical. But because of it its author was tried for heresy. He put his accusers to flight. Thirty years after the sermon was preached it was published. So great had been the change in public sentiment in that time that no intelligent man could be found who took exceptions to its teaching.

The preaching of Mr. Campbell would not have had the influence it had if he had not been a great and good man. The man behind the sermon is as important as the man behind the gun. His character mightily reinforced his message. It was said of him by one of his pupils that nature was in a fertile mood when she molded his large and sinewy body. "Material was abundant and bestowed with no grudging hand. There was not a pound of flesh too much, nor a pound too little. As to the resources of the mind, no word but opulent will describe him. Here he was pre-eminent. His head was faultless, the finest I ever saw." No one ever called his character in question. He had enemies. All sorts of charges were made against him for the views he held and for those he was supposed to hold. He ever wore the white flower of a blameless life. No father could wish for an only son a career more splendid or more stainless. He lived in constant and conscious fellowship with Jesus Christ. He was filled with the Holy Spirit. His piety was nourished and instructed by the daily study of the Word of God, and by a perpetual habit of prayer.

A Poem by Mr. Campbell.

The following lines were written by Mr. Campbell to his wife one Sunday morning in 1858, when travelling on the Cumberland River:

Serene the morn, and bright the sky;
  I walked the deck alone;
The morning star with silvery rays
  In all its splendor shone.

* * *

Some golden streaks of brightest hue
  Were trembling on the sky;
The forest leaves with drops of dew
  Gave hope that Spring was nigh.

* * *

It was, indeed, the Lord's-day morn,
  And soon my thoughts were turned
To those bright scenes of hope and joy
  With which our hearts have burned.

* * *

How soon shall all the toils of earth
  Give place to Heavenly rest;
And those who live for God and Christ
  Shall be forever blest!

* * *

Hold on thy way, my sister wife,
  In faith, and hope, and love;
And when our toils on earth are past,
  We'll meet in Heaven above.

Be this our aim, our happy choice,
  Till all our toils are o'er,
Then we shall meet among the blest,
  And part again no more."

This article may fitly conclude with the testimony of four men of renown. Judge Black, speaking of Mr. Campbell's life and work, said this: "To effect a great reformation in such circumstances, to convince large numbers against their will, to organize the believers into a compact and powerful body, to conquer the respect of the world—these are proofs of intellectuality and moral force with which few of the children of men have been gifted. To these qualities were added an unfailing courage, a fortitude that nothing could shake, a chivalrous sense of justice to his opponents and affection for his friends, second only to his love for the cause to which he devoted his life. What greater claim can any man give to the character of a hero?" George D. Prentice spoke of Mr. Campbell as being unquestionably one of the most extraordinary men of his time. "His intellect is among the clearest, richest, profoundest ever vouchsafed to men. He grasps and handles the highest, subtlest, and most comprehensive principles as if they were the liveliest impressions of the senses. No poet's soul is more crowded with imagery than his is with the ripest forms of thought. Surely the life of a man thus excellent and gifted is a part of the common treasure of society. In his essential character he belongs to no sect or party, but to the world."

Bishop Hurst has said that few men have impressed themselves more profoundly on the religious life of their age than Alexander Campbell. His personality was of the most vigorous type, and for over a generation his name was a tower of strength over the whole United States. He was a man of the purest character and the highest consecration. He leavened the whole country with his views. Few men have exerted a wider influence. General Lee said that if Mr. Campbell had been delegated as a representative of his species to any one of the many superior worlds, he would have suggested a grand idea of the human race. The New York "Independent" has said that there is not a religious body in Christendom that, whether it will confess it or not, has not been profoundly affected by his life and work. His influence and fame have increased rather than diminished since his death. Many competent judges believe that they will continue to increase till that for which he pleaded so long and so earnestly and so ably will be accomplished, and there will be one flock as there is one Shepherd. Coming generations will rank Mr. Campbell among the greatest of the God-given men who have blessed earth.

DOCTOR'S WORDS
Talks About the Analysis of Postum Food Coffee.

To the Doubting Thomases, the endorsement of a physician as to the wholesomeness of Postum Food Coffee may be comforting.

When coffee causes nervousness and dyspepsia, it's time to stop it. And there is where Postum is a true comforter. It is a warm, palatable and wholesome beverage and at the same time is a liquid food.

Coffee does harm, not because it's well or poorly made—not because it's high or low priced—but because of the alkaloid —drug—caffeine, it contains. The habitual use of coffee, therefore, forms a drug habit.

A Buffalo physician said recently, "I have used Postum Food Coffee in my family and find it to be all that is claimed for it—a most wholesome, delicious beverage. When made and served according to directions it is certainly delightful and refreshing.

"I have read carefully Dr. Davenport's analysis of Postum Food Coffee, as printed on the pkg., which I most heartily endorse. I have been prescribing it to my patients."

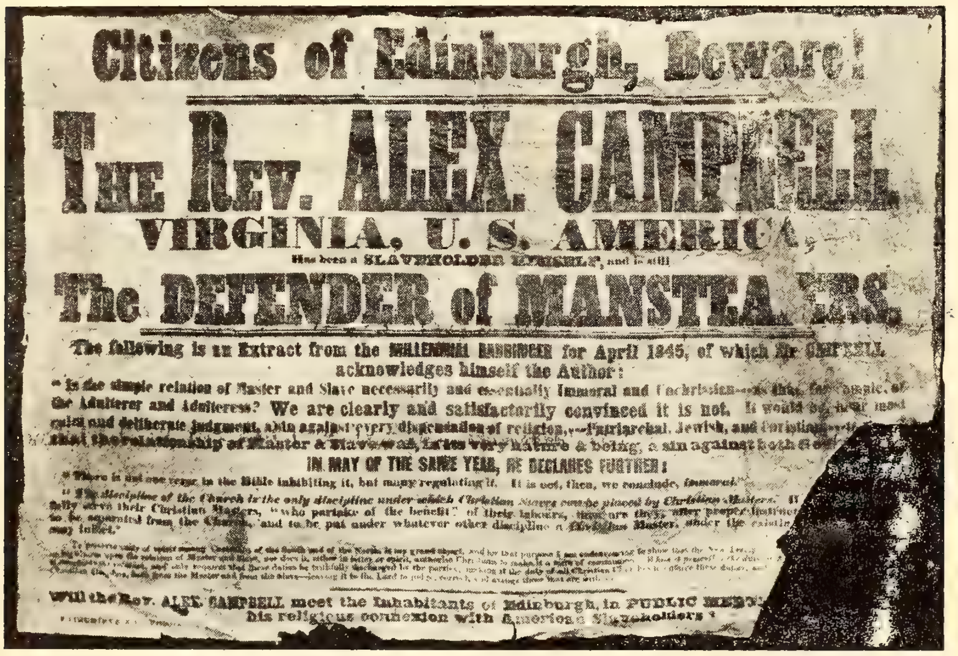
The Dr. is right and there's a reason. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville" in pkgs.

Alexander Campbell's Imprisonment

By C. C. REDGRAVE.

The Edinburgh poster and the picture of the South Prison in Glasgow, presented with this article, introduce us to a chapter in the life of the sage of Bethany full of painful memories. Having in the month of August, 1847, reached the city of Edinburgh, on his European tour, Mr. Campbell was interviewed by the Rev. James Robertson and two other deputies of the "Scotch Anti-Slavery Society," to whom he frankly confided his views of American slavery and of the abolitionists in Great Britain and America.

These ostensibly friendly visitors, however, proved to be enemies in disguise. For they proceeded immediately, in the most public manner and in a spirit of virulence, to defame their distinguished guest and erstwhile fellow-citizen. Large posters (see photographic copy with this sketch) were displayed all over the city, and men were employed to parade in front of the buildings, where Mr. Campbell was announced to speak, carrying the huge bills on boards in front of them and on their backs. The same tactics were employed in other cities, so that Mr. Campbell was everywhere heralded by these defamatory reports. The excitement was intense, threats were frequently heard, and grave fears were entertained regarding Mr. Campbell's safety. Leaving to his biographers, the full discussion of the events of this exciting period, we content ourselves with just a word or two with regard to his views on American slavery and the immediate cause of his imprisonment.



Citizens of Edinburgh, Beware!

The Rev. ALEX. CAMPBELL,

VIRGINIA, U. S. AMERICA,

Has been a SLAVEHOLDER HIMSELF, and is still

The DEFENDER of MANSTEA ERS.

The following is an Extract from the MILLENNIAL HARBINGER for April 1845, of which Mr CAMPBELL acknowledges himself the Author:

"Is the simple relation of Master and Slave necessarily and essentially Immoral and Unchristian—as that, for example, of the Adulterer and Adulteress? We are clearly and satisfactorily convinced it is not. It would be [illegible] most calm and deliberate judgment, akin against every dispensation of religion,—Patriarchal, Jewish, and Christian [illegible] that the relationship of Master & Slave was, in its very nature & being, a sin against both G

IN MAY OF THE SAME YEAR, HE DECLARES FURTHER:

"There is not one verse in the Bible inhibiting it, but many regulating it. It is not, then, we conclude, immoral."

"The discipline of the Church is the only discipline under which Christian Slaves can be placed by Christian Masters." [illegible] fully serve their Christian Masters, "who partake of the benefit" of their labours, than are they, after proper instruct to be separated from the Church, and to be put under whatever other discipline a Christian Master, under the existin may inflict."

Will the Rev. ALEX. CAMPBELL meet the Inhabitants of Edinburgh, in PUBLIC MEE his religious connexion with American Slaveholders?

A Remarkable Edinburgh Poster.

Mr. Campbell looked upon American slavery as the darkest blot on the national escutcheon. He manumitted his own slaves—the slaves found on the farm so generously given him by his father-in-law, and even bought slaves and gave them their liberty. He contended earnestly for the God-given rights which the negro inherited in common with the white man. Yet believing as he did that the New Testament did not condemn the simple relation of master and servant, as such, his remedy for the blighting curse was the inculcation of Christian duty, and the dissemination of Bible truth. Moreover, he strenuously maintained that the full enfranchisement of the negro should come by proper constitutional means and not by cannon and the sword.

Meanwhile Mr. Campbell was the subject of much evil report. Replying to Mr. Robertson's challenge to publicly discuss the question at issue, Mr. Campbell said he would debate "provided only that he be not that Reverend James Robertson, who was publicly censured and excluded from the Baptist church for violating the fifth commandment in reference to his mother, of which I have heard something in Dundee."

On the strength of this supposed defamation of character, and the plea that flight from Scotland was premeditated, Mr. Robertson secured a warrant for Mr. Campbell's arrest in Glasgow.

In the firm belief that he was being persecuted for righteousness sake, Mr. Campbell refused to accept bail and was committed to the common prison to await his trial. After ten days the case was brought before Lord Murray, who declared the warrant illegal and ordered the prisoner's discharge.

That the "South Prison" (see illustration) was the place of Mr. Campbell's confinement in Glasgow is evident. There were but two prisons in the city in 1847. The "North Prison," which prior to 1841, was designated "Bridewell," is now named, "Her Majesty's Prison, Duke street, Glasgow." In the records of this prison for 1847, which were carefully examined, at my request, by the governor of the jail no mention is made of A. Campbell, though particulars are given of one by that name, who was confined there in 1846, and described as twenty-six years old, a hammerman by trade, charged with breach of peace, and sentenced to twenty days imprisonment.

The records of the "South Prison" are lost, and have not been available for more than fifty years. Still, with this lack of official certification, it is pertinent to ask, if Mr. Campbell was not committed to "South Prison," was he imprisoned in Glasgow at all?

The cell in which the great reformer was placed was "small, with little light and no comforts save a stool and a small table and a piece of carpet two feet by four on the cold stone floor." A bed was improvised by hanging a hammock from two hooks driven into the walls. "South Prison" is a massive building with a superb Grecian portico and is altogether a splendid specimen of the Greek style of architecture. It is located at the foot of Saltmarket facing Glasgow Green and was built in 1810 at a cost of $175,000. The cells, or prison proper constitutes the rear of the Justiciary Court House, seen in the illustration, but it is in so cramped a space that it can not be photographed.

C. C. Redgrave.

P. S.—The Edinburgh poster is in the possession of Mrs. D. C. Barclay. It was brought over by Mr. Campbell to let his wife see by what means he obtained his unenviable notoriety. The poster is much the worse for age and wear, and the lower right hand corner is lost.

A Campbell Incident.

In an early day in the Campbell movement an appointment was made for Alexander Campbell to deliver an address in one of the largest towns in the district. Religiously, the Presbyterians largely predominated in the town, and, besides, a strong prejudice existed against Mr. Campbell on account of a belief entertained by the people that (being a citizen of Virginia), he was a slave owner. However, when the evening came for delivery of the address, the large court room where it was delivered, was crowded with an audience of more than average intelligence. For considerably more than an hour Mr. Campbell held his audience in profoundest attention, which was only broken by the announcement of the usual invitation hymn. During the singing of the hymn an old and well known negro man was discovered pressing his way to the platform where the speaker was standing. As soon as the old man's purpose became known, a smile passed over the faces of the audience, partly in contempt for the old negro, but more in anticipation of the disappointment and chagrin, which his coming would bring to the speaker. For a moment Mr. Campbell was perplexed, but so soon as he discovered the old negro coming, he divined the cause of the smile, promptly stepped forward and cordially took him by the hand, and then, for a moment surveying the audience, in a clear, calm voice, that reached every one in the room, said: "I thank God that he has made of one blood all peoples who dwell upon the earth; and that whosoever will obey him and work righteousness is accepted by him." At once the entire audience was in a tremor of suppressed emotion, in the midst of which Mr. Campbell proceeded to take the old man's confession.

The Place for Our 1907 Convention

By M. W. MASON.

The Disciples of Christ will be invited to hold their annual convention of 1907 at the Jamestown Exposition, Norfolk, Va., and there are many good reasons why the invitation should be accepted and this important convention be held in the historic old city of Norfolk, Va. For three hundred years Tidewater, Va., has played a prominent part in American history. It was here where the first permanent English settlement in America was made. It was here where the first Protestant church in America was erected, and, passing on to Colonial days, it was here where the first Declaration of Independence was drafted. During the Revolutionary War and America's long struggle for independence, Norfolk, Va., and the territory surrounding it again played an important part. In the war of 1812 and the civil war this part of Virginia was the scene of many bloody battles. No other part of America is richer in history and no place more suitable for a great international historic celebration than on the shores of Hampton Roads, where the Jamestown Exposition is to be held.

Aside from the interesting historical and industrial features of the exposition, the greatest naval and military celebration in the history of the world will be held on the shores and waters of Hampton Roads during the larger part of the exposition period.

The leading states of the union will have buildings on the grounds and a number of prominent fraternal organizations will be represented.

In order to accommodate the vast multitude of people who are expected to attend the Jamestown Exposition many commodious hotels and rooming houses are being built in and around Norfolk and neighboring towns and cities, and hundreds of private residences are preparing accommodations for exposition visitors. The exposition company has taken especial precaution against extortionate rates by securing agreements in writing from the various hotels and rooming houses to provide accommodations at reasonable rates. The railroads and steamship lines leading to Norfolk have assured the exposition company that especially low rates will be made for the exposition visitors.

The massive auditorium, or Hall of Congresses, near the center of the exposition grounds will be placed at the disposal of the Disciples of Christ for their meetings during their stay in Norfolk and all possible convenience will be provided for their accommodations.

Many interesting side trips can be made from Norfolk during the exposition, among these a trip to Jamestown Island, where the first settlement was made and where still stands the old church tower, built centuries ago; a trip to Yorktown, the scene of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis, historic old Fortress Monroe, Portsmouth's navy yard, the great ship-building plant in Newport News and the great fisheries of this locality will all afford interesting points for visitors by way of diversion after the convention is ended.

More than a hundred conventions and gatherings of various kinds will be held at the exposition between the opening day, April 26, 1907, and the close, November 30, 1907. Hundreds of war ships from all the great nations of the earth and thousands of picked soldiers from various countries will participate in the maneuvers on the waters and shores of Hampton Roads.

The Jamestown exposition should especially appeal to the Disciples of Christ and no other point should be considered for their convention of 1907. Inducements offered by other cities are the same at all times, but Norfolk can only offer such an inducement as the Jamestown Exposition once, and this inducement can be offered by no other city or no other period.

The Great Difference In Life Insurance Companies

is not revealed by their names nor their claims. The day before the San Francisco disaster, all Fire Insurance Companies seemed alike to the thoughtless; there was a great difference nevertheless, and when the test came, some quibbled, some defaulted, while others drew on the reserve funds which they had ready for such a contingency, paid the large amounts due, and went right on.

¶ It is because for years the money it has received from its policyholders has been invested with unusual skill and care—always safe, always growing, always ready for the hour of need—that is the strongest and staunchest Life Insurance Company in the world. Read these figures as to the Mutual reserve.

¶ At the close of 1905, the Mortgage Loans amounted to $109,771,163.16, on which more than four and one-half millions have been received in interest during the year, and less than fifteen thousand dollars of interest was overdue at its close. Most of this trifling amount was paid in within a few days. The sum of $28,198,278.84 was loaned on the Company's policies, and $18,195,000.00 was loaned on other collateral, no interest whatever being overdue on either item. Bonds and Stocks costing $239,986,702.05 and having a market value on December 31, 1905, of $265,301,867.38 were held by the Company, and on this enormous amount not one dollar of interest was overdue and unpaid, and but one stock failed to pay a good dividend in 1905, this stock being that of a new company, subsequently sold at a profit over cost. When it is borne in mind that no such aggregation of purely investment securities has ever been brought together elsewhere, the absolutely clean and indeed perfect quality of these immense investments excites praise and wonder, felt and expressed most strongly by those who know most as financiers of the dangers and pitfalls attending the care of large investments. This remarkable showing also appeals to the plain people whose money comes slowly, who value safety and who understand that security like the above makes "insurance" insurance indeed.

Our Budget

—"Put me off at Buffalo!"

—All aboard for the great National Convention!

—If you have decided not to go, when you see this, think it over and reverse your decision.

—It is still time for you to take in the Lord's day communion service and the Home and Foreign Missionary Conventions.

—Here's a unique and pressing invitation from Buffalo which came too late, even though flashed over the wires, for our last week's issue:

> "Buffalo, Oct. 2, 1906.
> "Side-track everything for the convention. Specials October 11-12. World-wide missions, Christian fellowship and higher individual spirituality have the right-of-way. Stop over in Buffalo for sight-seeing from the top of convention mountain. Unsurpassed views of world-wide fields and inspiring visions of celestial glory. Stamp all tickets 'Enthusiasm and Devotion.' Jesus Christ will personally conduct all parties. Secure travelers' insurance against pessimism, hobbyism, criticism and sectarianism. All things are ready. Come!
> "R. H. MILLER,
> "International Missionary Convention."

—If that does not bring you, no added word of ours would reach your case. Even if you are unable to secure the kind of insurance suggested, you would be reasonably safe from any of the diseases mentioned in an assembly like that convening this week in Buffalo, where they seldom break out, and are soon cured when they do. The atmosphere of our conventions soon destroys the germs of these moral disorders.

—We regret that we are unable to include either all the articles or all the pictures relating to the life of Alexander Campbell which we had planned to appear in this number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We shall publish other articles and photographs just as soon as we can find space for them in our crowded columns.

—The work at Belle Plain, Ill., has grown under the four months' ministration of F. A. Scott.

—The Christian Woman's Board of Missions has raised $206,553.12. The aim was $200,000.

—J. E. Couch will close his work at Minier, Ill., next Lord's day and begin at Pauls Valley, I. T., the following Sunday.

—We regret to hear of the death of A. H. Smith of Mataura, Southland, New Zealand. He had been attending Christian University at Canton, Mo.

—"Watch for Texas at Buffalo." So writes C. C. Bearden, of Clarendon. We know that Texas is all right and that J. C. Mason is "a good general."

—An organization has been completed at Arlington, Ky., with E. H. Rayner, who is attending the College of the Bible, in charge.

—O. E. Hamilton and J. P. Garmong are having successful meetings in Australia. Later they may make a trip to the Orient and Palestine.

—George E. Lyon, of Lyons, has been chosen as superintendent of Kansas Missions, the position held for the last seven years by W. S. Lowe. The first Sunday in November, it will be remembered, is State Mission Sunday, to be observed in all the states by a collection for the benefit of a forward work in the states.

—W. E. Harlow and son paid THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a brief visit on their way to Wheeling, W. Va., where they open the evangelistic campaign at the First Church.

—The new building at Uniontown, Pa., will soon be ready for its roof. The accommodation will provide for an audience of 1,500 people at least. J. Walter Carpenter is the pastor.

—A. M. Growden has accepted a call to Osceola, Ia. He commends the church at Carbondale, Ill., which he leaves at an early date because compelled to seek a drier climate.

—Harold E. Monser, of Champaign, Ill., has been compelled on account of the continued illness of his wife, to cancel his engagement with the church at Stillwater, Okla., and will be home for a while.

—Mrs. Lily W. Molland, with her children and Miss Genevieve Perkins, missionaries of the Foreign Society, sail from San Francisco for China on the steamship "Nippon Maru," October 12.

—W. E. M. Hackleman, who is to lead the music at the National Convention at Buffalo this week, will help Evangelist W. J. Lockhart in two campaigns to be held at Lincoln, Ill., and Webb City, Mo., in November and December.

—We have only space in this issue to announce the fact that F. M. Green has just celebrated his seventieth birthday. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST extends its congratulations and wishes this veteran continued usefulness to the cause he has served for so many years.

—E. B. Bagby has preached his farewell sermon to a great congregation at Washington, D. C., and taken up his work at Cleveland, O. "We shall miss him greatly," writes Claude E. Jones, secretary of the Washington Ministerial Association.

—A. E. Cory, missionary of the Foreign Society to Wuhu, China, who recently closed a splendid meeting at Oskaloosa, Ia., where he was formerly pastor of the church, sails with his family on the steamship "Korea" from San Francisco November 20.

—J. Q. Biggs, of Buffalo, Mo., writes us that the county convention held there was a great success. One of the greatest meetings of the kind ever held in the county was the Sunday-school rally with 247 in attendance, and a good collection for state missions.

—F. F. Walters, of Neosho, Mo., writes: "The Newton County (Mo.) convention in Seneca was a success—the best in its history. The devotional and aggressive spirit was high throughout the session of two days, October 2-3. The addresses were all of the strongest and inspiring."

—Charles Reign Scoville has ' good word to say for the union meetings. Brother Scoville is now in a big meeting with our brethren at Sullivan. Ill., where a large tabernacle nearly 100 feet square, erected for the purpose, has been packed to the utmost night after night.

—A post card from J. M. Van Horn, received too late, we fear, to be of much service, announces that from all points in Canada east of Port Arthur a single fare plus $1 has been granted to the Buffalo Convention. By paying 50 cents the time may be extended to October 29. Tickets must be purchased not later than October 13.

—J. E. Chase, pastor of the church at North Bend, Neb., writes us that he was called on September 20 to preach the funeral of the infant child of Brother and Sister Haynes, who had just moved to Mound City, Mo. He preached for Brother Haynes at Forest City, at Oregon and at Union City, at all of which points Brother Haynes has now closed his work and devotes his whole time to evangelistic effort for which he is especially gifted. "It was refreshing to see the confidence and esteem given to Brother Haynes, but no man is more worthy of the same," writes Brother Chase, for whom Brother Haynes is to hold a meeting in October.

—Evangelist Charles Reign Scoville is to hold another union meeting soon, in which the union is expected to be permanent. His marriage to Miss Arlene Cornelia Dux, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Dux, 4 Campbell Park Boulevard, Chicago, is announced to take place October 17, 1906. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST extends both hands in congratulations and good wishes.

—THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is indebted to L. H. Stine, minister of the West Side Church, Tipton, Ind., for his recent hearty co-operation with us in greatly increasing the circulation of our paper in this congregation. Many of our preachers are bringing us under obligations of gratitude to them for similar courtesies.

—B. N. Mitchell, who has recently spent three years as pastor at Liverpool, England, doing a substantial work there, and who is at present at Joliet, Ill., doing some temporary work with the church there, can be secured as pastor of some church needing a strong preacher, or for evangelistic work in which he has also had great success. Address him at 108 Macomber avenue, Joliet, Ill.

—J. S. Edwards, late pastor of the Christian Church at Amarillo, Texas, has returned to Colorado Springs, his former home. He was at Amarillo for four years and on departing received the highest encomiums from the officers of the church for his Christian life and genial disposition, and a liberal purse was presented to him and his wife in token of the church's love and fellowship.

—Hiram College will have a banquet at the Buffalo Convention on Monday evening. It will be held at the University Club at $1 per plate. Those who expect to attend may reserve accommodations by addressing the Secretary of the College, J. O. Newcomb, Hiram, Ohio, or Convention Hall, Buffalo. There will, of course, be other college banquets, but we have had no announcements as to when or where these will take place.

—E. L. Day's work at Brazil, Ind., goes on in good shape. It will be remembered that the brethren there, in face of great difficulty, erected another handsome building after the destruction of their church by fire. It is a great satisfaction to see such confidence. We are glad to report, too, that Brother Day and his congregation are seeking to keep abreast with the general work of the brotherhood, and many of them are reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—J. B. Boen, who has just preached his farewell sermon at Chickasha, I. T., was presented with a handsome gold watch as a token of the regard of the congregation, while the devoted Christian life of his wife was also acknowledged. Texas is to be their future home, and J. E. Dinger, who recently entered upon evangelistic work, was called by long distance telephone, while in a meeting at Lincoln, Kans., and entered upon the pastorate last Lord's day.

—Thomas P. Ullom, who has for nearly six years been the pastor of our church at Traverse City, Mich., has just tendered his resignation, to take effect November 1. He will take up evangelistic work. Brother Ullom's work has been a good one, and he speaks to the largest congregations in the city, while he has a church membership of 450. Two years ago a handsome new building was dedicated.

—Brother Medbury is no doubt very happy. He writes from his great church in Des Moines, Ia.: "We have just made final remittances to the different boards, from our splendid Home Missionary offering of September 16. The amount was $628, which has been proportioned among the different boards doing work in the national field. This offering does not include state missions. We are now happy in having two living links in the foreign field, one in the general home field, and another in the state."

—W. M. Stuckey has just closed a fine meeting with his home church under a tent, unifying the Christians of Lebo as they never were before, and opening their eyes to the follies of sectarianism. As a relief from pastoral labors, he will enter the evangelistic field for a time, and is now in a meeting at Williamsburg, Kans. He will be open for other duties in December.

—We are glad to be able to print in this issue an article from the pen of Bro. James O. Carson who will celebrate his eighty-seventh birthday on the seventeenth of this month. Brother Carson was personally acquainted with the Campbells and most of the leaders of our movement. He entertained many of these at his home in St. Louis in the early days. Brother Carson has a desire to live long enough and to have strength enough to be present at the Centennial celebration in Pittsburg, and we will all pray that he may be spared to participate in that happy event.

—We are glad to note that H. C. Kendrick, who recently resigned at Hagerstown, Md., has been called to the great church at Georgetown, Ky., which is within twenty-five miles of his birthplace. This church has a membership of 700, and was erected recently at a cost of $40,000. Brother Kendrick, in writing about this change, says: "There are sad hearts in Hagerstown, and the saddest are the minister and family. The splendid church by many tokens of its love is making it very hard for us to leave. It is like breaking of home ties. I hope the move will redound to the great good of all parties especially concerned and to the honor and glory of the "Name that is above every name." The official board, after offering inducements in the way of increase of salary to retain Brother Kendrick, finally passed resolutions commending him and assuring him of the friendship of the congregation. He went to Hagerstown about five years ago. During his pastorate the church has been freed from debt and renovated and about 150 have been added to the membership.

—The Christian church at Fayette, Mo., traces its organization back to the pioneer days of 1830. It has had its periods of struggle, but through each has risen triumphant. Among its early preachers of note were T. M. Allen, Dr. Hopson and John W. McGarvey. The building used at present was dedicated in 1886. The membership to-day is something over 400, and of the usual church organizations the C. W. B. M. Auxiliary is deserving of special notice for the efficient work it has done in recent years. F. M. Grimes, Sr., Solon Smith and J. R. Callemore are now the elders of the church, while R. B. Helser has served it as pastor during the past two years, during which time there has been a net gain of 140 members. A meeting is now being held with Evangelist W. F. Shearer, of Angola, Ind., assisting Brother Helser, and Bro. Ben Hill, the local choir leader, in charge of the music. Brother Shearer is a man of faith and evangelistic power, while Brother Helser has good executive and pastoral ability. This combination ought to make for a forward movement in the church.

W. F. Shearer, Evangelist, of Angola, Ind.

R. B. Helser, Pastor at Fayette, Mo.

—The fine new church building just opened at Walla Walla, Wash., will accommodate about 900 people and will cost in the neighborhood of $40,000. When occasion requires, folding doors may be thrown open so that some twelve or fifteen hundred people can hear the preacher's voice. We congratulate Morton Gregory and his congregation on their admirable new equipment. The dedicatory ceremony will be postponed until the arrival of a large pipe organ and the entire completion of the interior of the building.

—It is quite a good sized directory that has been published by the First Church of Christ, Akron, O., no less than 1,154 names being found in it. Of this number 132 are non-residents of Akron and 55 are those whose addresses are unknown leaving a resident membership of 967. We note that not only is there an alphabetical list of the membership but there is a street directory as well whereon may quickly be found the names of the families that are members of the church. George Darsie is the minister of this church and Miss Jennie Jenkinson his pastoral helper. The Christian-Evangelist extends congratulations and wishes that this great church, with its accomplished leaders, may have another year of great prosperity.

—A member of the church at Indiana Harbor, Ind., a city of 6,000 inhabitants and 70 saloons, writes that two young brothers by the name of Snodgrass have been conducting a meeting of great power in a tent there. We make the following quotation from our sister's letter: "On Sunday afternoon as the writer trudged behind, being late, a beautiful picture rose before me. Looking far along the shores of Lake Michigan, with many people following to witness the sacred ordinance of baptism, I thought of the days of long ago when many followed after Jesus. What a beautiful thought to know that to-day they were still following him. As the breakers rose up and sometimes crossed over my pathway, I cried out, 'O Galilee, blue Galilee, where Jesus loved so much to be.' An old lady 70 years old was baptized that afternoon."

—On our Centennial page we record some good news from some of our colleges. We are glad to note that all schools that have reported to us show signs of growth. Cotner University has just opened, with the largest enrollment in its history, an increase of 28 per cent over last year. Eleven states are represented in the student body, and there is a representative of Japan, China, Korea, and one student from Tarsus, in Asia Minor. The College of the Bible, at Lexington, has about the same number of students as they began with last year. About half of the $25,000 being sought for a chair of Bible-school pedagogy was secured at the state convention recently held at Louisville. A venerable resident of Lexington, who has known the college from the time of its organization, has just died, leaving an unsolicited bequest of $1,000 out of a moderate esta .

Don't Fool Your System.

It is a pretty easy matter to drift into a serious case of Stomach, Bowel, Liver, Kidney, or Bladder trouble.

Ninety-eight per cent of all our ills start in these organs.

Therefore, we must see that they are always working with clock-like regularity. When your stomach "goes back on you" that is the danger signal. That means that impoverished blood is being sent through your system. The liver fails to do its work. Constipation follows. The damage is twofold—you cannot get enough nourishment from your food and you cannot force the impure matter out of your system. Consequently this impure matter is absorbed into the system and does the damage as it goes.

Under such conditions the system becomes an easy prey to disease. What you regard as a slight trouble today may be Typhoid fever, Appendicitis or worse tomorrow.

You can buy dozens of drugs which will give you relief and give it quickly, but the trouble soon comes again, and these "whirlwind" remedies do the organs much damage and little good. So don't try to fool your system.

When you want to cure yourself you must begin at the foundation; that is, see that your vital organs are restored to normal condition and that your blood is enriched and brought up to standard. Drake's Palmetto Wine will quickly and permanently cure Constipation, filter the Kidneys, relieve the congested condition of the Liver, and get the Stomach in perfect condition. Furthermore, it is the most efficient blood agent ever discovered, being a natural regulator—not an artificial one. It is made from the berries of the Saw-Palmetto tree of Florida, and is as pure as home-made grape juice and as pleasant to take.

You can get a dollar size bottle of any druggist for 75c, or, if you wish to try it before buying, write The Drake Co., 310 Drake Bldg., Wheeling, W. Va., for a free test bottle, which will be sent postpaid.

—During the meeting of Bruce Brown with the church at Kirksville, Mo., he received news of the sudden death of his aged father. Brother Brown writes: "He was much more to me than a father—my constant adviser and helper. I never undertook any task without conferring with him. His faith in Christ and his devoted life have made me whatever I am." While we sympathize with our brother in his bereavement, we congratulate him also on the heritage of a noble and blessed memory which his father leaves to him.

—No question comes to our desk more frequently than whether the board of officers of any congregation has the right to withdraw fellowship from any member of the church without the consent of the church. It ought to be thoroughly understood that the officers of the church are the agents or organs through which the church acts, and that the authority they possess they derive from the congregation that appoints them. They can recommend withdrawal of fellowship from an unworthy member, or the name of a preacher to be called, or any other measure, but the validity of such measure depends upon the approval of the congregation.

—We have received an interesting travel letter from J. N. Smith, for which we would like to have space. Granted a two months' vacation by his congregation at Los Angeles, he went to Helena, Mont., where one of his sons resides. He had the pleasure of spending some time in the Montana Association which was in session at our church, and met many of the ministers. Passing on to Billings, he preached there on the Lord's day, and later went to visit his only living brother at Hebron, Neb. He had not seen him for sixteen years. Brother Smith is due in Missouri about this time and will visit several of the towns in the state. H. A. Denton, of Maryville, is a son-in-law and, of course, he will have a royal visit there. His son, C. P., ministers at Mason City, where he is to deliver an address on the fifteenth anniversary of that church in October. The Buffalo convention will be attended in company with a Missouri delegation. Brother Smith first visited Hebron some thirty years ago when, it is said, one-half of the adult population of the county were present to hear him preach. Now they have a good church with a membership of about 300. At present, however, there is no pastor, R. A. Schell, who ministered to them for eight years, having gone early in July to take the work at Hastings, to the deep regret of the Hebron congregation. Any one interested in this pastorate should address F. A. Powell, one of the elders, and give references.

At our San Francisco convention the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist assumed the financial responsibility of raising a sufficient amount of funds for sustaining an evangelist to hold a meeting somewhere in New Hampshire, with a view of organizing our first church in that state. As it is now known, the city of Manchester was selected and Bro. Herbert Yeuell was chosen as evangelist. The meeting lasted a month, costing something less than $1,200 for all expenses. The response to our appeals through The Christian-Evangelist and to personal letters which the Editor sent to a number of our business men, has been very gratifying as indicating the interest which the brethren everywhere feel in that work. Counting the collections taken during the meeting a sufficient sum has been received to cancel all obligations. Those who have generously responded to our call for assistance have our sincere thanks for their co-operation.

It gives us pleasure to report that the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, which had agreed before the meeting began to support a pastor for the church when it was organized, has magnanimously consented to undertake the work at its present stage, sustain an evangelist there to gather the fruits of Brother Yeuell's meeting, in the organization of a church, and then to support a permanent pastor there. This means that not a dollar that has been paid to this undertaking will be lost, but that the fruits of the meeting will be conserved and the work carried on to permanent success. A small balance on hand will be turned over to the C. W. B. M. for that work.

We congratulate all the parties concerned on this successful issue of our enterprise, and on the prospect that hereafter New Hampshire will have a place on our religious map along with the other states of the union.

Babies To Be Cared For.

The Mothers' and Babies' Home of the Christian Church, 2821 Lawton avenue, St. Louis, Mo., has for adoption several baby boys and girls under one year of age, a pair of twin boys 2 years of age and twin girls 1 year old, besides a number of boys about 3 years old. We will be glad to find good homes for these children.

Let me say, too, that we are really in urgent need of funds for our institution.

Ernest J. Bradley, minister of the Central Christian church at Hillsboro, Texas, desires to exchange meetings with some member of The Christian-Evangelist family. Hillsboro is a town of 7,000, and the Central church has a membership of more than 200. Brother Bradley desires the meeting in Hillsboro to begin about October 20-25. He will give return meeting to meet the need of the church exchanging meetings.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Kansas State Convention.

The state convention of the Christian churches of Kansas met at Parsons, September 17-20. To try to describe it by adjectives would exhaust the vocabulary. Every arrangement was made by the church at Parsons to entertain the convention. There was no "address of welcome," but committees met every one at the train and gave them a personal welcome. Then we were taken to the church where every modern accommodation was provided. Postoffice, check-room, dining-room—where dinner and supper were served—and assignment made. We had lodging and breakfast in the splendid homes of Parsons. The program embraced every department of the work, with specialists in each department, from this and other states. At the start the Y. P. S. C. E. department gave life to the whole convention.

The first address was by F. E. Mallory, of Topeka, on "The Essence of Christianity," which he gave in these words, and which rang through the whole convention, "Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, with all thy heart and thy neighbor as thyself," dwelling on the "neighbor."

In the church period we had many good things. I make special mention of the address by Chas. A. Finch, of Topeka, on "Walled Cities," which was eloquent and helpful, and that of H. A. Orchard, of Ft. Scott, on "The Country Preacher," which was ordered to be published by the convention. The two addresses of W. F. Turner, of Joplin, Mo., on "Home and Foreign Missions" were masterpieces, and worthy of the man that he is.

The reports from the workers showed substantial gains in the work. The sad feature of this period was the announcement that W. S. Lowe would no longer serve us as field secretary. He has filled this responsible position seven years, with great satisfaction to the board and brotherhood. The specialist in the Bible school department was Robert M. Hopkins, of Louisville, Ky., who was very helpful to us all. In the C. W. B. M. period we had special treats in the addresses of Mrs. J. E. McDaniel, of Newton, and Mrs. W. C. Payne, of Lawrence, and Miss Nora Siler, missionary in Porto Rico. The junior period was opened by prayer by Grandma Curry, of Parsons, who is 96 years old, and followed by a program by the children, thus combining childhood and age in the service of him who loves all alike.

DeLoss Smith had charge of the music, which is all we need to say on that subject. There were 267 enrolled delegates and that with the great church at Parsons made a great convention. The Parsons C. W. B. M. auxiliary referred to as the Kansas wonder, it having 165 members.

Wisconsin Convention.

The churches of the state met in their annual missionary convention at Ladysmith, September 20-23. Brother Thurman, our president, owing to the serious illness of his mother-in-law and sister was unable to be with us. C. W. Dean, of Grand Rapids, acted as chairman. Themes for discussion were well chosen and the speakers were of the best. Mrs. Mettie Monroe presided during the C. W. B. M. sessions. These were made interesting by the presence of Mrs. Louise Kelly, Emporia, Kan., national organizer and Miss Boyd of India. G. W. Muckley, Stephen J. Corey and J. H. Mohorter, each representing their respective boards, were with us at one or more of our sessions and gave us inspiring addresses. Especial mention should be made of the scholarly paper read by Chas. W. Dean on "The Present Status of Christian Union." So worthy was the paper that it was recommended by the convention that it should appear in print. Music by Mrs. Chas. W. Dean, of Oakland, Cal., added to the pleasure of the convention. Brother Street, of Eureka College, led in song. One was impressed with the Christian fellowship made manifest during the convention not only among our brethren, but with the other churches of Ladysmith. This fellowship is largely due to the Christian character and liberal mind of Brother Barstow. Reports from the mission churches show a steady growth, and with Brother Barstow in the field as state evangelist and Bro. C. W. Dean as our state secretary, we see no reason why we can not achieve greater success in the year to come. The Ladysmith people gave us a cordial entertainment and the memory of their hospitality will long remain as will the spiritual unlift we each received.

Ohio.

H. M. Garn has offered his resignation at Lakewood and will seek knowledge and culture for a year at least in Chicago University. Lakewood has recently sold the old church house and lot and is now building a new house further east. They already have an eye on a successor to Brother Garn.——C. C. Cunningham has been holding a good meeting with his congregation at Garrettsville, assisted by E. T. Robinson as song leader. The word "Disciple" has recently been chiseled off of the meeting house at Garrettsville and it is now a plain Church of Christ. Good. Let others do likewise.——Bellaire is to be congratulated on securing the services of W. D. Vanvoorhis. He is of the salt of the earth and Mrs. Vanvoorhis is a fine worker and brilliant writer. We hope this union will be lasting and very fruitful.——F. M. Green celebrated his 70th birthday September 28. He has been in public service for 52 years and is as vigorous as ever, and preaches almost every Sunday. He has recently been elected a member of the American Academy of Political and Social Science of Philadelphia. The Ohio letter extends congratulations to Brother Green on his "three score and ten" and also the honor that has come to him. ——L. O. Newcomer is welcomed to Ohio as bishop at Mt. Vernon. He has accepted a call from this excellent church and begun his ministry. May it, too, be long and prosperous.——E. B. Bagby begins his labors at Franklin Circle, Cleveland, Sunday, October 7. They will have a rally day on that date and are working for 500 in the Bible school. A most cordial welcome, Brother Bagby, for all the "Buckeyes." The Cleveland preachers' meetings for the year began September 24 with "vacation experiences." The meeting was well attended and very interesting.——The cornerstone of the new house of worship at Coshocton was laid September 30. Pastor Johnson is leading with a steady but sure hand at Coshocton and the result will be a splendid, substantial church. Secretary Bartlett is still touring the state in the interest of Ohio missions. Lowe, Sala, Shelborne, Mansel, et al., have been lending a hand in the speech-making. But after all remember that November 4 is the judgment day. Let all the enthusiasm be crystallized on that day in dollars and dimes.——The Ohio scribe has been at North Royalton for three weeks in a very interesting meeting. This church is 77 years old. It is a country church but an exceedingly good one as country churches go in these days. The membership is about 100 and they are of the purest blood of Western Reserve Yankee extraction. If you want to live on the fat of the land, hold a meeting in the country in September! It has been a rare treat to be here. The church is in fine condition and going ahead under the leadership of Bro. Chas. Ford, who is loved by everybody in and out of the church. He has done an excellent year's work with this people. Over half of this township is owned by Bohemians. They are good farmers, too. The American born and reared are excellent citizens. The name of Christ has been confessed in this meeting by Bohemian lips. We are looking for others. The scenery hereabouts is superb. The very point where I am now writing is next to the highest in Ohio. A geological survey tablet is in the walls of this meeting house that says I am now 1238 feet above the sea. Two books have greatly interested me while here. I am a little behind hand in "Religions of Authority" by Sabatier, but that does not lessen my delight in it and profit accruing therefrom. Get this book if you have not yet read it. Also I have been reading a new book of this year by D. W. Forrest on "The Authority of Christ." This book is published by T. and T. Clark of London, but can now be had from The Christian Publishing Company of St. Louis at $2. It is a great book. No book of the year will surpass it. You see I am storing up on the question of authority. It is always well to know "where we are at." C. A. Freer.

Cozy Homes.

The discovery of a new wick principle—so effective and yet so simple that it's a wonder no one thought of it before—has so revolutionized the manufacture of oil heaters and lamps that explosions, smoke and smell, caused by imperfect wick arrangement, may safely be regarded as things of the past.

This new wick attachment is to be found on the Perfection Oil Heater. Interesting tests show that, although the heater gives intense heat, the wick can not be turned on too high or too low—absolute safety thus being assured. One other feature which is worthy of mention is the smokeless device which prevents all smoke and odor. The portability of the heater also commends it for general household use. Heater is very light and can be easily carried about. Its simple operation, usefulness in heating water and warming cold rooms make it a most handy and useful article in any home. This heater is so far superior to other oil heaters, and is of such fair price that its universal adoption is but a matter of time.

The Rayo Lamp, which is made by the manufacturers of the Perfection Oil Heater, is without doubt the best lamp for all-round household use. Is equipped with the latest improved burner, and gives a bright, steady light at small cost. Suitable for any room, whether library, dining-room, parlor, or bed-room.

The Perfection Oil Heater and the Rayo Lamp form a combination that for real home comfort can not be equalled. When consideration is taken of the simple operation of both heater and lamp, their absolute safety, the intense heat generated by the one, and the bright and steady light given by the other—all without smoke or smell—their value in any home, large or small, can be somewhat appreciated. Sold by all good dealers.

Two interesting conventions have recently been attended by your scribe at the First Mexican Christian Church Convention held in Monterey. The attendance was good and the spirit was Christian. The addresses were of a high grade and manifested a grasp of the problems before the Mexican missionaries and a disposition toward a united effort that was refreshing. Father Westrup who has been working and praying for such a day as this for many years was delighted. His reminiscenses if he could be persuaded to commit them to writing would be read with deep interest and should be preserved as a most interesting chapter in the history of Mexico Missions. We had a delightful welcome from our missionaries and it was my privilege to deliver four addresses. Mr. Enrique Westrup was my interpreter and it is said that he did his work well though it was amusing when he translated "visionary" by "crazy" in the following sentence: "Some people think me visionary." I was indulging in what my friends call a characteristic prophecy, about the future of the work in Mexico. We have the Mexican Christian Institute, with some 400 pupils with Jasper T. Moses at its head, who seems to be the right man in the right place. He has a capable and devoted corps of teachers. The evangelistic work is conducted with zeal and prudence by Brother Inman and his helpers. Four out stations are maintained in Monterey, besides the missions at Saltillo, Fuentes and other points. We have also in Texas four Mexican missions conducted under the direction of our state board. We are doing both native and foreign mission work in Texas and would be glad to double the home and foreign mission spirit in Texas and multiply both by a larger liberality and put the sum into our November offering for state missions. According to the title, "The Twenty-fourth Annual Texas Christian Missionary Convention," on the program, four years before the white Disciples were organized for Texas mission work, the negro Disciples were holding state conventions. There are probably 15,000 of the negro Disciples in Texas. Not far from 200 were present at Dangerfield where the convention was held. There seemed to be a single purpose that of "saving and developing in the Christian life our people." J. B. Lehman, of the Southern Christian Institute of Edwards, Miss., was present and gave daily Bible lessons which were greatly appreciated. Brother Lehman is well equipped for the great and good work which he is doing. The Christian Industrial school is destined to be a factor in the solution of the "race problem." The addresses and spirit of this convention showed commendable progress and most earnest devotion to the work of giving to the negroes of Texas the Christianity of the New Testament.

The First Conference of the Mexican Mission.

We have just held in Monterey what to us on the field has been a wonderful gathering. Not that large delegations came, but for a week the mission force in Monterey, along with a good part of the church of the same city, and representatives from our churches at Saltillo, Fuente, Sabinas, and Las Esperanzas met together four times daily to study about things of the Kingdom and means of more swiftly causing it to come upon the whole earth. The plan of the conference was to make it about half way between a convention and a school of methods. An early morning devotional meeting was held at 6 o'clock every day, at 9 and at 3, in one of the class rooms of the school; with note books and pencils, we studied practical methods of work. At night a popular meeting, with special music and a soul-stirring address, was held in the chapel. The motto of the week was "To get God's man in God's place, doing God's work, in God's way, for God's glory." Each day had its special theme. Monday night the delegates told why they had come. Tuesday the theme was "The Church in History;" Wednesday, "The Church at Work—Her Ministers;" Thursday, "Her Auxiliaries;" Friday, "Her Organization and Problems;" "Saturday, "Our Aim—Mexico for Christ." The two chief instructors were J. C. Mason from Texas, who gave us most helpful addresses on such themes as "Christian Union," "Our Position," "How to deliver Sermons," "Pastoral Work," "Church Organization," and E. M. Sein, the National Secretary of the Mexican Sunday-school Association, who was a power with his messages, not only on his special work but also in such discourses as those he gave on "The Preparation of Sermons," "The Influencing of Young Men for the Ministry," and "Not a Drone in the Hive."——The early morning quiet hours were among the most helpful meetings. The Mexican Christians know how to pray and are not ashamed to do so in public. The closing meeting was one of consecration, and it consisted almost entirely of prayer. There were few dry eyes in the audience at its close. On another morning, Brother Jimenez, pastor at Sabinas, gave us a talk on "The Holy Spirit's Guidance," which I never heard surpassed in one of our National Endeavor Conventions.——The reports from the field showed a remarkable progress; from a local work in Monterey and Saltillo, we have grown to be a recognized power in the evangelization of northern Mexico. Fourteen months ago we had three preaching points in Mexico. Now we have twenty, six of which are organized congregations. There have been eighty-nine baptisms during the year. Not counting the contributions of the American congregation, there has been raised on the field over $600 gold, six times what it was last year. The publication of Brother Wharton's tract in Spanish has contributed in no small degree to this. Five converts to the tithe system were made at the conference.——The other pastors of the city attended the sessions as regularly as did our own delegates, and throughout the week the spirit of union was notable. Thursday noon the city pastors and visiting preachers were invited to a dinner given in the private dining room of the Iturbide Hotel, by a layman member of the Presbyterian church. The delegates were also entertained at dinner by Brother Moses, and by one of our Mexican members. Altogether the spirit of fellowship, enthusiasm, and consecration, that ruled at all times gives us great hope for our work of making the saving health of God known to this benighted land. And for this encouragement we thank our God. For the deeper we go into our problem, the more difficult we perceive it to be.

RIBBED=FLEECE UNDERWEAR
A New Idea in Underwear Attended by Tremendous Success.

This new underwear, known as Vellastic Utica Ribbed Fleece Underwear, was first put upon the market two years ago. The hygienic value and comfort-giving properties of this new weave in under garments have made such a strong appeal to the public that the mills can hardly keep up with the demand.

Vellastic Underwear is a ribbed fabric with fleece lining. This means the warmth, comfort and softness of a fleece-lined garment, with the elacticity of a ribbed garment.

Vellastic Utica Ribbed Fleece Underwear always retains its shape and elasticity in washing, and the fleece its downy softness.

Another very attractive feature of this new underwear is its low price. Its extreme softness and pliability commend it to those who are accustomed to garments of finest texture.

Men's and women's garments, at 50c each; Ladies' union Suits, $1.00; children's sizes in union suits, 50c; in two piece suits, 25c the garment

The trade mark, Vellastic Utica Ribbed-Fleece, is sewed on every garment. If not at your dealer's, write us, giving his name. Booklet and sample of fabric free.

Are You DEAF?

I was deaf myself for 25 years. I perfected and patented a small, invisible ear drum in order to help my own hearing. It is called "The Way Ear Drum," and by the use of these drums I can NOW HEAR WHISPERS. I want all deaf people to write me. I do not claim to "cure" all cases of deafness, neither can I benefit those who were born deaf. But I CAN HELP 90 per cent of those whose hearing is defective.

Won't you take the trouble to write and find out all about me and my invention. Tell me the cause of your deafness. Geo. P. Way, 1011 Majestic Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

Scoville's Union Meeting.

The Scoville union revival in Monroe, Wis., came to a close on September 10. A greater victory was never won against conditions apparently insurmountable. I do not say that there are not other evangelists who are just as consecrated and able as Scoville, but I doubt if there can be found another man possessing the peculiar personal qualities to carry by storm a position that to all appearances seemed invulnerable. From a spiritual standpoint Monroe has for many years been completely overwhelmed with worldliness. The influence of twenty-six saloons and a brewery, to a great extent, has dominated the city. Open violation of both local and state laws has not only been tolerated, but approved by the majority of the city council.

Five churches united in the movement as follows: Methodist, United Brethren, English Lutheran, German Evangelical and the Union Church in Christ. The Armory, seating about 1,500 people, was hired for four weeks. Many church people shook their heads and said, "What folly; when one of the churches would accommodate all that would attend a religious meeting." Others said, "You can't get sixty converts in six months."

Brother Scoville and De Loss Smith came and opened a campaign that, at the last was reinforced by Brother and Sister Kendall. For about a week Scoville preached the straight gospel without giving an invitation, and then he opened the door and fifty-one souls responded. The meetings continued for five weeks, at the end of which time four hundred and sixty-one souls had stepped out for Christ, and the city and the adjacent country for miles had received a spiritual uplift that will bless for ages to come. The free will offerings at the close was a telling mark of the deep interest of the people. It goes without saying that the hosts of sin, including the saloons, are furious.

We thank God, and rejoice that he sent us Charles Reign Scoville, and his consecrated helpers, De Loss Smith and the Kendalls. May the blessings of God be with them wherever they may go, in the great battle for the establishment of his kingdom.

J. H. Berkey,
Pastor "Union Church in Christ."

From the Evangelist.

I have received many letters from nearly all directions inquiring as to my opinion of the union meetings, and these have come from both evangelists and pastors, and I wish to add a word to the report of Brother Berkey, who is a pastor of the Union Church of Christ at Monroe, and through whom I was invited to conduct the union meetings in that city.

Personally, I feel that I have verified the passage of Scripture, "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." If there is any town of four thousand inhabitants this side of hell that needed the gospel any worse than Monroe, I have never seen it. I am sure my brethren will not misunderstand me. I am not in the habit of speaking of cities in this way, as you all well know.

Brother Berkey's report names the five churches united in the meeting. It would be well to say two of these churches were very small, and the combined membership of the five would not give as many Christians as I have had in one single congregation of our own brotherhood. Also the churches of Monroe were weak. This victory gained through union makes me more enthusiastic and to desire Christian union more than ever before. I have had a taste. I have seen the arm of the Lord upraised by the united churches and even if those forces appeared to be few in number, we found that in union there was strength.

If the churches of America were united, all the ends of the earth would be praising God in this generation; the union of all the Christian forces of the city, together with consecrated earnestness of the pastors united in one purpose; the fact that all the Christian merchants, and all the country people, bankers and business men, and Christian clerks, and stenographers, and greater still the papers backing these meetings, means more than these lines can tell.

Somebody is saying, "What about the preaching?" I am sorry somebody else did not write about this, but since they did not, I will say that I have preached many of the very same sermons; in fact, nearly all that I have preached in the meetings held for our home churches and that without changing them in the least. Scripture lessons on the divine name, Christian union, faith, confession, repentance, conversion, prayer and the Holy Spirit, were read continuously, and no one found any fault whatever. The good confession was taken every night, and the only difference was the fact that there was no baptistry, and no baptizing at the close of each service; otherwise, anybody dropping into the meeting could not have told the difference between that union meeting and a meeting held at the Church of Christ anywhere.

I was there to receive as well as to give. I have never been supported better by our own pastors than I was by several of the pastors of denominational churches. The prayer-meetings which were begun by Brother Berkey in private homes and carried on, and on, and on until it spread to other churches, should be a lesson and a living example to our brethren as well.

Whenever, as a people, we reach the place when we can feel that it is more blessed to give than to receive, and give in the spirit of blessing, that man or that church will be blessed in his deeds. Whenever that man or church gets to the place when he can look on the things of others and not on the things of himself; when he sees things from the other man's standpoint, and sees the spirit in which that man or church lives and loves and works, I am sure that man and that church will cry out "Behold, how blessed it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." I do not mean to sanction division, far from that; but I do mean to recognize all that is good within the denominations, and to thank God for consecration of the many, and in recognizing that and making prominent the things wherein we do agree, until we shall actually fall in love with each other. The things in which we disagree will then appear to be small grievances, and the love of Christ will constrain us and we will lay aside every weight and the sin that so easily besets us, and we will run with patience, the race that is set for us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, and not looking to the great reformists or creed differences.

Chas. Reign Scoville.

THE PARABLE OF THE TALENTS.

—Matt. 25:14-30.

Memory verse, 21.

Golden Text.—A faithful man shall abound with blessings.—Prov. 28:20.

Jesus is continuing the discourse about the end of the world, the second coming of Christ, the final judgment and the end of the world. The time is probably late on Tuesday of Passion week. The time of his departure is at hand. The parable of the man leaving his servants and going into a far country gains force when we remember that it was spoken when Jesus was about to leave his disciples, entrusting to them a certain message and certain powers, and that he was urging them to make good use of these powers in view of his certain return.

The twelve—or the eleven who were faithful—made industrious use of the talents which their lord left with them. Some apparently had a greater talent than others but the work of each was in proportion to his ability and the total result was that the Gospel was preached to the ends of the Roman empire in little more than a generation. They have their reward.

But the parable was not alone to the twelve. It teaches that all possession is stewardship; that opportunity means responsibility; and that, though the reckoning may be long uncalled for, the account which every man owes to his maker, is not cancelled.

The self-made man is one of the chief glories of America. But there are no self-made men. Men are born into a world enriched with all the thoughts, the discoveries, the achievements of the past. These are indispensable to the life of civilized man. They are our inheritance as truly as the million-dollar legacy may be an inheritance of the rich man's son. Moreover, man is born with certain senses, certain physical and mental capacities which are the capital with which he begins business and without which he could not begin it. Let us be very humble, and very careful how we boast of our independence. We are as workmen who have received their tools and their raw materials as a loan, or have bought them on credit. What we make may reflect credit upon our industry and skill and may earn the Master's praise, but it is not ours to use without regard to our first indebtedness.

To owe service to God is to owe service to all his children. For Paul, the term "steward" seemed too honorable. He said: "I am the bond-servant of Jesus Christ," and it was because of that fact that he was also ready to say, "I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the barbarians."

FAITHFULNESS. Luke 16:10; 1 Cor. 4:1-5; Rev. 2:10.

(Honorary Members' Service.)

DAILY READINGS.

M.	Faithful in All Things.	Luke 16-10.
T.	Faithfulness in Practice.	Titus 2:1-15.
W.	Faithfulness Against Error.	Jude 1:4-22.
T.	Faithful Thessalonians.	1 Thess. 1:1-10.
F.	Faithful Colossians.	Col. 1:1-8.
S.	Paul's Faithfulness.	Acts 20:18-21.
S.	Reward of Faithfulness.	Rev. 2-10.

Faith is that by which we look up; by hope we reach up; by love we climb up.

The cruelest of persecutors never devised afflictions harder to bear than are the natural results of sin. Neither have philanthropists nor appreciative kings nor grateful republics compounded compensations and rewards so rich and delectable as the fruitage of a life of faithfulness toward God and man.

Christ knows the value of wealth to the establishment of the Kingdom, and Barnabas was called; he appreciates learning and Paul became an apostle; impulsiveness has important uses, and Peter was among the chosen three; affection is an attribute he has always prized and he leaned upon John's bosom, and yet we must remember to but one he said, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

With many faith is become a term almost meaningless. That its scope is high as the heavens and wide as the eternities, and that its tensile strength is greater than that of steel is beyond their comprehension and they fail to use this faculty for self-ennoblement and the conquest of the future. Faith is a faculty of the soul we may each develop till we can hear and see and know and utilize countless realities to us now as though they were not.

"All ages dead and splendid,
All masters that are past,
All hero figures vast—
By hate and scorn attended,
By Death and Time defended—
As with a bugle blast
Cry out to us, 'Stand fast!'
All's well when all is ended!

Across the gulf of ages
We send our answering hail:
"O poets, heroes, sages,
We lift to you a beaker
Filled to the very brim;
The Lord's cause is no weaker
Than when you died for Him;
Though long the battle rages
The victory shall not fail—
Right shall at last prevail!"

Faith is chiefly a mental state. It is the effect of intellectual conviction, the result of a succession of judgments. Faithfulness is a life in harmony with our convictions. We have faith that God is and that he is a rewarder of righteousness and yet we live as if there were no God and judgment. That is an unfaithful life. We know that through self-sacrifice and love and service and holiness we are to reach our highest destiny. When we practice thus we are faithful; at other times disloyal to ourselves and God.

Though man be unfaithful God never is. He faithfully administers to every transgresssion its just recompense of reward that no one be deluded into the folly of sin through the belief that he might escape the penalties of sin. The light of his countenance unceasingly shines upon all save those who turn their backs upon him. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins. If we cast our burdens upon him, he never fails to sustain us. Though the world soon forget us when we are buried out of its sight he will be faithful to his promises to awaken us out of sleep, give to us new and celestial bodies, and crown us with glory and immortality in heaven.

WHAT THE PUBLISHERS SAY.

A strong and original plea for the Simple Religion that is unencumbered by the artificiality of man-made creeds and denominational divisions, which simply adopts Christ and His teachings in their original clearness, comprehensiveness, and purity.

For the Clergyman, a book full of stimulating and suggestive thought on the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. The reasoning is clear, logical, forceful; the whole work is intensely Biblical, and reverently loyal to Christian doctrine throughout; a help and strength to every minister.

For the Layman, a book of striking, original thought on the most vital and perplexing subject before the religious thinkers of the present generation. A book with the charm of simple fact and clear statement written by a practical man of wide commercial and political experience.

WHAT INDIVIDUALS SAY.

Heaven-Sent Message to the Churches

"The author has placed the world's religions before us as so many pebbles, and after showing the utter imbecility of all save one he takes up the pearl of great price and with a stroke recounts the triumphs of Christ and the cross through His church. Any Christian living a thousand miles from any church could take this book and with its description of the church and its references to the Bible organize the Church of Christ and invite men of any faith to meet in Him. It is a timely volume. May the dear Lord bless the Layman and his heaven-sent message to the churches."—Charles Reign Scoville, A. M., LL. D., Evangelist, Chicago, Ill.

This is a profoundly interesting, enlightening, and stimulating work.—Judge Frederick A. Henry, Cleveland, Ohio.

"The philosophy, history, and doctrine of the Remedial Scheme' in its complete evolution are stated in clear, good English; while parts of this telling rise to good English; while parts of this telling rise to real eloquence."—William Harrison Graham, Member of Congress, Allegheny, Pennsylvania.

The Church of Christ, by a layman, contains a very clear statement on the Bible, which every teacher and trainer of the young and others should * * * consider. * * * In a simple and forceful way he unfolds the great truths of the Sacred Volume. R. S. Latimer, President Western Pennsylvania Christian Missionary Society, Pittsburg, Pa.

"It is the greatest religious book so far published in the twentieth century."—M. M. Cochran, Attorney at Law, Uniontown, Pa.

All in All to Me It Is a Great Book

"'The Church of Christ' is like a pearl of great price in a setting of gold. We have nothing in our literature in my judgment at all comparable to it. For a clear, logical, comprehensive, and Scriptural exposition of the New Testament revelation of the origin, principles, purposes, and organization of the Church of Christ as God's agency in this world for the redemption of lost men it fills a place peculiarly its own and from which, in my judgment, it will not soon be removed. . . . It is timely. It is a book greatly needed at this particular juncture when the truly good and religious people of all denominations seem to be feeling darkly for some solid foundation upon which to rebuild a united church; and if it can secure anything like the circulation its worth merits it will certainly prove a large factor in bringing about the fulfilment of the Savior's prayer and the desire of all truly pious hearts. The book is first-class literature, lofty in thought, pure and elegant in diction, attractive in style, comprehensive in range, with brevity of statement, punctuated with eloquent perorations and beautiful climaxes. It commands the attention of the thoughtful reader from chapter first to the finish. All in all to me it is a great book."—Elder William F. Cowden, Tacoma, Washington. .. ..

"This book is a work of great merit, and I trust it may be circulated by the millions."—A. McLean, President Foreign Christian Missionary Society, Cincinnati, Ohio.

"The book is delightful reading. It is on my study table side by side with the Bible."—Rev. S. H. Perdee, Randall, N. Y.

WORDS OF PRAISE FROM FAR-OFF COUNTRIES.

Can Scarcely Be Excelled

"I have read with deep interest 'The Church of Christ.' The author's exegesis is remarkably clear and satisfactory. Some passages can scarcely be excelled for strength and beauty by any in the English language."—J. M. W. Farnham, D. D., Corresponding Secretary of the Chinese Tract Society, Shanghai, China.

"I have read 'The Church of Christ' with pleasure and profit. I consider it a book with a great living message to the divided Church of Christ. What the author has said is both logical and true. I believe this book will prove to be a great factor in helping to simplify and unify the faith and practice of the church. Let all who read this book teach, pray, and work for the simplicity and unity of the Christian family and then the Kingdom shall come with power. May the Great Head of the Church speed and bless the message in this book."—J. A. Simpson, Missionary to Africa, Presiding Elder M. E. Church, Greenville, Linoe Liberia, Africa.

"I consider his account of the early church to be careful and independent."—Prof. Marcus Dods, Edinburgh, Scotland.

The book is precisely what is needed at the present juncture, not only under the Stars and Stripes, but away here in the land of 'The Golden Fleece,' under the Southern Cross. It is the finest compendium of the matters relating to Salvation, both on its Godward and manward sides, that we have seen.—Charles Watt, Auckland, New Zealand.

"There is a great deal of material that commands serious thought and attention, and I trust that it will have a wide circulation. It cannot fail to do good."—Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, D. D., F. R. G. S., Founder and Director of East London Institution of Home and Foreign Missions, London, Eng.

A Pleasant Surprise and Promiseful Prophecy

"That 'A Layman' should choose such a theme and handle it so well is a pleasant surprise and promiseful prophecy. I am glad the book has been written and published. It is attractively printed, highly readable, and will turn the attention of many again to the original sources of evangelistic endeavor."—W. W. Coebrane, Asipaw, N. Shan States, Burma.

WHAT THE RELIGIOUS PAPERS SAY.

"Theologically and ecclesiastically this book is the book of the twentieth century, so far. It will take rank with 'Ecce Homo' and 'Ecce Deus' as an epoch-maker. It is written by a cultured and constructive mind, is free from cant, provincialism, and iconoclasticism. It is an instruction—it is an inspiration. . . . The pulpit has lectured the pew long enough, now let us hear from the pew. It is a treat for the pulpit to hear from such a source in such a way, and no less for the fellow pew-holders."—Claris Yuell in "The Christian Standard," Cincinnati, Ohio.

"From a literary standpoint the book is a gem. . . . It is really a remarkable book."—"Christian Union," Des Moines, Iowa.

"We trust this book may find a wide circulation."—"Missionary Tidings," Indianapolis, Ind.

Succinct and Satisfying

"The book covers a wide scope. It is written in a very succinct and satisfactory style. An impartial and serious examination of this volume will aid in the solution of the most trying and tremendous problems which confront our modern church."—F. D. Power in the "Christian-Evangelist," St. Louis, Mo.

Eloquence Has Never Been Surpassed

" . . . Divine things have never been handled with a more reverent touch. . . . There is not a suggestion of the combative spirit, or of what Longfellow has well called 'the struggle for triumph more than truth.' . . . The closing chapter is one whose eloquence has never been surpassed."—"The Christian Worker," Pittsburg, Pa.

The Work of a Genius

"It is the work of a layman who is certainly a man of large culture and genius and for the present is anonymous."—"The Christian Advocate," St. Louis, Mo.

Based on the Bible

"The warp and woof of the whole argument are drawn from the Bible liberally quoted."—"Outlook," New York city.

A Clear Defense of Christianity

" . . . This book is a clear defense of the history and fundamental doctrines of Christianity. . . . There is a very strong tendency on the part of many good people to discard all church organizations, and this book, while faithfully enforcing fundamental truth, will strongly emphasize that trend." Baltimore "Methodist," Baltimore, Md.

AN IMPERFECT CHURCH.

—Rev. 2:12-17.

"My soul, be on thy guard;
Ten thousand foes arise;
The hosts of sin are pressing hard
To draw thee from the skies.

"O, watch, and fight, and pray;
The battle ne'er give o'er!
Renew it boldly every day,
And help Divine implore."

Among the Jews the maxim was current that, where the Word of God is not studied, there Satan has his seat. Among the shortcomings of that ancient church was one sin of which we are all guilty who neglect the study of the book. Dwight L. Moody once said, "Had I devoted part of the time I have given to prayer to the study of the Bible I would be a better man."

It is possible for one to lash himself fast to the throne even if he is near where Satan's seat is. One may there exemplify a life beautiful as the lily that rises in loveliness above the black swamp mud, but it is not a place of residence to be commended. One would better surrender half his living than to abide in the vicinity of iniquities; it would be better to lose eyesight than to have it and with it read Satan's writings. If near Satan's seat in residence, in reading, musing, or aspiration, move out, move up, escape, to the heights, be free!

Balaam stands for compromise between Israel and surrounding heathen tribes. That Balaam sentiment was the destruction of Pergamos and is a peril to-day. In a sense we would be God's "peculiar people," but we do not care to be so peculiar as to attract attention. We wish to be good—not too good but just good enough to escape being under condemnation. But when we prize gold more than sacred knowledge, and secular society more than the assemblies of the saints we are so compromising with idolatry as to merit the seal of Balaam on our brows.

It is said friends in olden times would exchange vows of perpetual hospitality and fellowship and a token of the compact was their names written in durable stones and then sawn asunder in such form that each had half of both autographs. Their descendants would receive each other with unreserved hospitality whenever the corresponding parts of the stone could be produced. This was a great boon to them, if misfortune should come to one party or his descendants. The Savior promises the half stone "to him that overcometh." The hospitality accorded the possessor will be such as we may expect the king of heaven to give his loyal brethren.

Holding fast the name of the Lord and refusing to deny the faith in former times was almost inevitably accompanied by martyrdom. "Art thou a Christian?" the Roman inquisitor asked the early disciples. If the answer was "Christianus sum"—I am a Christian—they were hurried to the amphitheater or the flames. The Mahometan zealots cried, "Who says God has an equal in a Son or any other, let him die," and in their fury against those having faith in Jesus they threatened the extermination of Christianity in Asia and Africa. In the face of our lesser perils—rarely greater than a sneer—let us keep the faith and honor the name of our Savior.

It may be an open question whether the church at Pergamos is being reproved by the Spirit for retaining in its membership those holding to the doctrine of Balaam notwithstanding its immorality, or for the church's failure to convert them from their errors of faith and practice. Paul had already written, "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us." The Pergamites were also familiar with "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." One thing very apparent is that heresy of life or doctrine is not to be ignored by the churches. Transgressors are to be redeemed or removed.

son, Dr. T. M. Henley, has four daughters living. He married Miss P. B. Bagby, who survives him, and his children were Roberta, Maria Louise, Thomasina and Caroline, all of whom were members of my first church in Virginia, and later of the Vermont Avenue Church, Washington.

Two of Mr. Campbell's daughters by the first marriage became wives of W. K Pendleton. The beloved "Miss Cammie," professor of modern languages in Bethany College, is the daughter of Lavinia, and William Campbell Pendleton of Warren, O., is the son of Clarinda. He married the daughter of the late Harmon Austin, of blessed memory, and has several children. Miss Cammie was named Alexandria Campbellina, after her grandfather. She has been closer perhaps to his great work at Bethany than any one of his descendants. She has given her life unreservedly to its interests. The family of the great reformer, however, are all identified with the cause for which he gave himself.

October.

Blue are the skies these fair October days,
Bright as Spring flowers are all the woodland ways,
Their gala robes glow in the unclouded sun.
Purple and gold, crimson and brown and dun.

Ah, how the passing seasons come and go!
Springtime and summer, autumn, winter's snow.
Each brings its pleasures, yet no joy I trace
Like the glad smile on fair October's face.

She leads us back with her to other days.
We walk once more in memory's gladsome ways.
And smiles that made the hours so golden bright
Come back again with all their olden light.

Dear friends, departed to the other shore,
Come in her light to walk with us once more.
And sorrows, seen through memory's sunlight haze
But quicken faith and hope, these autumn days.

PART III.

CHAPTER XV.

After Brother Bellfield had opened the front door he stood blinking at Rhoda and Raymund, so taken by surprise—for Mr. Willby had not told him a word about the letter they had written from St. Louis, or about his telegram to them—that he did not know the twins, and hardly knew himself. He was breathing heavy from his exertion of sweeping, and as he gasped confusedly, "Haven't I seen you before?" the dust which was rolling toward the porch to get out of the hall, made him sneeze. The next moment he exclaimed, "It's Rhoda Revore! It's Raymund! Bless your hearts, children! where have you come from?" And without the least ceremony he took Rhoda in his arms; then, looking over her shoulder at her brother, he shouted delightedly, "Your turn'll come in a minute, boy." So he kissed Raymund, too; and Mr. Willby was so excited over the success of his surprise that he cried in ecstasy, "Brother Bellfield, how old are you?" If Brother Bellfield heard he had no time to answer, for Rhoda exclaimed, "I saw you sweeping, Brother Bellfield. Now, where is that broom and apron? I'm going to finish it myself!"

"You're going to do nothing of the kind!" returned the minister, grasping an arm of each of the twins. "You're going to come into the parlor and tell me all about yourselves." He raised his voice—"Wife! come down! company!" Then he dragged the young people into the parlor.

"This is the cause of it all," said Mr. Willby, holding up the faded old green umbrella. "It made me acquainted with Raymund and Rhoda, and I spent a long time with them, finding out everything about their lives; and they told me about Brother Bellfield. Everything was Brother Bellfield this, and Brother Bellfield that. When I came home I said to my wife that the man who took in orphans when his own house was overrunning with people was the preacher for me; so I had him called here to Frog Bend. They were willing to let him go at Crawley, for he'd been there three years, and you take a little Missouri town—it don't take longer than that for it to get sick and tired of any preacher that ever preached. How old are you, Brother Bellfield?"

"I'm over fifty," said the minister; "but here's wife," he added with relief as at that moment his hard-worked delicate little wife entered. She was flushed from recent exercise, but cordial. Raymund asked about Jack, and was informed that the youngest son had started to the state university.

"And Mr. Morton?" asked Rhoda, remembering the heart-broken romanticist and his autumn confidences about sweetheart Lily.

"He's with us now," said Brother Bellfield. "Morton's married and has two of the finest babies you ever saw. He married soon after you left us, Rhoda."

"Did he marry a young lady named Lily?" inquired Rhoda eagerly.

"Lily?" asked the minister. No, her name is Jane. She was a Butts; Jane Butts was her name. They are staying with us now. Morton is looking about for some kind of business to go into. He is thinking a little of the real estate business. He would like to boom Frog Bend and make it a shipping point, and have the boats land here regularly. The river is quite navigable."

This reminded Rhoda of the oldest son, and she asked about Mr. Jasper and his three children.

"There are five now," said Brother Bellfield. "Well, Jasper is doing fairly well—fairly well. They have moved to Oklahoma to see how they like it, but from the wife's letters, I think they will be back soon. They don't like Oklahoma."

"Did Mr. Jasper ever find any business to go into?' 'asked Raymund, wishing to appear interested; he had been on the eve of remarking that perhaps Mrs. Jasper Bellfield did not like Oklahoma climate, but decided upon his question.

"Well, no," said Brother Bellfield, a little wearily, "I can't say that he has, Raymund; at least, nothing congenial. He has tried several things, but they were not suitable. He is merely looking about down there, as Morton is up here."

Everybody seemed a little depressed at this point, and Rhoda asked about the invalid sister of the minister. "She's doing fine," said the minister, brightening up. "She's just as eager as ever to read aloud the pieces she finds in the papers and magazines. You are just the thing for her, Rhoda! Unfortunately, though, I have another plan for you." He turned to Mr. Willby. "Remember that scholarship?"

"Of course," said Mr. Willby. "I knew as soon as I brought on these folks, you'd decide on Rhoda."

"Oh, what is it?" cried Rhoda, trembling with a hope she dared not utter.

"I have a scholarship to a school in Fulton," said Brother Bellfield, "and I'm going to give it to you, Rhoda, my child!"

"That's why I telegraphed to come at once," said Mr. Willby, triumphantly. "I knew he'd offer it to you, Rhoda, and I wanted to put you in the school as soon as the Christmas holidays are over."

"Oh, Brother Bellfield!" cried Rhoda, rushing at him.

"Board and all!" cried the minister, delightedly. "Board and all! And during the summers Willby and I will see that you get along; hey, Willby?"

"When Brother Bellfield told me he could keep a girl in school, I began looking about for a worthy victim," said Mr. Willby. "Just about that time here came a letter from Raymund. I said to my wife, 'Rhoda is the girl!' I didn't say a word to Brother Bellfield—did I?"

"Not a word!" cried the minister.

"I just sat down and telegraphed for you to come immediately. He didn't know you were coming—did you, Brother Bellfield?"

"Never dreamed of it!" returned the other.

"As for Raymund, here," said Mr. Willby, "he's to go to the university; he's to work his way through, and I'll see that he's kept above the water at the start. If he's any 'count—I think he is—he'll swim after he's been thrown into the water. Hey, Raymund?"

"It's glorious!" cried Raymund. "And I have some money of my own to start on; and now that Rhoda is to be taken care of, I can afford to spend it. Besides, Uncle William gave her something when he sent us away."

"Bless your hearts!" cried Brother Bellfield. "It seems that you are both money-holders! I expect you've got more than I have, right now." And he laughed heartily.

So Rhoda was sent to the Fulton school and Raymund went to the university at Columbia. Thanks to the dogged perseverance he had manifested in his solitary studies, he knew thoroughly what he knew at all, and he was able to pass the examinations, that stand like grim iron-heatred monsters between Outsiders and Freshmen. I wonder if you will think any less of Raymund when you learn how he "worked his way through"? He rented a larger room than those usually taken by the poor students, and he occupied it alone, instead of sharing the expenses with a schoolmate. A cheap calico curtain divided the room into two chambers. The one opening upon the hall was his renovating room. Here he received the garments of the young men and removed spots, patched and darned

QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS

BY S. D. GORDON

The author of "Quiet Talks on Prayer" (now in its 55th thousand), and "Quiet Talks on Power" (now in its 80th thousand).

Cloth, 12mo. 288 pages. Net 75c.

"QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS" is an attempt to group up in simplest Anglo-Saxon English the statements of the entire Bible regarding Jesus. The purpose is wholly practical, that one may get at a glance, for his own thought and heart, the swing of the Bible from end to end on its central theme. Mr. Gordon's life work has been leading up to the theme of this new book.

TOPICAL ARRANGEMENT

FIRST—The purpose of Jesus' coming; the plan of his coming; the tragic break that occurred in the plan; the surprises that worked out of that break
SECOND—The Person of Jesus from three points of view: the human; the divine; the winsomeness of his personality.
THIRD—The seven great outstanding experiences which reveal Jesus: the Jordan Baptism; the Wilderness Temptation; the Transfiguration as an emergency unusual; the Gethsemane struggle; the Victory of Calvary.
FOURTH—Study Notes. One of the most important features of the book, making it possible for the earnest reader to follow for himself Mr. Gordon's essential methods.

holes and "snags," pressed trousers, and sewed on buttons. He was among the first in his classes, but he realized from the beginning that it was not for him to strive for honors. That privilege was for those who could give all their time to study. With a difficult lesson but half-learned, many a time he laid aside his book to go to work at once upon a suit; and when the menial task was done, though it might be far into the night, the lesson would be taken up anew.

He was liked at the university. The teachers were proud of his industry and of his independence. So were the boys, in a way. Of course, he did not go with the fashionable set, or indeed, with any "set." He had no time. And, of course, the young fellows who brought him clothes to be renewed that they might attend balls and parties to which he was never invited, could not but in a sense look down upon him. If at times, they found him poring over his Greek, they were as liable to come upon him needle in hand, sewing away as if he had been a tailor from his earliest youth.

Three years passed by, and at nineteen Raymund graduated, without honors, but with great credit. During that time, Jack Bellfield had been his only intimate friend. Though Jack went with the "highest-toned" fellows, he was never ashamed of his friendship for Raymund, and was the means of getting the younger man all the trade he could handle. "You know," Jack would say to his chums, "Ray will drop all that when he's on his feet."

I wish I could tell you about Raymund's university days, and about Rhoda's experience at the young women's college in Fulton; but this story must really be finished before 1906 laps over into 1907, and the only way to finish it is to take up the twins in their nineteenth year, when both are done with school, and have not yet made up their minds about the future. There is one thing you must know about the school years. Raymund had not been at the university quite a year when he found that a change had come over Rhoda's letters. At first, the change was so gradual that he did not perceive it, and even later it was not very tangible; but he realized at last that she did not write as had been her wont. There was no more poetry in her letters, but that was not so much what he minded. They seemed to have lost their old affectionate ring. During the summer vacations they were in Frog Bend, and Raymund was able to pay for their board at Brother Bellfield's, and thus really be of service to the minister. The latter would not take the board until Raymund declared he would not stay upon other conditions; but the minister really needed the money, for one son or another was always with him, to say nothing of the son's relations—by marriage. Raymund was proud to find that he could make enough by tailoring to support not only himself, but Rhoda.

But Rhoda was indeed changed. Every summer when they met, the difference shocked him—it was a difference she sought to conceal. It appeared to him that she had ceased to care for him. She avoided being alone with him for any great length of time, and finding that she shrank from his impetuous kisses and embraces, he demanded an explanation, but Rhoda assured him with a face of distress that there was nothing to explain.

"Aren't you glad to see me?" he asked when she shrank from him on his return from graduation.

"Of course, I am glad, Raymund! What a question!" said Rhoda, turning red and pale.

"Then why don't you let a fellow kiss you?" he retorted, half displeased and deeply hurt.

"I just don't like to be kissed," said Rhoda, desperately.

"Oh, very well," said Raymund, turning away, stiffly. He would not let her see how the change in her manner had saddened his last year at the university, and how it now threw a heavy chill upon him. He was too proud to plead for the love that seemed gone. Could it be that his humble work with needle and thread and flatiron had lowered him in her esteem? Or was it that she had become acquainted with some young man who had taught her another kind of love? Surely, she had not begun to care for Jack Bellfield? Raymund was too proud to try to force Rhoda to reveal her secret, if she had a secret, or to try to coax back the affection his sister had always—until two years ago—lavishly bestowed upon him. It was strange to feel that now that he had graduated, that consummation, once so far ahead, and with such difficulty wrought, found him unhappy! He could not see Rhoda steal from the room at his approach, or feel her hand quickly withdrawn when it touched his, without experiencing a bitter pain. But he steeled himself, that she might not know how she was making him suffer, and he began to make plans for the future of both.

Of the Home Brand.

The hall-mark of exclusiveness just now is to be "home-made." The gown cost a pretty penny—what could you expect? It was all hand-work—home-made. You have to pay for that! Well, there are other things worth having of the home brand—boys and girls, for instance. The home-made girl, the boy that's mother-made—they have a look of distinction when you see them on the street, or anywhere. They are so good that the others already are beginning to look cheap and common, and some essay to pay the compliment of imitation. No course or curriculum ever laid out for boys and girls can equal the course that God laid out for them when he set them within the four walls of a home. It ought to be our wiser, older business to see that they are devoting themselves to it in all its "branches."—The Congregationalist.

A Noted Minister and Doctor of Atlanta, Ga., is Meeting with Wonderful Success.

Those who have long doubted whether there really is a permanent cure for catarrh will be glad to learn that a southern physician, Rev. J. W. Blosser, M. D., of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a method whereby catarrh can be cured to the very last symptom without regard to climate or condition. So that there may be no misgivings about it, he will send a free sample to any man or woman without expecting payment. The regular price of the remedy is $1.00 for a box containing one month's treatment.

The Doctor's remedy is radically different from all others, and the results he has achieved seem to mark a new era in the scientific cure of catarrh, foul breath, hawking and spitting, stopped-up feeling in nose and throat, coughing spells, difficult breathing, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis and the many other symptoms of a bad case of catarrh.

If you wish to see for yourself what this remarkable remedy will do, send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive the free package and an illustrated book.

An Old Poem Revised.

[The poem "Twenty Times A Day," which appeared in our issue last week was attributed wrongfully to W. E. Rambo. The following is Mr. Rambo's production.—EDITOR.]

"Twinkle, twinkle, little star,
How I wonder what you are,
Up above the world so high,
Like a diamond in the sky!"

"Twinkle, twinkle, little star,"
Science tells me what you are.
You're a planet, held in space
By Gravitation's mighty mace.

You're composed of mineral ore—
Dust of elements a score—
And you with a borrowed light
"Twinkle, twinkle all the night."

Or, perchance, you are a sun;
'Round you other planets run!
In your composition prove
By the fires that in you move.

This I know, and more beside,
Since the school has been my guide.
"Now that I'm a man," I say,
"Childish things are put away."

But even now, when twilight gray
Darkens at the closing day,
I look into the deepening sky
And watch the dome-lights multiply.

And see so much I do not know—
So little I have proved as so—
I cry with child-like awe once more
The mystery I felt of yore:

"Twinkle, twinkle, little star,
How I wonder what you are,
Up above the world so high,
Like a diamond in the sky!"

Alma, Neb. —W. E. RAMBO.

Zigzagging.

"The poor dog is tired out," said Mary, as the wagon drove into the yard and Towser, covered with the dust of the road, dropped lolling and panting upon the green grass.

"'Tain't the journey he had to take that's tired him," laughed the farmer.

"He's used himself up by zigzagging from one side of the road to the other and tendin' to everything that didn't concern him. He couldn't pass a gate without runnin' through to see what was on the other side, nor see a hen anywhere along the road without feelin' called on to chase her. Every dog that barked started him to barkin', and everything that moved took him out of his way to find out what it was and where it was goin'. No wonder he's tired! But you'll find plenty of human bein's that are travelin' their lives through in just that same way. They ain't satisfied with the bit of road that's marked out for their feet, but they trv to oversee all their neighbor's goin's and doin's, and take charge of no end of things that they can't either help or hinder. They're like old Towser; it wears 'em all out. If they'd follow straight after the Master themselves, the way wouldn't be nigh so long nor hard."

The Greatest of Fools.

Is he who imposes on himself, and in his greatest concern thinks certainly he knows that which he has least studied, and of which he is most profoundly ignorant.

Buster Brown's Resolve.

Resolved, That to-day is the whole thing. Yesterday gave me all it can ever give me. I'll get what's coming from the future, but if I want any good things now I've got to keep my eye on to-day. Some people spend all their time in thinking over the pleasures they had last week or what pleasures they are going to have next week. This minute is only down once in the calendar, and I'd better get sixty seconds' worth of real, true living out of it while I've got it, too, if I use every second.

Due to Drink.

Of the 33,000 men passed into Wandsworth (England) poorhouse since 1886 by Dr. A. E. Dodson, there were only fifteen abstainers. Of the fifteen at least seven were mentally or physically unfit to maintain themselves. This makes the proportion of needy (ablebodied) drinkers to needy (ablebodied) abstainers practically 33,000 to eight, and affords new evidence for the old contention, "But for drink the poorhouse might be closed." The proportion of inmates brought by drink to the poorhouses of America would not be nearly so large, yet it is enormous.

Money From Weeds.

The people of Norway neglect no opportunity to turn an honest penny. On the southeast coast a profitable industry has been built up in burning seaweed, which grows in great profusion, some of the plants being four and five feet high. When the crop is harvested bonfires burn like beacon lights along the coast. The ashes are shipped to England, where their valuable chemical properties are utilized in manufacturing. So profitable is the industry that many have grown rich at it, and now the cultivation is being improved by scientific methods.

Piles Cured Quickly at Home

Without Pain, Cutting or Surgery. Instant Relief.

We Prove It. Sample Package Free.

Seven people out of ten are said to have Piles. Not one man in a million need have them and we are proving it every day at our own expense. We send a sample package of the wonderful Pyramid Pile Cure to any person absolutely free.

We don't do this as a matter of amusement or philanthropy, but because it is to our interest to do so. We know that the sufferer from piles, tormented and driven almost crazy by this wretched trouble, will find such immediate relief that he will go at once to his druggist and buy a box and get well.

We know that we have got the greatest remedy in the world for piles, and we are ready and willing to stand or fall by the verdict of those who make the trial. We have been doing this for some years now and we never yet have had occasion to regret it.

And the remedy at the drug store is exactly the same as the sample we send out. As, for instance, here is a man who got such immediate relief from the sample that he at once bought a box. Was it just the same? Undoubtedly, since it cured him after all sorts and kinds of things had failed.

Here is a sample of the kind of letters we get every day and we don't have to ask for them:

"Received your sample of Pile Cure and have given it a fair trial and it has proven the best I ever tried and effected a complete cure. I can recommend you highly in this vicinity. Have used your sample and one box and it has been a complete cure. It has been worth $100 to me.

"Thanking you for the sample and the cure, I will recommend you to everybody. Yours respectfully, Julius Mayer, Dealer in Feathers, Ginseng and Hides, Bedford, Ind."

Pyramid Pile Cure is for sale at every druggist's at 50 cents a box or, if you would like to try a sample first, you will receive one by return mail by sending your name and address to The Pyramid Drug Company, 59 Pyramid Building, Marshall, Mich.

The Gardener's Soliloquy.

BY METTIE CRANE-NEWTON.

Oh, would I were a squirrel!
  I'd roam the wide earth o'er;
And gather heaps of treasure
  And lay them up in store

For future use and comfort,
  When winter breezes blow:
And young life's hopes and pleasures.
  Lie buried 'neath the snow.

I'd climb the tree of knowledge
  And nibble rarest fruit;
Appease my soul's deep longings
  And be no more a brute.

I'd seek the wise and learned
  And follow in their track
Many tomes of modern lore -
  And find new nuts to crack.

I see among religions.
  That truth and error clash;
Too oft the false's exalted
  The good falls 'neath the lash.

I'd mount the stump and give them
  The truth, whate'er it be;
God hates the moral coward;
  God loves the nobly free.

So in the wordy contests,
  'Twixt man and man and me,
I'd push my way to vict'ry,
  And not run up a tree!

The Wood Procession.

BY HILDA RICHMOND.

"Now, children, you'll have to clear out of this," said the head carpenter briskly. "It's too bad to rob you of your playground, but we're going to set fire to this pile of trash, and it would be too dangerous to have you near it."

The little folks reluctantly gathered up their shovels and pails. For a whole month they had a lovely playground in the big sand pile, and now they were to lose it. Every day during that time an older boy or girl sat on an old stool in the shade keeping an eye on the happy children, and all the mothers rejoiced to think they were safe and having a good time. A row of old buildings had been torn down, and a large new brick house was to be built as soon as the trash and old boards could be disposed of.

"Are you going to burn all these boards, Mr. Gray?" asked Margaret Kirby, who was looking after the little folks that morning. "It seems too bad."

"You see, Miss Margaret, no one would buy that stuff, and it costs too much to get it cut up into kindlings. I'd willingly give it away, but no one wants the stuff."

"Children," said Margaret suddenly, "how many of you have little wagons?"

"I! I! I!" cried a chorus of voices.

"Now, Mr. Gray, if I get some big boys to help, and the little children haul this wood to Mrs. McGuire's house, may we do that?"

"Yes, if you can get it done to-day," said Mr. Gray. "The children will soon be tired of the task, but I'll give you till evening to dispose of the old wood."

In less than two minutes Mr. Gray was alone in the big yard. The children were scampering for their wagons and Margaret was getting together all the big boys in the neighborhood. The first thing old Mrs. McGuire knew of the plan was when a procession of little wagons turned into her yard all loaded with pieces of old boards and shingles.

"The saints be praised!" cried the old lady, hurrying out with two pairs of glasses on. "Whatever is the meanin' of this?"

"We are bringing you a little wood," explained Margaret. "They were going to make a bonfire of it to get rid of it, but the children will bring it to you."

"I thought the children would soon give up," said Mr. Gray, coming out to see the little wagons still making trips to the yard and back again. "These boys and girls deserve a whole lot of praise."

The big boys broke up the long boards and loaded the wagons, while the girls helped the children all morning. It was a very busy time, but a very happy one, and by noon every trace of the pile of wood was gone. Mrs. McGuire was crying over the wood house full of dry wood and telling the children they had made her very happy.

"I have another house to tear down on Summit street next week and"—began Mr. Gray, and all the children shouted, "May we have another wood procession? We can give the wood to Mrs. Kelton."

And what do you think Mr. Gray did? He made a large box out of old boards and filled it with sand for the little people to play in whenever they want to, for he says they save him a great deal of trouble, and the wood keeps some poor person warm a long time. Don't you think it paid them to give up one morning's pleasure to carry wood to poor people?—United Presbyterian.

Father Knows.

A gentleman was one day opening a box of goods. His little son was standing near, and as the father took the packages from the box, he laid them on the arm of the boy. A young playmate was standing and looking on. As parcel after parcel was laid on the arm of the boy, his friend began to fear that the load was becoming too heavy, and said: "Don't you think you have as much as you can carry?"

"Never mind," said the boy, in a happy tone, "father knows how much I can carry."

"Now," said Freddy's mother as she got him ready for a visit to his aunt, "be sure you are not late to breakfast. That won't do when you are visiting."

On her son's return his anxious mother inquired if he was ready in time.

"Yes'm!" responded Freddy, triumphantly. "I was down every morning soon's any of 'em."

"I am so glad: hope you'll keep it up."

"You won't let me."

"Won't let you? Why not?"

—This company's fiscal year closed September 30. The volume of business transacted during the year was the largest by far of any year in our history. For this, we are grateful, and more particularly, because of thousands of letters received expressing the hearty good will of the brethren and their manifest interest in our building up a publishing house creditable to our great brotherhood and of ever-increasing usefulness to the Disciples of Christ. Christian Papers in Christian Homes.

The more than doubling of our Christian-Evangelist subscription list through a day's visit of your courteous and successful representative, caused me to make some inquiries as to The Christian-Evangelist's circulation. I was pleased to discover that it had increased 30½ per cent. since October 1, 1905. This means much to the brotherhood. It means a corresponding increase in zeal and enthusiasm in church work and in the support given to our missionary enterprises. It will mean a kindlier feeling among brethren and a broader, saner view of what we stand for as a people. The spirit and the view point of The Christian-Evangelist are indispensable to the brotherhood at the present time. Its introduction into our homes will be an educational force for the spiritual side of our plea. It will create an atmosphere in which the pastor will be untrammeled in leading on to second principles and in working toward the spirit as well as the form of our contentions as a people. The advantages of having a Christian paper such as The Christian-Evangelist in every Christian home are obvious. Every pastor should work toward that end. It will be an untold help in his work.

Danville, Ind. E. E. Moorman.

A bright little girl asked to be absent from school half a day on the plea that company was coming.

"It is my father's half sister and her three boys," said the girl anxiously, "and mother doesn't see how she can do without me, because those boys act dreadfully."

The teacher referred her to the printed list of reasons which justified absence, and asked her if her case came under any of them.

"O yes, Miss Smith," said the girl eagerly, "it comes under this head," and she pointed to the words, "Domestic Affliction."
